Though he may, at the eleventh hour, be taken by the condescension of God, he must forever feel the loss which has come from his wasted life. Even sentiment will acknowledge that God allows this to be true. In accordance with natural law. May not a soul living and dying in a state of permanent moral voluntary remoteness from God gravitate forever away from him and all righteousness, forever dwelling in Eternal sin? The sentiment which would ignore the inexorable law of the universe must be shy of all argument. But now turn to the sure word of God for I am speaking to those who accept what it says as authority. What does this book have to say regarding repentance after death? I have no new evidence to present, but I will merely present this in the form which led me, brought up as a Universalist until my eighteenth year, to adopt that view of the future life which has survived age after age of discussion and strife, and which stands to day unshaken by all the impact of this frothy discussion. The first light I obtained as to the scriptural argument burst out while thinking over John Robinson's famous remark that "much light would yet burst out of Scripture." True; but not a different sort from that which has already burst out. And so these novel illuminations—I began to suspect if they were of a different color from that which had burst forth from the word in ages before. If a man comes forward and says, "New light," and I find blue light burning where white fire had been seen before, I suspect the origin of this new light. The next remark that I made was that there are six "universals" in the Bible, which are often mistaken for a seventh that is not there. These attest the universal benevolence of God, his universal provident care, the universal prevalence of his gospel, the universal resurrection, the universal judgment, and the universal reign of Christ.

But "universal salvation"—that seventh universal for which these six are often mistaken—is not in the Bible. I think that all the "proof-texts" of the Universalists or the Restorationists can be shown to belong properly to some of these six universals, and that they do not imply universal salvation. God is universally benevolent. Without doubt he wishes all men to be saved. So the father in the parable was anxious that his prodigal son should return; but that is not saying that if the son had not come back he would not have starved. "All the ends of the earth shall return to the Lord; the hundreds of the nations shall worship before him." That refers to the universal prevalence of the gospel on the earth. Other texts Mr. Cook quoted, arguing that they referred to the universal resurrection and the universal judgment. When the word speaks of gathering all in one, and the reconciling of all things to himself, the universal reign of Christ is referred to. True, every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that he is Lord; but this may not be done willingly. Canon Farrar's declaration that there is room for repentance in the life to come not only implies the theory that, do what man may, he must do right at last; but it cannot be reconciled with what is said in this book.

There is "a sin against the Holy Ghost," never to be forgiven in this world or the next. If Judas could look forward to a time for repentance in the next life it would not have been better, as Jesus declared, that he had never been born; that it would have been better for him that a millstone were hanged around his neck and he thrown into the depths of the sea. The discussion in regard to "aionios" and "aion" was referred to, and a number of comparisons given as to its meaning, from which the speaker argued that "eternal" is the true meaning, where the word has not been fortified by the evident meaning of the context so that in the nature of the case some other word must be used in the translation. Canon Farrar is a brilliant writer, and has given us an excellent life of our Lord, but he has never been regarded as a great theologian or exegete, and he is less likely to be so considered now than three months ago. No soft persuasion of sentiments can affect eternal truth. It is the central life of unchristian life: "Do what you will—by and by you will do what you ought." It is refuted by the words of Christ, as loaded down in the testimony of the disciples, but for whom we should never have known what he said. When our Lord spoke to the penitent thief, as he hung dying upon the cross, he said: "To day thou shalt be with me in paradise." It was to-day, not to-morrow, nor any other time. "Now" is the word which meets you everywhere in this book. "Now is the accepted time," not ages hence and in another life. Whosoever holds out any other hope certainly teaches the theology of the irreligious. The desperately bad believe in a hell. It is said of one of the worst of the French kings that his honesty was shocked whenever the existence of a future punishment was denied. He had faith that he, lecher, hypocrite as he knew himself to be, who had banished good from his heart, deserved a punishment to come. This sentiment, held by the baldly irreligious, the boldly aggressive saints also hold. They, too, believe in a hell. But the irresolutely religious and the irresolutely irreligious meet half way on this sentiment, and it is from their ranks that these chatterers regarding God's law of justice come. Far be it from me, said Mr. Cook, with great emphasis, to plunge an unsaved into eternity, depending upon the chances of repentance there. Far be it from me to turn other men to hope for a chance of repentance hereafter. I protest against this sentiment; I repudiate it as unwarranted by the word of God, and as imperiling the immortal soul who is deceived thereby.—Boston Globe.

When a certain lady Rolle refused, soon after her husband's death, to let the bounds go out, a learned sergeant at law asked Chief Justice Tindal whether there would be any harm if they were allowed to do so with a piece of crape around their necks. "I can hardly think," said Sir Nicolas, "that a piece of crape is necessary. It will surely suffice if they are in full cry."

A Brooklyn lady, whose husband has an unpleasant habit of railing at her, has hit upon the plan of calling in her servants when he begins to let out his temper, and then bowing to him and saying sweetly: "Now, my dear, please go on with your remarks." He doesn't go on; at least not as he began.

Lord North, who was not fond of superfluous music, being asked to subscribe to the ancient concerts, refused. "But your lordship's brother, the Bishop of Winchester, subscribes." "If I were as deaf as he I would subscribe too," was the reply.

A great amount of nonsense about ministers' wives was summarily disposed of by the late Dr. Bethune who, when the qualifications of his wife for official duty were inquired into, asked the brethren "if they intended to pay her a salary."

Religious Intelligence.

—The district returns of the Wesleyan Church, in South Australia, show a decrease of 46 members.

—That the Methodist mission in Japan is doing well is proved by the fact that Bishop Peck has received applications from eleven natives for admission to the Annual Conference.

—A London paper states that an obscure society of American infidels has put itself in communication with some of the educated heathen of India with a view to aid the latter in resisting Christianity.

—Wesley College, Melbourne, closed a prosperous year December 20. The number of pupils in attendance shows an advance on that of the preceding year, being: Boarders, 47; day pupils, 175; total, 222.

—The Old Catholics of Austria have just been granted legal recognition by the minister of education and worship. They made application for recognition several years ago, but the government refused to accede to the request unless they would acknowledge themselves as seceders from the Roman Catholic Church.

—The African Methodist Episcopal Church is endeavoring to establish schools for the people and, to secure an educated ministry. They propose to buy the Randolph-Macon College in Ashland, near Richmond, Va., for the benefit of the numerous colored population of which it is a center. The buildings, with sixty-four acres of land, can be obtained of the Southern Methodists for $6,000.

—Dr. Selah Merrill, on behalf of the American explorers of Palestine, delivered an address in New York, a short time since, in which, after rehearsing the progress already made on the east side of Jordan, he gave an account of his explorations in the valley from the Lake of Tiberias to the Dead Sea. He believes he has discovered, at the head of this body of water the ruins of the cities of the plain, at the north and not at the south end, as has been generally supposed. Dr. Merrill is soliciting funds for the completion of the survey.

—The English Presbyterians report their mission in China to be in a very prosperous condition. There are 16 missionaries who labor in Amoy, Swatau and Formosa. A new station has been formed at Unsio, in southwest Amoy, completing a chain which connects Amoy with Swatau. Eleven students are in training for native pastors at Amoy. At Rechina a native has been ordained pastor and the church pays his salary. The Swatau hospital has had 1,565 patients, including 250 lepers. The government has granted, at a nominal rent, a site for a hospital three times as large as the present one. Mr Mackay, who is supported by the Canada Presbyterians, travelled over northern Formosa, treating 2,130 patients.

—One of the most interesting reports received at the Free Baptist General Conference was that from the Yearly Meeting of Bengal and Orisen, India. It is as follows: "This Yearly Meeting, organized two years ago last November, for the first time sends its representative to meet with you. With one exception our churches are all working churches and these years of faithful service have been given to strengthen our native church and raise the standard of personal piety in its membership. Our Sabbath school interest is excellent throughout the Yearly Meeting. Temperance has many strong advocates among our members; but the majority are still slaves to tobacco, and every step in the temperance reform must be gained by hard fighting. With men and means at command, church extension might become a prominent feature of our work; but so long as we have only force enough to hold the places already occupied we cannot expect any marked growth. Our great want is a strong band of thoroughly-trained native workers, without which the Yearly Meeting must always remain weak and dependent upon the home churches. The Yearly Meeting requests admission to membership in the General Conference; and, secondly, that measures be taken to aid us in establishing a school in India for the benefit of our native Christian ministry." The Orissa Yearly Meeting contains 5 churches, 7 ordained ministers, 1 licentiate and 429 communicants."

—The Reformed Episcopal Church, which now has 78 ministers, including 5 bishops, has had an important accession in the person of the Rev William Newton, of Philadelphia. Mr. Newton has resigned the rectorship of the Church of the Nativity and withdrawn from the Protestant Episcopal Church. His reasons for this step are given at length. His eyes, he says, have been opened to the saddest conclusion of his life: "That by slow degrees a change has come over the spirit of the Protestant Episcopal Church to such an extent that sensationalism, on the one hand or formalism, on the other, must characterize the ministrations of the pulpit, or, by some means, the offending incumbent must be got rid of. In the Church there are, as I understand the case, only two positions now in which it is possible for a clergyman to preach Christ, and not the church or empty sentimentalism, and retain his place. If he is a bishop, and thus secure in his position for life, he may preach what he chooses to preach and do what he chooses to do, and no one can touch him. Or again, if he is a presbyter, surrounded by a body of laymen of means and influence, who love the truth as truly as he loves it himself, and who are prepared to stand around him and hold up his hands in his ministry, there, too, he is safe—safe because his immediate surroundings are stronger than the outside pressure. But, apart from these two cases, I see no hope in resisting the popular current. And he who attempts it must inevitably be swept aside. It is simply a question of time—a very short time, I think—the event will prove—when the ablest and most honored clergy of your diocese shall feel the most practical results of the change of which I speak." Mr. Newton and sixty-four of his parishioners have organized the Reformed Episcopal Church of the Covenant.

WHAT THE QUAIL SAYS.

BY MRS. CLARA CITY BATES.

Whistles the quail from the covert,
Whistles with all his might,
High and shrill, day after day,
"Children, tell me, what does he say?"
Nora—(the little one, bold and bright,
Sure that he understands aright)—
"He says: 'Bob White! Bob White!'"

Calls the quail from the corn-field,
Thick with its golden set:
Misty rain-clouds trailing by
Hide the blue of the August sky.
"What does he call now loud and clear (Vain Gold Locks)—"That is a sign of rain?"
He calls: "More wet! More wet!"

Pipes the quail from the fence-top,
Perched there full in sight,
Quaint and trim, with quick, bright eye,
Almost too round and plump to fly,
Whistling, calling, piping clear.
"What do I think he says?" My dear,
He says: "Do right! do right!"

Youth's Companion.

Little Sandie.

Away off in Edinburg two gentlemen were standing at the door of a hotel one very cold day, when a little boy with a pale, thin, idle face, his feet bare and red with the cold, and with nothing to cover him but a bundle of rags, came and said:

"Please, sir, toly some matches?"

"No, I don't want any," the gentleman said.

"But they are only a penny a box," the little fellow pleaded.

"Yes; but you see we do not want a box," the gentleman said again.

"Then I will give you two boxes for a penny," the boy said at last.

"And so to get rid of him," the gentleman who tells the story says, "I bought a box. But then I found I had no change; so I said:

"I will buy a box to morrow."

"Oh! do buy them the night, if ye please," the boy pleaded again. "I will run and get ye the change; for I am verra hungry."

"So I gave him the shilling, and he started away; and I waited for him, but no boy came. Then I thought I had lost my shilling; but still there was that in the boy's face that I trusted, and I did not like to think bad of him. Well, late in the evening a servant came, and said a little boy wanted to see me. When he was brought in I saw it was a smaller brother of the boy that got my shilling, but, if possible, still more ragged and poor and thin. He stood a moment, diving into his rags as if seeking for something, and then said:

"Are you the gentleman that bought the matches frae Sandie?"

"Yes."

"Weel, then, here's fourpence out o'yer shillin'. Sandie canna come, he's no weel. A cart ran over him and knocked him doon, and he lost his bonnet and his matches, and your sevenpence; and both his legs are broken, and he's no weel at a'. But the doctor says he'll dee. And that's a' he can gie ye the noo," putting fourpence down on the table; and then the poor child broke down into great sobs.

"So I fed the little man," the gentleman goes on to say, "and then I went with him to see Sandie. I found that the two little things lived with a wretched, drunken stepmother; their own father and mother were both dead. I found poor Sandie lying on a bundle of shavings; he knew me as soon as I came in and said: 'I got the change, sir, and was coming back; and then the horse knocked me down, and both my legs are broken. And oh, Renby, little Renby! I am sure I am deein'; and who will take care o' ye, Renby, when I am gane? What will ye do, Renby?'

"Then I took the poor little sufferer's hand, and told him I would always take care of Renby. He understood me, and had just strength to look at me as if he would thank me; then the light went out of his blue eyes, and in a moment

He lay with his head upon the breast
Where the wicked cease from troubling
And the weary are at rest.

God told the gentleman to take poor little friendless Renby, and to be a friend to him. And Sandie heard him say he would do it—just the last thing he ever did hear; and then, before I can tell you the dark room, the bad stepmother, the bundle of shavings, the weary, broken little limbs, all faded away, and Sandie was among the angels. And I think the angels would take him and hold him until One came with the sweetest, kindest face you ever saw, and that was Jesus. And he said:

"Suffer the little child to come unto me," and then he took him in his arms and blessed him. And then Sandie's own father and mother would come and bear him away to their own home; for in our Father's house are many mansions; and Sandie lives there now. And I think that the angels, who have never known any pain who never were rags or sold matches, or were hungry or cold, came to look at Sandie in his new home; and wonder and say to one another:

"That is the little boy that kept his word and sent back the fourpence when he was hungry and cold, and both his legs were broken and he a dying."—English Methodist Recorder.

Honesly Rewarded.

George and Harry worked in the same shop; but as the working season was almost over, and there would be little work to do during the summer months, their employer informed them, as they settled up on Saturday evening, that he could only give one of them work hereafter. He was very sorry, he said; but it was the best he could do. He told them both to come back on Monday morning and that he would then decide on the one he wished to retain. So the young men returned to their boarding-house a good deal cast down; for work was scarce, and neither knew where he could obtain a situation if he was the one to leave.

That evening, as they counted over their week's wages, Harry said to his friend:

"Mr. Wilson has paid me a quarter of a dollar too much."

"So he has me," said George, as he looked at his.

"How could he have made the mistake?" said Harry.

"Oh! he was very busy when six o'clock came, and, handling so much money, he was careless when he came to pay our trifle," said George, as he stuffed his into his pocket-book.

"Well," said Harry, "I am going to stop as I go to the postoffice, and hand it to him."

"You are wonderful particular about a quarter," said George. "What does he care for that trifle? Why, he would not come to the door for it if he knew what you wanted; and I am sure you worked hard enough to earn it."

But Harry called, and handed his employer the money, who thanked him for returning it, and went into the house. Mr. Wilson had paid each of them a quarter more than their wages on purpose to test their honesty.

So, when Monday morning came, he seemed to have no difficulty in determining which one he would keep. He chose Harry, and intrusted the shop to his care for several months when he was away on business, and was so well pleased with his management that, when work commenced in the fall, he gave him the position of superintendent. Five years afterward Harry was Mr. Wilson's partner; and George worked in the same shop again, but as a common laborer.

There is nothing like a good character when you want employment. Some young men can always get work, no matter how dull the times are; while others can find nothing to do when hands are scarce, simply because they cannot be trusted.—Kind Words.

Etiquette for Boys and Girls.

Nothing can be a greater mark of ill manners than to remain sitting while your elder is standing before you talking to you. Rise and offer your seat or another at once, and never lounge on the sofa or take the easiest chair, while there are those in the room whose age gives them a better claim to them. And always be polite, respectful and modest in your demeanor to every one, especially to your superiors, remembering also that there is nothing more disgusting than to see young people assume an air of self-importance and disrespect toward any one.

Never stare people in the face. If you are talking with any one, it is proper to look at them—eye to eye—with a cheerful, dignified assurance; but to stare at any one, as though you saw something peculiar about him, is exceedingly rude and impolite.

Do not cultivate clownish or monkeyish manners. We have seen rude boys, and even girls, who seemed to take pride in antic gestures, foolish jesting, buffoonery, or what is styled "drollery," and who took great delight in using odd expressions, thinking that it made them appear interesting to the lookers on. Such behavior may excite the laughter of the foolish, as the wise often tell us; but every sensible person regards such conduct with disgust and abhorrence. And every youth who thus acts the buffoon lowers himself in the opinion of those with whom he desires to stand high. Be gentle and quiet in your movements.

"For the mouth of fool feedeth on foolishness,"

If you are a young man just commencing a business career, good manners will be indispensable to your success. Appear to feel an interest in your work; let your eyes light up at every command, and let your feet be nimble to perform it. There are boys who look so dull and heavy, and walk so slowly, and appear so lazy, that no business man will employ them.

Be energetic, prompt, industrious and careful. Attend to your business in a quiet, polite manner, equally removed from familiarity and haughtiness. If you exhibit good manners yourself you will rarely have cause to complain of rudeness. And if our young friends would only remember what Lear said while hanging over Cordelia's dead body it would help them to put far from them loud and boisterous manners:

"Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle and low, an excellent thing in woman."

How to Get Rid of a Bad Temper.—A lady, the head of a household, was troubled with an excitable temper. She had a good Christian servant come into her service. To this Christian girl she one day exposed herself for her bad temper, and hoped the like would not occur again. She said: "O mistress, I do so pity you. I once had such a temper as you have, and I can feel for you." "You had just such a temper as I have! Why, I should have thought that nothing ever moved you, and you had such a temper as I have! Why, what did you do with it?" "I swapped it away for Jesus; I gave it away to him, and took him as my Savior. I took him, and lo took my bad temper." "O, I wish he would take mine." "He will, mistress; if you will give it up to him. It is no sting for you to conquer, but he can easily do it, if it all be given up to him." The mistress and maid knelt together, and Jesus was besought to do that definite and specific thing; and he did it, and that was like another family from that day.

"Doctor," said a confirmed invalid, who had paid a great deal of money for physic to apparently little purpose, "you don't seem to reach the seat of my disease. Why don't you strike at the root of my disorder?" "So I will," was the prompt reply. "If you insist on it," and, lifting his cane, he smashed the brandy bottle on the sideboard.

A religious paper says: "San Francisco is down on its knees." Chinese are perhaps referred to.

The World in the Church.

A pastor informs us that in the bounds of his circuit the people are almost universally given to social dancing parties, and that it would be impossible to obtain a sound committee for the purpose of trying the offenders. We have reason to believe that this is not a solitary case. Such extreme instances may be exceptional, but everywhere there are these manifestations of the worldly spirit. In some places the worldly element has become so strong in the church that the enforcement of discipline is exceedingly difficult, if not impracticable. This is an alarming state of things, and calls for serious consideration. How does it happen that the church is largely composed, in places, of those who have no scruples on the subject of worldly amusements?

We fear that the General Rules are not read and explained from the pulpit as the Discipline requires. Once or twice a year the pastor should take a morning hour, in the presence of the largest congregations, for the purpose of enlarging upon the General Rules and of explaining the duties and obligations of membership in the church. The pastoral address of the Bishops was ordered by the General Conference to be read to our congregations. Has this been done? In that address we have this: "An explicit utterance was given, by order of the last General Conference, in our pastoral address, on the subject of worldly amusements. We now repeat that utterance. We abate none of its teachings with respect either to the manifest inconsistency of such indulgences with the spirit and profession of the gospel, or the peril which they bring to the souls of men. Their multiplied and insidious forms are a source of perpetual temptation and damage, and are denounced by the word of God, and by that part of our General Rules which forbids 'the taking of such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus.' This denunciation is explicit and comprehensive. 'The name of the Lord Jesus,' in this connection, is a decisive test, and we are content to leave the issue to its sovereign arbitrament. Among those indulgences which cannot stand this solemn test is the modern dance, both in its private and public exhibition, as utterly opposed to the genius of Christianity as taught by us. When persisted in it is a justifiable ground of judicial action by the church authorities."

It will be seen from this extract that dancing is declared by the authoritative expounders of our church law to be a justifiable ground of judicial action, and, by consequence, of expulsion from the church. And yet there are thousands of members in the church—not all of them young people—who pretend to believe that there is nothing in our rules which prohibits dancing and theater-going. Their ignorance may be owing to the fact that they do not read, and that their pastors have not taught them better.

There may be much backsliding after people get into the church, but one reason for so much worldliness in the church is owing to the way in which members are received. The door is not sufficiently guarded, and people are admitted before they have been instructed in reference to their duties and obligations. The Discipline says: "When persons offer themselves for church membership let the preacher in charge inquire into their spiritual condition, and receive them into the church when they have given satisfactory assurance of their desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from their sins; and also of the genuineness of their faith, and of their willingness to keep the rules of the church. When satisfied on these points, let the minister bring the candidates before the congregation, whenever practicable, and receive them according to the prescribed form."

Are these points carefully inquired into by our preachers before the members are received? or do they not often receive them without having had any private conference with the applicants, and when it is almost certain that they have never read the Discipline, and that they know nothing about the General Rules? If there is any one point in a pastor's administration that should be more searchingly reviewed than another, it is whether he has fully complied with the law in the reception of members. The count of additions to the church should go for little until we know how they have been received. It is far from clear that application for membership should be made publicly. Their reception is to be before the church and by prescribed form; but as the applicant, if examined, may fail to give satisfaction, it would perhaps be better for the application to be made privately to the pastor. If after a thorough understanding of the rules and discipline of the church, including the prohibition of dancing, drinking, theater-going, and the like, they are willing to assume the vows, their spiritual condition being satisfactory, they could then be received in accordance with the spirit and letter of the law.

Such carefulness in the reception of members would probably reduce the reported accessions, but we believe it would conduce to the soundness and spirituality of the church. Under the old method of six months' probation the worldly element was largely dropped without much trouble; but, where no prescribed probation obtains, we must insist that application for membership and reception into the church be kept apart as separate and widely different transactions. If people are invited to make application publicly, let it be well understood that it is an application, and is in no sense a reception into the church. A prime cause of worldliness in the church is in the careless way in which members are received. They are sometimes received while ignorant of our rules, unconverted, and not even thoroughly awakened. The world comes in at the door of admission, and, until this is guarded against, we shall continue to be troubled with dancing and theater-going people in the church. We do not believe that guarding the door will effect a complete cure, but it will save the church from being taken and governed by the world. We shall be able, at least, to maintain sufficient spirituality to administer discipline.

The business of the church is, of course, to save as many souls as possible, but to this end she must keep herself pure and separate from the world, and maintain sound doctrine and strict moral discipline. The disposition in churches to bid for members as secular enterprises bid for patronage secures only an apparent and transient success. In the long run the "roomiest churches" will be empty, or cease to be churches at all. Compromises with the worldly spirit may gain some members, and keep them, but they are not saved thereby, and the spiritual power of the church is weakened, if not destroyed. Strictness in receiving members, and in discipline after they are received, will keep out some who will seek other and less scrupulous communions, but our gain in other directions will more than compensate. If the year's work foots up fewer members on the roll, the net result may be better. The count of the saved will be more, and the work will be more likely to stand the test of the fire in the revelations of that day.

The Prodigal's Resolve.

It required something like moral courage to retrace his steps. He had gone forth in the pride of self-reliance, and with the self-assurance of one who knew how to make the most of his inheritance. He left his father's house, determined to see the world and to enjoy it. It was humiliating to go back with the confession of failure on his lips, and, having lost the splendor of his outfit, to appear as a beggar where he had once moved as a prince. It was a trial to his self-respect, even in his low condition, to feel that he acted under the mean compulsion of necessity, and that he thought of his father's house only when he had spent all, and when the friends of his riot and dissipation had abandoned him. And then the reception that might await him was uncertain. His course was enough to alienate his father's heart, if anything could do it. And while he thought of him as his father, did the father still regard him as a son? The house was there, with its ample room and abundant stores, but would its doors be open to one who had turned his back upon them, and had dishonored the family name?

But to arise and return was the right and only thing to do. The alternative was to perish. In the school of experience he had learned the lesson of wisdom, and the sorrows that gather around the paths of vice had wrought this one conviction: that he must go to his father. There are some sinners who do not come to themselves even under the severest pressure of misfortune and suffering, and there are many others who are led home by gentler means. This is, however, a type of sin and of experience not uncommon in the world, in which the illusions and vanity of a life of pleasure are made clear only after a long career of worldliness and vice.

It was a desperate case. The father had evidently given his son up as lost and dead. There was love in his breast, but no hope. And if the father had given him up, probably everybody else had. The return of some sinners is doubtless as great a surprise in heaven as it is on the earth. While the main lesson of the story may point to the love of the Infinite Father and his compassion for the erring, the miracle of grace is in the suddenly-formed purpose of the prodigal to arise and go to his father. We can take the father's love for granted, but will the blinded and infatuated boy ever awake to his real condition, and come back to virtue and filial duty? If not before, in the last extremity he may. We have this comfort in thinking of those who are wanderers from the religion of their homes, and who have shaken off the authority of God and the convictions of early training for a time. In the providence of God the very excesses of sin may lead to a condition favorable to repentance, and when the soul is seemingly farthest from reflection the turning-point may be at hand. In the prodigal's case there was the memory of home. But for this there would have been no ground for his resolve. Happy if every wanderer has this starting-point for repentance and reformation. A pious home, with its associations, if it fade for a time, is almost sure to come back with vividness and power.

This was a successful resolve. It is perhaps one successful resolve among a thousand that are not. It was a determination to act at once. To go back in such a condition, and with nothing to say for himself, seemed the height of temerity. To have hesitated here would have been his ruin. To have fixed some future time in which to act would have been his destruction. While there was nothing to be gained by delay, there was everything to be lost. It was a mortifying confession that he had to make, but to shrink from it only made matters worse. He could go to his father just as he was. He could not hope to be in a better plight. Resolutions that contemplate future action, and that are hinged upon certain contingencies, are always to be suspected. If not prepared or ready to act, we are not prepared for the resolve. We are merely deceiving ourselves, and our good resolutions are nothing but masks to cover the secret purpose to continue in sin. The mighty conflict, the fierce struggle of soul, the will-power, the fierce warfare implied in this resolve and immediate action cannot well be realized except by those who have experienced them. But if achieved, it is a victory whose conquests spread out over the whole after-life.

And in the course determined on we have the only path of safety and the only refuge. The only escape from God is to fly to him. The One whom we have offended is the only One who can save us. There is friendship and love nowhere else. To stay away is to perish in the wreck of our own folly. The world cannot help us after we have drained the cup of its pleasures to the dregs. The service of sin brings no other reward than increasing misery. Death promises no relief from the fearful pang of remorse. "Having no hope, and without God in the world," is the sinner's condition. It is better never to wander thus far from God, and it is better not to reach that extremity where we must be driven to choose the shelter of infinite mercy by the whips and scourges of calamity. But in the desperate state of the soul most estranged from God the return is possible. God will help the sinner who resolves to arise. Christ died to save him, the Holy Spirit will strengthen him. The beginning of all, however, is in the resolve, resolute, determined. A self-surrender that is absolute, and action prompt and energetic, must open the path that ends in the Father's house and the home of the soul.

At Home, March 1, 1878.

Dear Doctor: The whole region of Mexico is a field lying fallow, awaiting the plow-share of God's word. Hidden forces, which the Spirit alone could prepare, will reveal themselves at the approach of the messengers of peace. Never before was there offered to men of God such "a door of utterance;" no, not at Colosse or Ephesus or Philippi. The labors of the three hundred and fifty years which precede are not without fruit. Amid all the errors of the old Romish Church we must not forget that there were the doctrines of an inspired canon; of the Trinity, that essential substratum of all spiritual power—the Father, the Son, the Holy Ghost; of the last judgment; and of the resurrection of the body—"some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Among the common people of Mexico there remains a respect for these truths, notwithstanding the changes that have come over the fortunes of the church that inculcated them. They, with good sense, distinguish between truth all radiant with the evidence of its divine origin and those poor mortals whose lives have dimmed the authority of their commission. The upper classes are full of skepticism, indifference, rationalism and naturalism. But, fortunately, Christianity has always worked upward from below; and moral strength, as well as physical, gives way last of all among the working people.

What a huge labor would it have been to implant a whole nation with the cardinal doctrines of Christ's church! Now here are ready to hand myriads of souls who long for an experimental life—a religion that brings to each breast, as well as to each home, a personal Savior. They await the spread of a gospel that offers to men the personal consciousness of a new nature; of being "translated from the power of darkness into the kingdom of God's dear Son;" the advantages of that new covenant which binds itself to write upon the heart of every man the law of love and the abiding evidence of sins forgiven. It is impossible to walk through the city of Mexico without a yearning after the souls of these people. They are so intelligent in look and so unhappy in condition; so thinly clad, so burdened with poverty; so generous to each other; so patient under heavy loads. Oh, I thought, if I could only preach in Spanish as lamely as I preach in English, these people must needs be constrained to accept that great comfort which our precious gospel offers to every bruised heart.

It is a source of profound joy to me that several branches of Protestant Christianity—that is, Bible Christianity—are hard at work here distributing truth, as best they can, with tears and praying. I am glad to see them magnifying their work, and interesting more and more the drowsy multitudes at home in the welfare of their fellow-creatures. Dr. Butler makes a very good array of workers and the "Conference" just held by Bishop Merrill in Mexico will tell well upon the whole work. The number which Dr. Riley has in the field, and those which Mr. Hutchinson, the representative of the Presbyterian Board of New York, has, or those of the Congregationalist Churches, I am not exactly able to report. We have, of workers in the Mexican City mission, 6; exclusive of Sabbath school teachers; in the Mexican Border mission, 9—say in all 15 preachers, 501 members, 18 Sabbath schools, 22 teachers, 357 children, 2,950 persons preached to, 3 houses of worship, valued at $16,000, 8 circuits, and 1 station, which includes a number of preaching-places. All these services and sermons are in the Spanish tongue, and the congregations are Mexican. Here is a germ of life which promises an ample return to the church at home for all her zeal and generosity. Six years ago all this was in the spirit and person of a single Mexican—Alejo Hernandez. We need steadiness of purpose; not new foreign fields, but more work, men and money for those we have—China, Mexico, Brazil. These centers are well chosen. Let us stand by them, and work at home for them. The missionary enterprise of our church is now, if never before, associated with the memory of the noblest and purest. Our workers abroad are men after our heart. We want no better—scholars, men of piety, men of intense labor, men of results. I am glad to see that the women of our church have at length found room for the wealth of their prayers, faith, and all generous sympathy. Now we want steadiness, patience, and minute personal attention to one point—the creating and sustaining a net-work of societies, which shall offer to the poorest members of the church the opportunity for giving small amounts monthly toward sustaining our general missionary treasury. All plans have proved, so far, comparative failures; and yet we would not disturb them, but hold fast whereunto we have attained, while we seek for the more excellent way.

I am glad to be at home again, though I still bear the marks of this last trip. The facilities for reaching the city of Mexico make it something less than a trip to Fayetteville, Ark.; and sea steamers offer every luxury that any ease-loving person might ask for.

Yours truly, J. C. Keener.

Our China Visitor, January, 1878, has been received. This interesting periodical is published quarterly by the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church South in China. The editors say:

We propose to publish the China Visitor once each quarter, giving all the information we can concerning our work in China, for the benefit of all who are interested in the cause of missions among the heathen. We shall be glad to receive any contribution from any source to assist us in its publication, as it is entirely a private enterprise. Price, $1 a year. Send United States stamps to J. W. Lambuth, Shanghai, China. All money above cost of publication will be used in printing tracts in Chinese for circulation.

Speaking of our missions in China, the Visitor says:

In the map before us, marked No 2, is represented the area over which the mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, U. S. A., is extended. The places marked M are occupied as stations, and regular preaching-places from the different stations. This area will cover about one hundred miles in extent, bringing in as many as ten or twelve walled cities and innumerable villages, with teeming millions who know not the living God. Shanghai, our first district, has, in connection with the city and suburbs, a population of not less than four hundred thousand. In ten miles around us we could point to innumerable villages of from one to ten thousand souls. In this district we have six churches and chapels where we have regular preaching of the gospel.

Nantsiang is our second district. It is a village of from ten to fifteen thousand inhabitants. In this village we have two chapels, and one in Wangdoo, a village of from five to eight thousand inhabitants. In the neighborhood of Nantsiang we have many small hamlets of from five hundred to a thousand inhabitants. Nantsiang is over sixteen miles from Shanghai. Tsingpu is our third district. Tsingpu is a walled city, having a population of from forty to fifty thousand persons. It is twenty five miles from Shanghai. In this city we have one chapel. Around the city of Tsingpu there are a great number of villages numbering from five to ten and fifteen thousand inhabitants. We have selected two of these villages, which are visited by our preachers, and where the gospel is preached.

Suchow is our fifth district. That city has a population of from four to six hundred thousand inhabitants. The city wall is twelve miles in circumference. Twenty years since this city had a population of about two millions. We have in this city two chapels. The city of Kwansan is in this district, and has a population of from forty to fifty thousand inhabitants. We have here a chapel where the gospel is preached. The city of Chang-shoh is also in the district of Suchow. This city has a population of from forty to fifty thousand inhabitants. Around these cities there are innumerable villages having each a population of from five to twenty thousand inhabitants. The city of Suchow is about eighty-five miles from Shanghai.

The Texas Christian Advocate, writing of President Miller and Soule University, says:

The world is poorer when a good man dies. This truth is trite, but not less true. We felt its force, while in Chappell Hill, by the universal expression of sorrow over the death of Dr. Miller, late president of Soule University. He had gained a large place in the confidence of the people and the affections of the students. Full of hope, and with a future full of promise, he laid down and died. Surrounding communities felt his loss, for he was an able preacher, and each Sabbath found him in the pulpit. The church needs such men, and we wonder why they are taken while so much useless material is left behind. The explanation of many of this life's mysteries awaits us beyond the sun.

The trustees of Soule University have chosen Prof. Slaughter as the successor of Dr. Miller. We found him in the midst of his work. He is burdened by the great responsibilities placed upon him, but hopeful, respecting the future of the institution. With the co-operation of the Conference, and a large field to supply the school with patronage, he is assured that the coming session will command a large support. Our people are only partially awake respecting the educational function of the church. Each preacher has an important duty to discharge in educating our people in this direction.

Rev. W. M. Wood, presiding elder of the Gallatin district, Missouri Conference, died on Sunday, February 17.

The Nantsiang Schools.

We have in connection with our two schools in Nantsiang about thirty children, who are engaged every day in the study of the Bible, and often unite with each other in earnest prayer for God's blessing. When they go from the school to their homes at night they tell their parents what they have learned about the love of Jesus, and they try to tell them how to pray, and thus come to Jesus and be saved. A little girl whose name is Yernay (Moon in the South,) and who is but eight years old, spends her evenings in trying to teach her mother how to read and to sing "Jesus Loves Me," and then she shows her mother how to pray, and has her mother follow her as she repeats the little prayer she has learned in school. Her little brother is but six years old, is now in the boys' school, and is a very bright, intelligent child. Before the mother had heard of Jesus through her little girl she kept her son at home, but when she heard of Jesus as a Savior she said: "I will send my little boy to this school, lest when the next year comes there will be no room for him." She wanted him to learn the truths taught by the blessed Savior. Her husband is also greatly pleased with the Christian religion, and we trust some day they will all come into the church.

There is a little boy whose name is Serling. He is now eleven years old, and has been studying the Bible about three years. No matter where he is, whether at home or in school, he is the same earnest boy in prayer, and loves to worship God. He wants to join the church, and be a follower of Jesus; but his mother is ignorant of the gospel, and refuses to allow him to join the church. His father is a poor man, a worker in bamboo, and is quite willing his son should be a Christian. This little boy urges his mother to be a Christian and a disciple of Jesus. We all pray for her that the grace of God may be given her, and that she may repent and be a Christian. Another little boy, twelve years old has been sick three months. While sick his father and mother were greatly distressed about him lest he should die. He told them not to fear, for if he should die Jesus would take his spirit, and he would take care of them. He prayed to God while he was sick, and God heard his prayer, and restored him to health. He tells his parents God saved him, and restored him to health. He is now in school, and loves to read the Bible.—Our China Visitor.

The conviction of a member of the notorious Returning Board of Louisiana, on a charge of forgery, has wonderfully stirred up the bile of the Radical politicians. We read the proceedings of the trial with little prejudice, we think, and could not avoid the conclusion that the returns from Vernon parish had been altered after they were received by the board, and that these alterations were made with the knowledge and consent of the board. The crime was committed, and the members of the board were responsible for it. The greater crime, if we judge by its results, was throwing out seven or eight thousand votes, on grounds not warranted by the law by which the board was constituted, but surely the crime of forgery is a high misdemeanor, and, if committed, why should conviction create such a commotion? There may be differences of opinion concerning the expediency of these Returning Board prosecutions, and there may have been an understanding that no judicial investigations should take place. Objections on these grounds to the trial of Mr. Anderson and his associates may have weight, but their guilt cannot be covered up by the cry of political persecution. So far as we can see, the recent trial was conducted fairly, and in strict accordance with the forms of law. While not needful to vindicate these prosecutions, we can very well conceive that the court regarded them as due to public justice and to the American people. The Returning Board defeated the will of the nation as expressed at the ballot-box, and it may be due to history that the character of the men who perpetrated this great wrong should be exposed to the civilized world.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., the celebrated Brooklyn preacher, will lecture on "The Bright Side of Things," in Rev. Dr. Markham's church, in this city, on Monday night, March 11, at eight o'clock. The proceeds will be given to the Ladies' Bethel Association. Dr. Talmage will preach at Dr. Markham's church at eleven A. M. on Sunday, March 10, and at Dr. Palmer's church at night.

Rev. Dr. Watkins, of the Mississippi Conference, gave us a call this week. He was in excellent health, and reports his charge (Jackson, Miss.) as doing well.

Rev. J. M. McKee, in charge of the Winnsboro circuit, Louisiana Conference, was in the city last week. He is a laborious and faithful pastor, and one of the Advocate's most successful agents.

Rev. Cyrus D. Foss, D. D., of the New York Conference, and Hon. Will. Cumrick, of Indiana, are the fraternal delegates to represent the Methodist Episcopal Church at the approaching session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Atlanta, Ga., on the first of May next.

SCRIPTURAL AUTHORITY.

"In the early ages of the world perfumes were constantly used, and they have the full sanction of scripture with it." The people of perfumes at all times have been the most refined people in the world, and in this age no refined lady or gentleman considers their toilet complete without the use of some delightful scent like Price's Unique Perfumes, which are really gems of all odors.

MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS.

HIGHEST HONORS AT ALL WORLD'S EXHIBITIONS OF RECENT YEARS.

THE great competition among Reed Organ makers now is as to who shall make an Organ which will cost the least money. Therefore the strife is to make, by cheapest material and workmanship, the CHEAPEST POSSIBLE Organ; and it is wonderful what progress has been made in this direction! The country is flooded with circulars and advertisements representing these cheaply-made Organs as worth great prices, but offering them, on various specious pretences, at a fraction of these.

Into such competition the MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN COMPANY do not enter. From the beginning their first endeavor has been to make the VERY BEST INSTRUMENTS POSSIBLE. They have been rigidly careful in the selection and preparation of the choicest MATERIAL, and the employment of the best WORKMEN only, in every department. And they have called to their assistance the best skill the world could afford: have not been themselves so fortunate as to effect the most important improvements in such instruments ever made.

AND THIS HIGHEST STANDARD THEY HOLDLY MAINTAIN.

They invented and introduced the instrument, substantially in its present form, being an improvement upon the melodeon, in 1861.

It was Mr. Hamlin, of this Company, who introduced the modern system of VOICING REEDS, the most important improvement ever made in such instruments, now universally practiced, but carried to its highest perfection only in these organs.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS have been constantly placed in competitions at PRINCIPAL INTERNATIONAL COMPETITIONS in America to the number of hundreds; and in almost every instance have such been the SOLE RECIPIENTS OF HIGHEST HONORS for demonstrated superiority.

At all World's Exhibitions of recent years, viz: Paris, 1867; Vienna, 1873; Santiago, 1875, and Philadelphia, 1876, they have taken FIRST MEDALS OR OTHER HIGHEST HONORS.

At the Centennial Exhibition Mason & Hamlin Organs were the only American Organs furnished fairly to EQUAL all others in all important respects. "Every member of the jury," writes Mr. Geo. F. Bristow, one of their number, "cheerfully concurred in assigning to those of your make and voicing the FIRST RANK in each important quality of such instruments."

These are the ONLY AMERICAN ORGANS which have ever been found worthy of any award at ANY EUROPEAN WORLD'S EXHIBITIONS, and they have obtained these UNEQUALED RESULTS wherever exhibited.

Such established the superiority of the Mason & Hamlin Organs in the minds of leading makers as to cause them to compete with them at Industrial Exhibitions, enter as their organs for exhibition only.

It is the Mason & Hamlin Organs which, by their great excellence, have given a great reputation to AMERICAN ORGANS, and opened a wide market for them in Europe.

MUSICIANS IN EUROPE AND AMERICA recognize the unequaled excellence of the Mason & Hamlin Organs and do not hesitate to declare it. While they admit in other reputable makers of organs some good qualities in the single instrument, a examination and comparison of the circulars of makers contained in such instruments which Ruled to be found in their organs. In power and smoothness of working stops; variety and attractiveness of solo stops; exceeding refinement of tone; delicacy of soft stops, volume of louder stops; equality in character throughout each stop; sweetness, ease and exactness of action; durability and perfection of workmanship, and elegance and finish of cases, the excellence of their Organs is comparatively CONCEDED BY ALL. Musicians generally regard the Mason & Hamlin Organs as UNEQUALED BY ANY OTHERS.

The testimonials recognizing the superiority of the Mason & Hamlin Organs, which are published in their circulars, were characterized by the New York Tribune as "the universal opinion of the musical profession," and by the New York World as "the judgment of nearly every organist and pianist of note."

MODERN IMPROVEMENTS.

This Company are not aware of any real improvement yet effected in such instruments which Ruled to be found in their organs. In power and smoothness of working stops; variety and attractiveness of solo stops; exceeding refinement of tone; delicacy of soft stops, volume of louder stops; equality in character throughout each stop; sweetness, ease and exactness of action; durability and perfection of workmanship, and elegance and finish of cases, the excellence of their Organs is comparatively CONCEDED BY ALL. Musicians generally regard the Mason & Hamlin Organs as UNEQUALED BY ANY OTHERS.

WARRANT.

Every Organ made by this Company is fully warranted and the warrant will be FULFILLED to the letter, if there is any occasion. Instead of [illegible] That the Organs of this make are [illegible] Mason & Hamlin Organs are the best instruments of the class made, either in this country or Europe—that they excel especially in other, but very essential points—and that our

BEST AND CHEAPEST.

PRICES AND TERMS.

But while it is commonly conceded that the Mason & Hamlin Organs are THE BEST INSTRUMENTS OF THEIR CLASS IN THE WORLD, it is often supposed that the prices are much higher than those of inferior Organs. This is an error. The net prices of these Organs are but little higher than those of instruments of greatly inferior workmanship and value. Having the largest and most completely furnished factory in the world in this line, with experience, machinery, and facilities accumulated and perfected in the manufacture of nearly ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND ORGANS, they are able to produce organs at very much less cost than would be possible without such facilities. They are thus able to sell at prices which are NOT GREATLY MORE THAN THOSE OF THE MOST INFERIOR WORK. Different in price, south; different in case, etc.

These organs are to be had not only for cash, but also for easy payments; or are rented until rent pays for an organ. An organ of small size, but good quality, may be obtained on payment of $7.20 per quarter (three months) for ten quarters. Larger sizes at proportionate rates.

CASH PRICES.—Smallest size, 6 stops, Five-octave Reed Organs, $40; with nine stops, $45; in walnut case, $60; new style, 4 stops, $45; 6 stops, $55; 9 stops, $70; 10 stops, $80; 12 stops, $90; 13 stops, $100; 15 stops, $115; 18 stops, $135; 20 stops, $150; 24 stops, $200; 25 stops, $225; 28 stops, $250; 32 stops, $300; 36 stops, $350; 40 stops, $400; 44 stops, $450; 50 stops, $500; 55 stops, $550; 60 stops, $600; 65 stops, $650; 70 stops, $700; 75 stops, $750; 80 stops, $800; 85 stops, $850; 90 stops, $900; 95 stops, $950; 100 stops, $1000; 105 stops, $1050; 110 stops, Farm, Garden and Household.

THE BIRDS.

The battle about the birds has been commenced again by some letters which have appeared in the Times. A "Country Parson" puts forth a "Plea for Destruction," in which he maintains that fruit and birds cannot be both preserved, and that the latter ought therefore to be ruthlessly destroyed. On the other side comes forward Mr. Joseph Davison, with a "Plea for Mercy," asserting that it is quite possible to enjoy and to cultivate the friendship of the birds without being deprived of other luxuries; and, more than this, that without the assistance of the birds it is impossible to be free from "those insect pests which would soon render futile all our efforts at cultivation." Mr. Davison says: "We have here a little army of sparrows—quite a flock, all our own, bred beneath the eaves, and dwelling with us winter and summer—as well as numbers of other birds, including chaffinches, tits, blackbirds and thrushes; but we do not suffer like a 'Country Parson.' After every meal the crumbs and small scraps are thrown out to them, and after they have dined they retire to the trees in the shrubbery and gardens, where they may be seen industriously searching for caterpillars, aphides and other destructive insects by way of dessert. Our peas are not molested by the sparrows. Last year, when my neighbors were complaining of the losses they had sustained by the sparrows in their peas and small seeds, none of mine were touched; every pea seemed to have grown, and the young shoots were untouched by the birds. * * * Now as to the thrushes and blackbirds: Nearly the whole of their food consists of worms, slugs and beetles, of which they consume many thousands; and although I must admit that they do take a few strawberries, yet I feel sure that two or three quarts in the season will represent the damage they commit here, which is quite inconsiderable remembering the scores of quarts which remain to us. Very many more are destroyed by the slugs and beetles, and I fear few would be left to us from this cause alone but for the aid which we derive from the birds. * * * A little contrivance will keep their pilfering within due bounds. Let the birds be cared for, let them have the crumbs and the refuse of the granary, and I feel sure they will let the young vegetables alone, or do, at most, little damage, while they will amply repay the care they may receive."—London Christian World.

SCOTCH ORANGE MARMALADE.—Take large, ripe oranges and weigh them, and to each pound of oranges allow one pound of crushed sugar. Pare off the yellow rind of half the oranges, and put it over the fire in cold water; cover tightly, and let it simmer slowly until tender. Grate off the yellow rind of the remaining oranges; quarter the fruit; squeeze out all the juice and pulp, and remove the seeds and skins. To each pound of sugar add half a pint of cold water, and the white of one egg to every two pounds of sugar. Let the sugar stand until nearly dissolved; then boil slowly over the fire, and skim off what rises. Pound the boiled parings in a mortar, or chop them very fine, and turn into the syrup after it has become quite thick; then boil ten minutes, stirring very often. Put in the juice, pulp and grated rind, and boil for half an hour, or until it is transparent. Lemons can be mixed with the oranges, one to every fifteen, and a little more sugar added, with good effect. This receipt makes the famous Scotch marmalade; used so much for a breakfast relish. It is sold in all the large groceries in cities, but can be made at home at much more reasonable rates. Try a little of it with good bread and butter, for a dessert-dish, and you will not sigh for pie.

In 1561 Philip the First sent the young Constable de Castile to Rome to congratulate Sextus the First on his advancement. "Of his introduction his holiness remarked: "Are there so few men in Spain that your king sends me one without a beard?" "Sir," said the young noble, "had his majesty possessed the least idea that your unimagined merit lay in a beard, he would have deputed a goat to you, not a gentleman."

THE REMEDY

To escape the worthless abominations offered under the title of baking powders rests wholly with the consumer: they are the ones that have to suffer. Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is decided by chemists to be the most perfect and wholesome powder made.

BREECH-LOADERS.

WE take this opportunity of informing sportsmen and friends that the best selected and largest stock of these goods ever previously displayed (a few weeks) has arrived and is ready for inspection. In Breech Loading Shot Guns alone our assortment in store comprises upward of 60 different styles and patterns, ranging through every desirable grade. These fresh importations can be profitably afforded lower than ever before, owing to present low cost of gold and sterling exchange, while a large old stock has been marked down to meet the shrinkage in value from declined gold. Don't take our word for it but call and see for yourselves, whether you wish to buy now or not.

SCIENTIFIC.

—Some points in the relation of the mind to the body are touched upon in a suggestive way by Prof. Nageli, of Munich, in his recent lecture on the Limits of Natural Knowledge, delivered at the Munich meeting of the German Scientific Association, and which supplements the recent utterances of Virchow and Haeckel. "The human mind," he says, "is nothing else but the highest development upon our earth of the mental phenomena which move and animate nature everywhere. But it is not the product of secretion of the cerebral substance. As such it would be without further influence upon the brain, just as the secreted gall is of no further significance for the liver. On the contrary, sensation and consciousness have their firm seat in the brain, with which they are indissolubly united, and in which, by their intervention, new conceptions are formed and converted into actions. Just as the stone would not fall down if it did not feel the presence of the earth, so the trampled worm would not wriggle if it had no sensation, and the brain would not act reasonably if it had no consciousness." After so much of the loose talk of specialists like Huxley and Tyndall and Haeckel, it is refreshing to read the cool-headed and broad-minded opinions of this German savan.

—In a richly illustrated volume on the embryology and anatomy of the star-fish, Mr. Alexander Agassiz takes exception to the prevailing Darwinian views in the following language: "While," he says, "the successive appearance of the great types of Echini in geological time—in other words, their paleontological development—is in the strictest harmony with what we know of their embryological development, we as certainly know nothing whatever of the causes which have brought about their sequence in time, in such striking agreement with the sequence in their phases of growth. The case of successive modifications of the ancestral horse, which has so often been brought forward as conclusive regarding the genealogy of the group, although more familiar, is far less complete and much more limited in time than the succession to be traced from the paleontological evidence of Echini. But while natural selection gives a plausible explanation of like problems among vertebrates, it fails utterly when applied to the majority of the invertebrates, and we have completely failed, thus far, to find any causes for their paleontological development differing from those acting upon their successive embryological stages at the present day, of which we know absolutely nothing."

Strikes are inevitable. The laborer is worthy of his hire.

A NEW CURE FOR CONSUMPTION.

Dr. H. James' CANNABIS INDICA, or East India Hemp, raised in Calcutta, and prepared on its native soil from the green leaf, has become as famous in this country as in India for the cure of Consumption, Bronchitis and Asthma.

We now inform the public that we have made the importation of this article into the United States our specialty, and that in future the afflicted can obtain these remedies at all first-class druggists. As we have, at great expense and trouble, made permanent arrangements in India for obtaining "Pure Hemp," gathering it at the right season and having it extracted upon its own soil from the green leaf by an old and experienced chemist (said chemist being a relative), we know that we have the genuine article.

In All its Purity and Perfection, and feel that we are entitled to credence when we say that Cannabis Indica will do all that is claimed for it, and that one bottle will satisfy the most skeptical of its positive and permanently curing Consumption, Bronchitis and Asthma.

Instead of devoting a column to the merits of this strange and wonderful plant, we remain silent and let it speak for itself through other lips than ours, believing that those who have suffered most can better tell the story, as the following extracts from letters verbatim will show:

PATOSO, PEMISCOT, MO., Nov. 18, 1877.

MESSRS. CHARDOCK & CO.: I must have more of your invaluable medicine, and wish that you would place it here for sale, as the cost of delivery is too high to order single. I recovered from using the Cannabis Indica I had used all the medicines usually prescribed in my wife's case (CONSUMPTION). I had also consulted the most eminent physicians in the country, and to no purpose; but just as soon as he commenced using the Hemp Remedies he began to improve in health, until I regarded him as about well.

HENRY W. KIMBERLY, M. D.

LAWRENCEBURG, ANDERSON CO., KY., February 10, 1873.

MESSRS. CHADDOCK & CO.: Gentlemen: Please send me twelve bottles of Cannabis Indica, one each of Pills and Ointment, for a friend of mine who is not expected to live, and as your medicines cured me of CONSUMPTION, some three years ago, I want him to try them. I gained fifteen pounds while taking the first three bottles, and I know it is just the thing for him.

Respectfully, J. V. HULL.

LOVEJACEVILLE, Ballard County, Ky.

GENTS: Please send me three bottles Cannabis Indica, box of Pills and pot of Ointment. Mother has been suffering with BRONCHITIS for twenty years, and tried most all kinds of medicine, and says the Cannabis Indica is the only thing that gives her relief. Respectfully yours,

JANE A. ASHBROOK.

DEEP RIVER, Poweshick, Iowa.

GENTLEMEN: I have just seen your advertisement in my paper; I know all about the Cannabis Indica. Fifteen years ago it cured my daughter of the ASTHMA; she had it very bad for several years, but was perfectly cured, and I used to keep the medicine on hand to accommodate my friends. I have taken a cold lately, and, as I am fearful of it settling on my lungs, you will please send me a $9 box of your medicine. Respectfully, JACOB TROUP.

THERE IS NOT A SINGLE SYMPTOM of Consumption that this remedy will not vanquish, and it will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Ask your druggist for DR. JAMES' CANNABIS INDICA, and, if they fail you, send to us direct. One bottle will satisfy the most skeptical: $9.50 per bottle, or three bottles for $26.50. Pills and Ointment, $1.25 each. Address

We have the best Imitation Gold Watch in the market. The metal is a composition of the precious, so closely resembling gold, that the best judges find it difficult to detect the difference, except by a chemical test, and it has the virtues required to make it the best substitute for gold known. Beside American, Movements, Extension Band, Hunting Cases, Hunting Cases, and equal in appearance to a GOLD WATCH THAT COSTS from $150 to $200. If you wish a watch for your own use, or to make money, try this. Owing to our large sales we are enabled to reduce the price of them to $15 each, with an elegant Chain attached. They are used on railroads, steamers and in manufactories, and other places where accurate time is required, and give general satisfaction. We send them by mail or express, on receipt of $12. To any part of the country, or it will be sent C. O. D. when the customer desires and remits $3 on account. These elegant CHAINS weigh about Fifty Pennyweights, and the same pattern in pure gold would cost $100. We sell these Chains at $4 each. But we sell the Watch and Chain for $12, sent by mail in a registered package, postpaid, to any postoffice in the United States.
WE SELL THE WATCH WITHOUT THE CHAIN FOR $10.

MILK OF MAGNESIA
IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and regularly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach.
The pleasant taste and milk like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and is the best as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The gentleness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a microscopical part of a single drop magnified 250 diameters. The first shows the Calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between these microscopic forms is the reason why the undissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined magnesia are exhibited while a perfect solution of Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, as they float upon the observable precipitates in fact is entirely dissolved.
Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it and take no other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already appointed with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

COMMERCIAL.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
NEW ORLEANS, Tuesday, March 5, 1878.

There is no business of importance being done now except by retailers, but these have their hands full attending to the wants of the numerous visitors now in the city. Very little change has taken place in prices since our last report.

Owing to the fact that yesterday and to-day were legal holidays no business was transacted at the banks or Stock Exchanges.

The silver bill was passed over the President's veto by both houses of Congress on last Thursday. Though several amendments were added to the original bill in the Senate, restricting its powers somewhat, yet, on the whole, it will be of great advantage to the country. The predictions of some of the papers that government bonds would decline on the passage of the bill have not yet been verified, and it is not at all probable that they will be injuriously affected.

The failure of two large houses here last week has had the effect of making the banks and money-lenders carefully scrutinize paper before it is accepted—so it is said.

The following quotations of stocks are taken from the weekly report of the New Orleans Stock Exchange:

BANKS.	Bid.	Asked
Canal	$98 50	— —
Citizens'	78 00	77 00
Louisiana National	102 00	106 00
State National	59 50	62 00
INSURANCE COMPANIES.
Crescent Mutual	$72 50	74 00
Tritons' and Traders'	102 50	104 50
Merchants' Mutual	— —	98 00
Sun Mutual	102 50	103 00
CITY RAILROADS.
Carrollton	$108 00	— —
New Orleans City	143 00	143 50
St. Charles Street	76 00	77 00

We are indebted to the Democrat for the following cotton report:

The tone of the market throughout the day has been strong, under the influence of favorable advices from abroad. Notwithstanding buyers and sellers were apart in their views, a moderate business was transacted, the sales amounting to 6,000 bales, at an advance of 1/16c.

The official closing report of the Cotton Exchange was as follows:

	To-Day.	Yesterday
Low Ordinary	7	6¾
Ordinary	7⅞	7⅞
Good Ordinary	8⅛	8⅛
Low Middling	8¼	8¼
Middling	10⅝	10⅝
Good Middling	11⅛	11⅛
Middling Fair	11⅝	11⅝

Sales to-day, 6,000 bales. Market firm.

Two things are necessary for true glory—power and bounty. The former without the latter causes terror; the second without the first inspires contempt. Unite bounty and power, and you will win admiration; add power to bounty, and you will win love. All the miracles that Jesus wrought were favors, and all manifested his glory.

A Scripture reader waited on a good woman in a colliery village. Not satisfied with the woman's spiritual condition, the visitor remarked that he was afraid she did not keep the commandments. "Keep the commandments," she exclaimed, "wi' a' these bairns? I've enough to do to keep oorsel's!"

Remember often that the true measure of all we do is its conformity with God's will. If I eat and drink because it is God's will, I am more acceptable to Him than if I suffered death without any such intention.—Francis DeSales.

SEWING MACHINES.

THE SINGER AGAIN TO THE FRONT!!

Great Reduction in the Prices

OF THE

WORLD-RENOWNED SINGER FAMILY SEWING MACHINE!

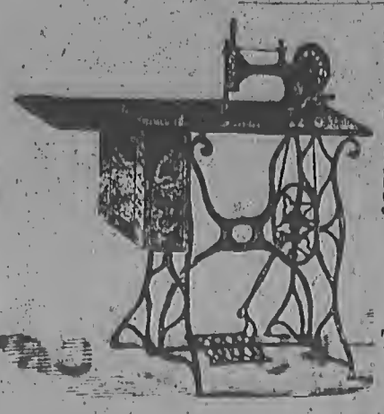
FOR CASH!!



The Singer Manufacturing Company, ever awake to the interest of the public, have determined to pull the price of their Machines within the reach of every man, woman and child in the land.

The Genuine Singer Sewing Machine is now Offered at Prices Below the Rogue Ones, or Any Other.

The fact that the only Sewing Machine which counterfeiters have ever attempted to imitate is the Singer is sufficient evidence of its superiority over all others. There is no longer any excuse for buying any of the cheap Machines hawked about the country, with no claim for patronage but their cheapness.

BEWARE OF

Worthless Imitation Machines.

It has a self-setting needle.
It never cuts the thread or goods.
It is a new machine, with straight needle.
It will not break the thread if the needle is allowed to run off the goods when sewing.

It has no noisy cog wheels.
It has no complicated shuttle or thread.
It allows the work to run back from the operator.

EDWARDS' DEPOT, Oct. 18, 1877.

DEAR SIR: The No. 7 Diebold Safe purchased some time since went through the large conflagration, and remains forty-eight hours in the burning ruins. The iron on the sides and front was very much bulged out. Considering the extreme heat to which it had been subjected, we feared greatly for its contents; but judge of our joy and surprise when, on opening it, we found all our books and papers in good condition.

GOOD-NIGHT.

Good-night!—a word so often said,
The heedless mind forgets its meaning;
'Tis only when some heart is dead,
On which our own was leaning,
We hear in maddening music roll
That last "Good-night" along the soul.

Good-night! In tones that never die
It peals along the quickening ear,
And tender gales of memory
Forever waft it near,
When stilled the voice—oh! crush of pain—
That ne'er shall breathe "Good-night" again.

Good-night! It mocks us from the grave,
It creeps that strange world's bound,
From whence there flows no backward wave;
It calls from out the ground,
On every side, around, above:
Good-night!—Good-night to life and love.

Good-night! Oh, wherefore fades away
The light that lived in that dear word?
Why follows that Good-night no day?
Why are our souls so stirred?
Oh, rather say, dull brain, once more:
Good-night! Thy time of toil is o'er.

Good-night! Now cometh gentle sleep,
And tears that fall like welcome rain,
Good-night! Oh, holy, blest and deep
The rest that follows pain;
How should we reach God's upper light
If life's long day had no "Good-night?"

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

STANFORD, KY., March 5.—A tornado four hundred yards wide swept through Creecy county on Saturday. The family of Vincent Wesley, near Rich Hill, consisting of himself, wife and two grown daughters, a boy named Sloan, a nephew, and William Taylor, a neighbor stopping at his house, were killed outright, and Mrs. Wesley's body blown four hundred yards, the clothing being entirely stripped off by the wind. The two daughters were carried fifty yards, and found locked in each other's arms. The father and nephew were fearfully mangled, and all must have been killed by the first force of the tempest. The dwelling, stables and out-houses were blown entirely away. The hearth and foundation stone were blown from their places. In the vicinity Mrs. Olive, and Mrs. Morgan, wife of John W. Morgan, were killed. The dwelling and outhouse of F. Floyd were completely swept away, and the timbers scattered in every direction. In the village of Mount Olive several houses were swept away. Loss, $50,000.

HOT SPRINGS, March 5.—A fire broke out in a shanty occupied by a negro named Greenlie, and communicated to the French restaurant, thence north and south on both sides of the street. All buildings burned north of Rockafallow's drug store, and south below Malvern Crossing, about two hundred and fifty buildings were destroyed, and an immense amount of goods. The loss is estimated at $300,000. The mountain is covered with people driven from shelter.

MEMPHIS, March 6.—A telegram from Hot Springs, Ark., just received by the agent of the Associated Press represents many persons there in actual need of clothing and food in consequence of the fire yesterday. Dr. Lawrence, J. J. Sumpter and S. W. Gardner have been appointed a committee to take charge of any supplies sent, and neighboring cities are earnestly requested to send supplies as soon as possible.

NEW YORK, March 7.—The Tribune says the demand for government bonds has been unusually great for the last few days. The sales of a single bank for the week aggregated $600,000, mostly for investment. Only one-fourth of this has been for four per cents, of the denominations of $50 and $100.

The daily sales of bonds by one bank now average $1,000,000. It is said that two city capitalists, who have been loaning money on stocks at four per cent., have withdrawn their capital, and yesterday invested $1,000 in governments.

ATLANTA, GA., March 11.—There was no cyclone in any part of Georgia yesterday. High winds prevailed from eight A. M. to twelve M., but the damage in Atlanta does not exceed $500. A small and frail Episcopal mission chapel was toppled over. Fourteen persons were in it; one much injured. The tin roof on four buildings was blown off. The damage in the State will not exceed $1,500. The statements in yesterday's press reports were greatly exaggerated.

FOREIGN.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 5.—The Sultan has sent the following telegram to the Emperor:

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 3.—On the occasion of the anniversary of your majesty's accession to the throne I offer my congratulations with the desire of renewing our friendly relations."

The Emperor, in reply, telegraphed: "I thank your majesty for your congratulations, which are received simultaneously with the news of the signature of peace. I perceive in this coincidence a presage of good and lasting relations between us."

LONDON, March 5.—The political outlook is regarded as much brighter in all European capitals in consequence of the signature of the treaty of peace and the resumption of negotiations for the congress.

The talk in the lobbies of Parliament yesterday evening was all cheerful, members even discussing the prospects of a longer Eastern recess than usual, and earlier prorogation in the autumn.

LONDON, March 6.—A dispatch from Constantinople, under date of March 5, to Reuter's Telegram Company, says: The treaty bears the title of "Preliminaries of Peace," and contains twenty-nine articles. The opening articles relate to Montenegro, Servia and Bulgaria.

The indemnity is fixed at fourteen hundred and ten million roubles, but eleven hundred million are covered by territorial cessions. Nothing is fixed concerning the terms and payment of the three hundred and ten million. No guarantee is stipulated. Nor is there mention of Egyptian or Bulgarian tributes or the Turkish fleet. The treaty simply states that Russia and Turkey shall agree subsequently about payment.

Pirot remains Bulgarian; Servia includes Semiza, Noritzar and Vranjar; Montenegro includes Antivori, Spuz, Podgoritza and Nicksics. All Bulgarian fortresses to be razed and the Turkish troops withdrawn.

A military road will be established for Ottoman posts, and telegraph and passage of troops, which, however, must not make any considerable halt while passing through the country.

Mussulmans may return to Bulgaria. Any property of Mussulmans who have not returned, which they leave undisposed of, will be sold after two years for the benefit of the widows and orphans' fund.

Arrears of taxes in Bosnia and Herzegovina are to be remitted. The revenue, until 1880, is to be applied to indemnity for the sufferers by insurrection and provide for local needs. Austrian and Russian commissioners will arbitrate in all disputed claims.

The navigation of the straits is declared free for merchant vessels during peace or war. Six divisions of Russian infantry and two of cavalry will occupy Bulgaria until the formation of the Bulgarian militia, the strength of which shall be fixed later by Russia and Turkey. The Russian army of occupation will preserve its communications both through Roumania and the Black Sea.

The expenses of Russian occupation are to be borne by Bulgaria. Roumania is authorized to make her demand for indemnity direct to the Porte, and make a direct treaty. No indemnity is stipulated for Servia or Montenegro. Russian, Turkish and Bulgarian commissioners will determine the Bulgarian tribute. The reform programme of the Constantinople conference will be applied to Bosnia and Herzegovina. An organization similar to that granted to Crete in 1868 is stipulated for Thessaly and Epirus. No mention is made of Greece or Crete.

Batoum Ardahan, Kars and Bayazid are ceded to Russia. Erzeroum and Trebizonde are not mentioned except that the Russians may embark at Trebizonde on their return. Asiatic Turkey is to be evacuated in six months. The evacuation of European Turkey is to commence immediately, and be completed within three months. The European Danubic commission retains its former rights.

The Porte undertakes the expense of re-establishing navigation on the Danube and indemnifying private losses, the amounts of which are to be deducted by the Danube commission from the sums it owes the Porte. Russia receives Dobrudscha to exchange it for Bessarabia. The question of the Turco Persian frontier shall be speedily settled. The treaty is to be ratified within fifteen days, but its provisions become obligatory immediately.

Nothing is said about ratification by the congress, nor about capitulations, nor of a Russo-Turkish alliance. The details about the payment of indemnity, which were to have been arranged at San Stefano, have been postponed until the negotiators arrive at Constantinople.

The Rome correspondent of the Times says Cardinal Fraschi has been confirmed pontifical secretary of State, Cardinal Simeoni prefect of the propaganda, Cardinal Morichini, camerlengo, and Cardinal Bertolini president of the Congregation of Rites.

The Pope, on receiving fifty-four parish priests, recommended them to preach Jesus Christ, his life and teachings, and to guard their flocks against the infidelity and immorality so generally prevailing—the result of a corrupt press. The Pope in all his exhortations avoids mention of the Virgin, with the purpose of discountenancing mariolatry, which his predecessor so long encouraged. It has shocked most people that the Pope in his coronation speech made no allusion to the late Pius the Ninth, although Cardinal Diepiatro, in addressing the pontiff, has been eloquent in his praise of the deceased Pope. The omission could not, therefore, be accidental, and has been variously commented upon.

The Standard's Paris correspondent hears from a reliable source that France and Italy intend to propose neutralization of the Bosphorus and Dardanelles.

LONDON, March 7.—The Grand Lodge of Free Masons of England, Lord Carnarvon presiding, has unanimously passed a resolution refusing to recognize as a Free Mason any person initiated in a body where belief in God is denied or ignored. This refers to the action of the Grand Orient of France, which recently eliminated the article expressing belief in God from its ritual.

LONDON, March 11.—Two thousand persons attended the peace demonstration at Hyde Park. They were hustled about and finally ejected by a disorderly mob. Sticks were freely used, and several persons were taken to the hospitals. The crowd cheered Beaconsfield. The crowd cheered and hissed before Gladstone's house. Gladstone and wife on their way to church were compelled to take refuge in a friend's house, whence they were escorted by the police. The Duke of Teck, mistaken for Count Schouvaloff, Russian embassador, was insulted and hustled by the mob.

The Standard states that seven hundred Circassians perished on the steamer Sphinx, burned near Cape Ella.

The Times publishes the following dated St. Petersburg, Sunday: The general impression produced by the Czar's remarks at his reception to day of the diplomatic corps is decidedly pacific. A special to the Times from San Stefano says it is stated that Reouf Pasha will ask a remission of 300,000,000 of indemnity.

The Sultan has ratified the treaty. It is reported that the last clause is to the effect that Russia and Turkey will regard the treaty as solidaire, implying that they will not recognize the right of any power to interfere with its terms, except as regards the question of the straits, and settlement of the boundaries of Montenegro.

A Vienna dispatch to the Daily News announces that the congress will open March 31.

VIENNA March 11.—The Political Correspondence asserts that, if Russia persists in not submitting the whole treaty to the congress, war is certain.

Seashore Camp Ground.

MR. EDITOR: Please permit me to say to the friends of the camp ground that the season has arrived which is most favorable to commence any improvements they may wish to make in the way of building tents, etc.; in fact there are now here, in hand, from the trustees and private parties, orders for several tents and for enlarging others. Two of these, for private parties, are to be large, two stories, and there are still a number of eligible lots for assignment.

Our prospects for cheap building are good, if ordered early. We have under way a large amount of general improvements on the grounds—much more than in any previous season—which will be completed in time, with a view of developing this beautiful location, with its many natural advantages, for Christian association, and a home for any who may wish to remain upon the seashore through the heat of summer. Many inquiries are being made by letter and otherwise. All such are promptly replied to by the trustees, or by the Revival in Whistler, Ala.

MR. EDITOR: We have passed through a gracious revival of religion, and God has blessed us abundantly in permitting us to witness the outpouring of his Holy Spirit in this place, and in the conversion of sinners, who were made to rejoice and acknowledge Christ as their Savior. Since the meeting there has been an addition of twenty members to our church.

We have in connection with our Sunday school here a branch school, about one and a half miles from Whistler, which is in a flourishing state at present. We are in need of a house to meet in, but will soon commence building our chapel, as we have received a liberal donation from Mrs. Vanderhilt, which is duly appreciated by our school.

It has pleased our heavenly Father, in his all-wise providence, to remove from our membership in the school Bro. J. W. Houk, teacher, and Alice V. Booth and Lavinia Myers, scholars. They left bright and shining evidences of a ready acceptance with Christ. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

CORRECTION.—Dear Brother: The word not is left out of a sentence in my article about Bishop Marvin, which changes the sense entirely. It is where I speak of his conversion. It reads: "It was long after this before he found the pearl," etc. It should be: "It was not long after," etc. Yours, etc.,

WHAT A BONANZA MAN DID. The Tabernacle Presbyterian church, of San Francisco, was under a mortgage of $100,000, which was to be foreclosed. Mr. Flood, one of the proprietors of the Bonanza mine, held the mortgage, bought the house, and then presented it to the congregation.

The leaves are moving slowly yellow; their summer's line is tinged; the ripening fruit is on the hollow; the small boy on the fence. He looks around, he views the ground, and thinks the moment suits; he fills his pockets full and round, then jumps the fence and scoots.

Abroad in the World.

The companies owning the Missouri, Kansas and Texas railroad have an eye to the strictest and most rigid economy. They crowd their passengers almost to suffocation rather than incur the expense of adding another car to the train. It is 824 miles from Sedalia, Mo., to Galveston, Texas.

Passing through the State of Kansas during the night, the Indian Territory is entered about daylight. Who has not heard of the Indian Territory—of its beauty, of its fertility, and of its inhabitants, roving, uncivilized and barbarous? The crossing produces no perceptible change in our feelings. There is no dread of the war-whoop, of the tomahawk, of the rifle. All is as quiet as in Missouri or Kansas. These Indians a few years ago were the deadly enemies of the white man; they were thieving, robbing and murdering all those who fell into their hands; they were almost daily on the war-path, breathing out threatening and slaughter. Now what is their condition? They are civilized, many of them enlightened, and a few have attained to respectable scholarship. This wonderful transformation has been wrought by the word of God, the gospel and the minister. To the Methodist Episcopal Church South belongs the honor of having inaugurated the plans which have wrought such a happy and profitable change among them. A Conference has been organized among them, with many native preachers in it. Schools of an excellent character have been established, which are enlightening their minds, and bringing the children under a wholesome moral discipline. The church is already reaping a harvest which more than pays for the outlay of men, money and time. My observations upon their personal appearance, dress, habits and mode of living were very limited. They have houses to live in, and, though not elegant, appear to have an air of comfort. Their dressing is plainer, the style not quite so modern as we meet every day, yet it is very becoming to them. While the cars are passing near their habitations they often go to the doors to look at them. At the depots we never saw any of them loafing, as at our own. Late in the evening their dusky forms were seen for the last time. We crossed Red river, and for the third time were in the Lone Star State. Though in the southern part of the Indian nation there is considerable interest in agricultural pursuits, yet when Texas is entered, and especially at that particular point, the change is very striking.

North Texas seems to be a great center of attraction. Large and thrifty towns have grown up as if by magic since the Texas Central railroad was completed. Denison, at the line, and on the south side of Red river, has a population of 5,000. Sherman, 16 miles south, has 8,000 inhabitants. Dallas, 57 miles still south of Sherman, has a population of 15,630, as I learned from the city directory. Besides there are numerous other towns located near, north and south, east and west, and in the counties lying contiguous to the Texas Central, the Pacific and Trans-Continental railroads. The most important town in north Texas, and indeed one of the most important in the State, is the city of Dallas. It is located on the Trinity river, at the junction of the Texas Central and the Pacific railroads, and in the midst of a large area of country as fertile as any to be found in the State. Besides this, a thrifty and enterprising population have concentrated their energies here, so that growth must necessarily follow. A few items, as gleaned from the directory, will do to quote for the information of those who wish to settle there. The various churches are well represented. The Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal Church South, Methodist Episcopal Church, Protestant Episcopal and Congregational are all living and thriving in some sort. There must be an immense amount of sickness, diseases of all kinds, preying upon the people. If we may be allowed to judge by the number of drug stores—12 in all—and the number of physicians who professionally offer their services to the people. The whole number of this profession is 30. The people have strong faith in the efficacy of food to sustain life, as will appear from the 4 grist mills, 11 meat markets and the 15 hotels, besides the 10 restaurants they have in their midst. Strong drink, such as will make men demons, impoverish their homes, and bring shame and disgrace upon themselves and families, is found in 4 wholesale liquor houses and 34 saloons. Thirty-four lawyers tells the tale of litigation. Enough. Verbum sat.

Letter from England.

The Pope, as you will have heard, has departed this life, and has gone to the shadowy company of his predecessors. He lived in stirring times, and acted his part in an age which was principally opposed to the policy and pretensions of the system over which he presided, and which has gone down in power since the days when the haughty and imperious occupants of St. Peter's chair bade kings crouch in cowering submission before them, and they did right obsequiously. Pius was an exile for awhile from Rome, but French bayonets restored him, and he died in the Vatican. Hildebrand, the most implacable and tyrannical of the Popes, died in banishment from the headquarters of the papacy. The fortunes even of the Popes were subject to contingency and vicissitude, although they claimed a vicegerency which ought to be above the changeableness of mutation and the uncertainties of chance. Owing to the aspect of the situation in the East at present, much public interest and attention are flowing Romeward, and the world is awaiting with eager expectation the election of a successor to the late Pope.

Parliament will have much to do this session. It will have to deal largely with ecclesiastical matters. The burials question is up for settlement, and much feeling and determination have been imparted into its advocacy, as well as its defense. The clergy of the Established Church claim complete and exclusive control over the parish grave-yards, and will not permit the ministers of other churches to officiate in them at the burial of the dead. Nonconformists consider this a hardship and a grievance which ought to be redressed, and insist that their ministers should have the right to inter members of their communion in parish churchyards without let or hinderance. In Ireland they can do so by giving the parish clergyman notice beforehand. If in Ireland, why not in England? The clergy have a strong case, and they make the most of it, and will. So that if the matter is settled it will be by a compromise which will admit the Dissenter as a matter of grace, and not of right, and on conditions which many Nonconformist clergymen will not practically indorse. You have no State church, and it is well.

It is a growing opinion among all the denominations that ministers in their old age are entitled to an adequate support. The soldier who serves his king and country, defends their freedom and fights their battles, is pensioned when, through age, he is compelled to retire from active service. The clergyman is equally, if not more entitled to support when no longer able to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to perishing sinners. The English Baptists are establishing a fund to give aged ministers a support when they retire from active pastoral work. £60,000 is the sum which it is in contemplation to raise, £34,000 has already been promised.

The Wesleyan Chapel Building Committee has during the past year sanctioned new buildings and enlargements to the extent of £112,802, the largest proposed outlay, with but one exception, ever sanctioned in one year. Accommodation is to be provided for 12,000 persons in districts where there have been no Wesleyan chapels; while provision is to be made in other districts for 23,543 persons, instead of 14,695, as hitherto. Methodism is still progressive. It was originally the outgrowth of strong spiritual life, and wherever it exists there is life and growth; for William Arthur truly said once: "Methodism rears no monument where it saves no souls."

The utterances of a canon of the Established Church in Westminster Abbey have been taken up and repeated by hundreds of clergymen here and in the United States. They have given him a wider popularity than he acquired by his celebrated Life of Christ. It is significant and suggestive that several popular preachers have become wonderfully exercised about hell. They are exceeding mad that such a place should exist, and would persuade the multitude that it does not exist. If man here loves and practices what raises a barrier between God and his soul, and prevents reconciliation and union, and if he forms for himself a character which is incapable of affinity and intercourse with the infinitely pure and holy One, and if he carry that character with him into the eternal world, with its imperishable indestructibility, it must perpetuate the separation interminably. Remorse is a fire, and when united with despair, the two are an agency of punishment more poignant and severe than could be devised, conceived, or even imagined. And if man is the architect of his own destiny, why attempt to impugn the justice and love of God by charging to his moral administration a responsibility which belongs only and exclusively to himself? These antibellites should close their battery, and expend their artillery upon something beneficial and more worthy, and more in harmony with the high vocation which they have assumed, than by trying to create distrust and discredit of the teachings of the Bible.

The Wesleyans and Primitive Wesleyans of Ireland will unite at the forthcoming Conferences of these bodies, to be held in Dublin, and the name the united church will assume will be the Methodist Church of Ireland. This is a wise step.

Petition.

In reference to the subject of the following petition, we suggest to the Quarterly Conferences that may pass similar memorials that they send them direct to Dr. C. G. Andrews, of the Mississippi Conference delegation. We publish the action of the Covington Quarterly Conference for the information of others interested, but it is not necessary that their action should be published in the ADVOCATE. We have no doubt Dr. Andrews will take charge of the memorials, and see that they are duly presented to the General Conference and properly referred.

PETITION OF THE QUARTERLY CONFERENCE OF THE COVINGTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Resolved, That as a Quarterly Conference we respectfully petition the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to meet at Atlanta Ga., in May next, to attach the portion of the State of Louisiana, now belonging to the Mississippi Conference, usually known as the Eastern parishes, to the Louisiana Annual Conference.

Resolved, That we request all the Quarterly Conferences in said portion of Louisiana to unite with us in this petition, and that it be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

COVINGTON, Ga., Feb. 23, 1878.

Tribute to Rev. Wm. Wadsworth.

Whereas, Almighty God, in his providence, has seen proper to take our beloved brother, Rev. William Wadsworth, from our midst by death, we, the members of the Quarterly Conference of Scotland circuit, Mississippi Annual Conference, feel keenly our loss, and his vacant seat forcibly impresses us with the fact that we, too, must soon pass away; therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of our much-esteemed and beloved brother the church has lost a good, faithful and devoted member, the community a noble, generous and kind man, and his family a true, loving, affectionate husband and father. Having many assurances of his perfect preparation to meet God, and his readiness to go and be with Christ, his Savior, we bow submissively to the will of him who doeth all things well, and realize that our loss is his infinite happiness.

Resolved, That we tender our warmest sympathies and hearty condolence to our sister (his beloved companion), and her family in their sad bereavement, and by our prayers will commend them to Him who has promised to be a husband to the widow and a father to the orphan.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the family of the deceased, and to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

PRAYER BEFORE SLEEP.

BY JEREMY TAYLOR.

The night is come. Like to the day
Depart not thou, great God, away.
Let not my sins, black as the night,
Eclipse the lustre of thy light.
Keep still in my horizon, for to me
The sun makes not the day, but thee.

Thou whose nature cannot sleep,
On my temples sentry keep;
Guard me 'gainst those watchful foes
Whose eyes are open while mine close.
Let no dreams my head infest
But such as Jacob's temples blest.

While I do rest my soul enhance;
Make my sleep a holy trance;
That I may my rest being wrought
Awake into some holy thought,
And with as active vigor run
My course as does the nimble sun.

Sleep is a death. O make me try
By sleeping what it is to die,
And as gently lay my head
On my grave, as now my bed.
Howe'er I rest, great God, with thee
Grant that I may rise again.

And thus assured, behold I lie
Securely, or to wake or die:
These are my drowsy days; in vain
I do now wake to wake again;
Nothing that hour when I shall never
Sleep again, but wake forever.

Annual Report of the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

BY REV. R. K. HARGROVE, D. D.

To a friend and neighbor we are indebted for this report. It shows contributions from all sources for years to the $852,449 55, and for the last passed $70,260.44.

There are now twenty-one schools, plying instruction to three thousand one-hundred and seventy students, of all grades and in all departments; and these schools are encumbered only a debt of only $15,000. Nearly four hundred of these colored people are pursuing biblical studies. This is a good enterprise and a gratifying result, and must meet the approval and receive the blessing of our heavenly Father.

The report of the executive committee, though still retaining traces of bitterness toward the Southern people, is improved in tone; and two of the addresses breathe a kind spirit, in the main; while there is a marked advance in the fact that one of them officially recognizes the valuable services of the Methodist Episcopal Church South to the colored race, and admits indebtedness of the Methodist Episcopal Church to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in the quadrennium after the war, for the increase of membership amounting nearly three hundred thousand, one-third of which was from the ranks of the freedmen."

After several just commendations adds: "If we now, in the flush of prosperity and strength and success seem to forget these providential pioneers of the Freedmen's Aid Society, the freedmen do not. During my four years' residence in New Orleans I learned much from them of deep feeling and warm attachment cordially entertained toward the old Southern preachers."

He also pays a glowing tribute to several old colored preachers—Henry Hamilton, Scott Chum, Robert Hodge, Moses Williams, and others—converted and trained in the Southern Methodist Church, who showed him great kindness, and brought him under lasting obligations while in New Orleans—men still gathering sheaves for the Master, and who, by their successful ministry, are now bringing honor upon his branch of Methodism.

In acknowledgment of this first favorable mention of Southern Methodism in connection with these annual reports we are glad to be able to say we and hope that the next annual report, addresses included, will still show an advance on the present, so that, without objectionable expressions and apparent thrusts, it will restrict itself wholly to the only interest to be advanced? To secure this end, and in the true fraternal spirit, I ask indulgence to say a word in the present report a few words in particulars.

Might not the executive committee have spared us that homily on the restoration of slavery and peonage? What does this language mean? That a million of slaves were set free, and an attempt to reduce them again to bondage would be met with the most obstinate resistance, no imagination can picture the terrible consequences of such an effort. Having tasted the sweet draught of freedom, and felt its inspiring effect, rather than be made slaves again, they, in its most revolting forms, would be welcomed. A measure fraught with such fearful peril would not for an instant be tolerated."

Are such men, in such a document, engage in mere bravado? Do they mean to mock our impotence, insult our helplessness, question our sincerity, and contradict our professions and asseverations, made now for five years, and emphasized by every method possible to us?

Hear them again: "Scarcely less to be dreaded would be an attempt to reduce these millions of freedmen to a state of peonage or serfdom, and to wrest from them the rights and privileges of citizenship, and consign them again to hopeless ignorance and degradation; and yet, in the judgment of many wise and far-seeing men, the current of opinion on this question is surely drifting in that direction. The price of liberty is eternal vigilance, and the friends of human must be on the alert to prevent the re-establishment of every form of wrong or oppression which may bring danger to the republic, or misery and suffering to its subjects."

Surely the Rev. Joseph Cook, in his lecture on "Enfranchised Ignorance at the South," by his sensational fiction, elevated into being by the ominous intimations of some religious alarmist, has not frightened anybody with the absurd idea that Southerners are extending unlimited credit to the colored people, for the purpose of accumulating their indebtedness, and thereby furnish a pretext for enforcing perpetual service. Of all people they are least in debt, because there is no means to enforce payment, and nobody dares to trust them. Everybody familiar with negro character knows that the very moment he becomes your debtor you can no longer retain his labor, and for this very reason he cannot be allowed to get in arrears to his employer. It is just because he has no credit, and because physicians are not prepared to do a general gratuitous practice, that he sometimes suffers for medical attention, and not because the physician loses caste, as stated in this report. The applause of the Rev. Joseph Cook's Boston audience of philosophers and scholars, when he pictured his astute statesmen, with their ears to the ground, catching the distant rumble of the thunder and upheaval from this cause, to sober, sensible men, cognizant of the facts, seemed incredible as the picture was ridiculous.

Then, again, why should they and Dr. Matlack persist in designating one of the two co-equal divisions of Methodism "the mother church," now that an explicit and authoritative agreement and declaration has been made that the two churches are "co-ordinate," which means of the same rank—that both are "branches," and that each is a "legitimate branch" of the same stem—that both have "a common origin," and that the primal undivided organization of 1784 designated the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, the common mother of several sisters, one of whom is styled the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, and another the Methodist Episcopal Church South?

We regret, too, that Dr. Haven's address, so excellent in its general matter and spirit, is marred by any reference to the "political privileges" of the freedmen—a topic more appropriate on the hustings or in the United States Congress. At the anniversary of a society to promote Christian education, why make declarations, true or false, fitted to arouse sectional antagonisms and political antipathies? Multitudes of thorough and true Methodists, in the midst of the freedmen, and voting at the same polls, and therefore with the best opportunities for knowledge, do not believe, as Dr. Haven declares, that "most of them dare not exercise the political privileges which the constitution expressly gives them." The writer heard, very recently, two colored Bishops, who have traveled widely through the South, and mingled freely and intimately with their people, deny this charge. To a direct question for information touching this matter in other regions, both responded that in so far as their people fail to vote, it is not from fear, but because they have learned that it does not pay. It is known that they were once led to expect each a mule and forty acres of land from voting.

And thus it seems that forty years and more would have entitled Dr. Matlack to ventilate his views and exhaust the argument on slavery. His conscience, we are sure, does not smite him for a failure to embrace his past ample opportunities. What could have suggested just now a discussion of the validity of the title-deeds to slaves? Nobody in this region is agitating the question of property rights on the basis of these documents. This is hardly a practical question—but if the doctor has fears, we venture to suggest for his relief that a few thousand dollars, judiciously expended, would buy up the mass of such paper now in the South. Some of it, I am sure, he can get very low, costly as it was to the holders. If property rights, however, were in all cases subjected to the test of an unbroken succession of valid ownership, there would be a general unsettling of title-deeds to all classes of property, and few men could be sure of their actual right to any possession. Perhaps, when allowance is made for the doctor's slaughtered thought, he may be supposed to have intended no thrust. Let us hope so.

The Rev. R. H. Rust, A. M., evinces less of the milk of human kindness. "A decided vein of bitterness runs through his entire discourse. His theme itself was unfortunate and inopportune. We did not suppose the Freedmen's Aid Society charged with the solution of "Our National Problem." If correct in this, his speech was out of order.

We do not undervalue the nation nor any of its problems. Statesmen may well grapple with the great questions of State, and politicians ought to discuss politics; but it does not follow that the reverend speaker on this occasion displayed either good taste or sound judgment by such an attempt. The church confers inalienable blessings upon the State by its divinely-ordained work; but that work is not to furnish discussions through its clergy upon the intricacies of constitutional law and governmental policy. Fishes are adapted to the sea, and fowls to the air, and while the air and the sea sustain important mutual relations and interdependencies, the most agile fish makes an awkward bird, and either is drowned in the element of the other. Church and State, preacher and politician, will last serve their ends, and most ideas mankind, by a strict adherence of each to a designated sphere. The moral of Darius Green and his flying machine is most salutary for all, and not least for messengers of the Prince of Peace. Crimination and recrimination, taunts and jeers, especially by ministers of the gospel, can never solve "Our National Problem."

The spirit of justice, to say nothing of charity, requires that the boast of the Rev. Joseph Cook, reiterated by the Rev. R. H. Rust, A. M., that "the single State of New York expends more money for education than the whole of the Southern States together," should be compelled with the further statement that the wealth of that single State is reported in the census of 1870 at $6,500,811,261, while that of the entire South is $7,570,525,092—a fact which takes all the wind out of this empty, offensive boast.

In the same spirit he repeats that other exaggerated statement, published by Dr. C. H. Fowler, in the New York Advocate, and never recalled, and afterward paraded by the Rev. Joseph Cook, that 1,700,000 voters in the Southern States cannot read their ballots.

Table 9, page 396, of the last census shows that in all the States, North and South, there are of male adults who cannot write, 1,585,619, including whites, colored, Chinese and Indians. The same table shows that nearly a half million of these are in the Northern States, and further, that about one-fifth of them can read, though they cannot write.

Ordinary honesty requires every public teacher who professes to give statistics not to misstate the facts. "Figures never lie," when they are permitted to tell the truth. This reckless, if not willful, exaggeration evinces an eagerness to magnify the ignorance and narrowness of Southern people, hardly accordant with the charity that "is not puffed up," that "thinketh no evil," that "rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth."

The census shows that of white voters who cannot read their ballots there are nearly 100,000 more in the Northern States than in the Southern, though the former have more than four times the wealth of the latter. Massachusetts has nearly double as many as Alabama, with more than ten times the wealth; and New York nearly double as many as Tennessee, with more than thirteen times the wealth.

As if the fearful increase of enfranchised ignorance by the national policy touching the freedmen, the responsibility must rest where it belongs. For any new dangers from this source, the North, and not the South, must answer. It is the introduction of this very factor by the North that gives the complexity to "Our National Problem," which this reverend statesman proposes to solve by the "beautiful sentiment that the South should educate its own colored people."

Despoiled, as we have been, of our wealth, the Southern States have levied taxes upon their impoverished people for public education, in which the freedmen share proportionately with the white race, though they supply but a small fraction of the revenue. And, although this is done by the sovereign choice of these States, this pacificator and friend of liberal ideas affirms that "opposition to the education of this race is entertained by the South." He further affirms that "the evangelical churches there do nothing for educating this race." He might to know that these churches, reduced in finances, have had to struggle for existence; that their institutions have been despoiled of their endowments, and many of them have gone into other hands, while all are reduced to the greatest extremities. But, notwithstanding our deep poverty, his taunt and declaration are not warranted. Even the Protestant Episcopalians and Presbyterians, whom he especially stigmatizes as not having "established a single institution for the education of the colored people," have each a theological school exclusively for their benefit.

He even affirms that those who come among us from abroad, for "teaching this race, are ostracised and treated with great unkindness."

This writer knows of none who have been treated with unkindness.

Those who come to inaugurate and teach social equality find us slow to learn.

It is not to us "self evident" that all men, even of the same race, are, in all respects, "equal." People seem to us to present the widest differences, in form and feature, in strength and stature, in complexion and comeliness, as well as in taste, intelligence, and character, both social and moral.

Races have their constitutional peculiarities and their distinctive marks, giving rise to mutual attractions and repulsions, and this seems to us both innocent and natural.

Social affinities in the South, as among the best people in the North, regulate themselves, and cannot be forced.

But I have given enough of this to test his tone.

Let Dr. Rust see to it that his speakers hereafter have only one problem to solve, and that is how best to promote the intellectual and religious culture of the freedmen.

"Let us have peace."

NASHVILLE, Tennessee.

A PARDON LOCKED UP.—In the Isle of Man, as I was one day walking on the sea-shore, I remember contemplating with thrilling interest an old gray ruined tower, covered with ivy. There was a remarkable history connected with this spot. In that tower was formerly thrown one of the best governors the island ever possessed. He had been accused of treachery to the king during the time of the civil wars, and received sentence of death. Intercession was made on his behalf, and a pardon was sent; but that pardon fell into the hands of his bitter enemy, who kept it locked up, and the governor was hanged. His name is still honored by the many, and you may often hear a pathetic ballad sung to his memory to the music of the spinning-wheel.

We must feel horror stricken at the fearful turpitude of the man who, having the pardon for his fellow-creature in his possession, could keep it back, and let him die the death of a traitor. But let us restrain our indignation till we ask ourselves whether God might not point his finger at most of us, and say: "Thou art the man! Thou hast a pardon in thine hands to save thy fellow-creatures, not from temporal, but eternal death. Thou hast a pardon suited to all, sent to all, designated for all. Thou hast enjoyed it thyself; but hast thou kept it back from thy brother, instead of sending it to the ends of the earth?"—Hugh Stowell.

The power of duly appreciating little things belongs to a great mind; a narrow-minded man has it not, for to him they are great things.—Whately.

Religious Intelligence.

—A new "Barge Bethel" and school-room has been opened at Chester, England, for the benefit of canal-boatmen and their families.

—Several Protestant churches have been built and opened in France by the Protestant Central Society during the year; and three of its previously constituted churches have been accepted by the State—those of Boulogne-sur-Mer, Alby and Le Mans—which make thirty-five thus formed by the society since its origin. Those of Maubeuge, Chateauroux and Montargis are the latest opened.

PRUSSIA.—Alliance.—The Protestant Conservatives give signs of coalescing with the Ultramontane Catholics to procure the repeal of the Falk laws. They may make their calculation on not succeeding as long as the present generation of recalcitrant Romish bishops is living to share in their triumph. Prince Bismarck and the German people have come to a good understanding on this point.

—A curious relic of tree-worship exists in Scotland. It is called the festival of "The Clavie," and takes place each twelfth of January at Burghead, a fishing village on the Scotch coast. A tar-barrel is burnt, and as it falls into pieces the fishermen rush in and endeavor to get a lighted bit of firewood. With this fire on the cottage hearth is at once kindled. It is considered lucky to keep this flame all the rest of the year.

—Australia has its large givers as well as Europe and America. Sir S. Wilson has given $150,000 for erecting a new hall at the Melbourne University, besides spending some thousands in attempting to acclimatize the true salmon in Victoria; and Mr. W. J. Clarke, in addition to other munificent gifts for public purposes, has subscribed $10,000 to the Indian Famine Relief Fund, and $50,000 toward the proposed Anglican cathedral in Melbourne.

—M. Vigouroux has just published a useful and interesting work, called "Les Bible et les Decouvertes modernes en Egypte et en Assyria." In two volumes, the object of which is to confirm and illustrate the Pentateuch by the Egyptian and Assyrian monuments. It is, of course, written from the point of view of a Roman Catholic priest; and the author's readiness to accept the miraculous may offend zealous Protestants; but he shows himself very learned, and, on the whole, very fair. His knowledge of the inscriptions, however, is not at first hand; and his statements in regard to them must, therefore, be taken with a certain amount of caution.

MADAGASCAR.—The London Missionary Society and its representatives have been placed in a very embarrassing position by the letters of a Mr. Louis Street, a Quaker missionary, representing that the missions of the London Society are under the patronage of the government of Madagascar to a degree that falls hardly short of State establishment, and that in the promotion of their work government influence is pushed almost to the point of persecution. Inasmuch as the London Missionary Society is the organ of the English Nonconformists, with whom the total separation of Church from State is a matter of religious principle, the letters of Mr. Street, unless contradicted or explained, are likely to make it extremely warm for the society.

—A South African Missionary Conference, in which seven evangelical mission churches were represented, was held at King Williamstown in the month of July, 1877. A correspondent says: "From the papers read three things seem to be clearly deducible: 1. That the churches of Southern Africa are awake to the importance of the present providential opening. 2. That the employment of trained native agency, under judicious superintendence, will doubtless prove the most effective way of extending our operations. 3. That while others have gone far into the interior to work from the center, and while the French Protestant Church has gone beyond the Transvaal to work, by means of native agency, toward the Zambezi, for us (the Wesleyans) the proviso that such is, by similar means, at once to strongly occupy a position in the Transvaal itself, and work from thence forward, among the interior tribes, as God shall clearly open our way."

—The latest news by steamer from China includes the following: "A Canadian missionary, named Mackay, had been attacked by mobs in Tamsui, Formosa, and threatened with death if he remained on the island. He refused to withdraw, though the Chinese officials declared they could not protect him. The result of his persistency is not yet known." Mr. Mackay is a missionary of the Canada Presbyterian Society, and has done yeoman's service in northern Formosa for Christianity. He was appointed to Formosa in 1872, and was joined by Dr. Frazer in 1875. Dr. Frazer has left and Mr. Mackay is alone. He is indefatigable in his labors. He has "traveled barefooted over hills and mountains, under torrents of rain, to preach a crucified Savior in every village in northern Formosa, several times." His work has been very successful. At the beginning he encountered suspicion, unfriendliness, opposition and violence; but he soon made friends. And now, as he looks back over his work, he feels like shouting "Glory to God" for what has been accomplished. He now has under his care 12 chapels and 117 communicants, and 5 schools, which are well filled. In one of his letters he says: "Some friends in Canada think it was an easy matter to plant a church in Formosa. There never was a greater mistake. It has taken days and nights of toil, tears, prayers, weakness, fightings and strugglings." The number of communicants increases rapidly. One year ago it was reported at 75. He says he finds friends, as well as enemies, everywhere he goes. Recently he was in Bang-Kah, the largest city in the north, trying to establish a chapel. While there he was attacked by a mob; but friends interceded for him and saved his life. He is terribly in earnest about saving the Chinese.—Independent.

MOTHER'S SONG.

The brooklet runs o'er the stones—
Pretty stones!
The larches are hung with cones—
Pretty cones!
The brooklet sings, but the larch is sighing
"O singing brook, no loud noise crying!
Hush-bye!

And Baby can sing like the brook—
Pretty brook!
As it leaps from its mossy fringed nook—
Pretty brook!
And Baby's singing shall drown the crying
Of the cross old world and its endeavoring
Hush-bye!

Note from the Editor.

We have a great many letters on hand from our little friends—many more than we can publish. We scarcely know how to select. We shall continue to publish such as inclose a subscription to the ADVOCATE. Some others may appear occasionally. But in order to find room for selected articles the most of the little letters will necessarily be delayed, and, perhaps, not published at all. The editor is always gratified to hear from his little friends, and only regrets that their letters cannot all be published.

From Our Little Friends.

ATLANTA, La., Feb. 5, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: Some time ago I promised to send you a new subscriber. I now redeem my promise. Herewith I hand you for Bro. Harp $2. Please send the ADVOCATE to Mrs. S. M. Deen, Atlanta, Winn parish, La.

I trust all the little folks who write for the ADVOCATE will act as agents for the paper, and send a new subscriber with every letter. I shall try again. Trusting that all your little readers can and do rejoice with me in Jesus, whose blood cleanseth now from all sin, and whose grace enables me to walk in the light, as he is in the light, I am, Mr. Editor,

Yours in love,

EUGENIA A. HEARN.

(Note by the Editor.—Letters from our little friends with a new subscriber's name inclosed will always be first published. We hope they will come in so fast that there will be room for no others. Thanks to Miss Eugenia.)

FERRISBURG, Vermont, February 1, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I found, in perusing the ADVOCATE, that you gave the children a corner. I wrote a letter last February, but it has never made its appearance. As I would look for it so eagerly each week, I at last came to the conclusion that it had been consigned to the waste-basket. My brother Willie suggested that perhaps you had "lit your pipe with it." However, we should not be weary in well doing; so I have concluded to write again, hoping this may share a better fate.

I do not attend Sabbath school, as we have no church near us; nor do I attend preaching, because there has been none since last fall. Conference did not send us a preacher. I did not see our circuit mentioned, nor have I seen or heard anything of our preacher. We all loved Bro. Abernethy, who preached for us last year, and wanted him back again. I hope the presiding elder, Bro. Mangum, will send us one.

Your little friend,

MAMIE EDLINE GREENE.

Note.—The editor is sorry, but he cannot publish half the good letters of his little friends.

The Angry Girl.

The following sad result of anger occurred some years ago. A little girl got angry with her boot-strings. When she went to put on her boot she found a hard knot, which she jerked and pulled until it became a great deal harder. "No matter," said her mother, "put on your shoes." "I hate my shoes!" she answered angrily; "I shall wear my boots," and she tugged away at the knot.

As knots never yield to violent treatment, this naughty girl made no headway. She then caught the scissors, cut the strings, and got a great gash in her boot too. "O my child, you did not do that on purpose, did you?" said her mother. "I did; I did it on purpose; the hateful old boot!" she cried, the veins of her forehead swollen with anger.

Breakfast was ready; and her mother, well knowing that was not the moment to correct her, left Bessie alone. Bessie did not appear at the breakfast-table. After breakfast came morning worship. "Where is Bessie?" asked Uncle Charles. Uncle Charles, learning what the difficulty was, went to bring Bessie, for he hoped, by this time, the little girl had come to herself. She received him with a sullen scowl. And what do you think she said? "Get out, get out!" Uncle Charles was surprised. Was this his pretty little Bessie?

He left her, for the family were waiting, and they knelt around the family altar without her. Bessie edged out to the back door. Her brother James came along. "O Bessie," he cried, "how can you behave so? You worry mother almost to death, and are enough to disgrace us all."

Bessie's eyes flashed. Quick as lightning she gave him a push, and he fell down a flight of stairs. "O!" she screamed. What a scene of confusion and distress followed.

That was a bad morning's work for a bad temper. Yet it is among the certain fruits of anger. It makes children undutiful to their parents, unkind to brothers and sisters, selfish, cruel and destructive. Children, conquer your bad tempers, or they will make sad and painful work for you.

The Counterfeit Quarter.

Four boys were standing under a tree, looking at a bad quarter which the father of one of the boys had taken the day before. "Father thinks it came from the apple-man; he bought apples yesterday, but he cannot be sure, for he had several others in his pocket-book. It is good for nothing, anyway; so he gave it to me to play with."

"You wouldn't catch my father losing money that way. He would shove it off on some one. You could spend that in half a dozen ways if you liked. Give it to me, Freddy, and I will go down to Aleck and get a hatful of chestnuts for it. You might as well; it is of no use to you. If Aleck finds it out, I will take it back and say, 'Is it bad?' If Aleck finds it out after he gets it, he will pass it on somebody, so there'll not be any harm done, anyway."

"What of the next one who gets it?" said Freddy.

"Oh, he must pass it off as we do," laughed Phillip; "come, let us try it, anyway."

"Not I, Phil," said the other, stoutly; "my father says it is stealing to pass counterfeit money when you know it, and a very high crime. I don't mean to begin that business, even in a small way. Come to think of it, guess the best thing I can do with it is to pitch it into the mill-pond. I might lose it, and somebody find and pass it. Let some pebbles, boys, and let's see which can pitch the furthest."

The old counterfeit was buried in the deep mill-pond, where it was never likely to tempt any one to dishonesty, or to make any one suffer loss by its means.—Child's World.

THE YOUNG FIREMAN.—Johnnie Hobart was an obedient boy, who tried in every way to lessen his mother's labors, and help his father support the family. One day the father, a locomotive engineer, was killed, and went entered the cottage door. Johnnie did not know what to do. He sat down behind a large snow-plow at the station, and burst into tears. For some time he sat there alone, when a hearty voice sounded in his ears: "Why, Johnnie, my boy, 'it is always darkest just before day;' there is light ahead." The truthful gray eyes turned to the speaker, who was a tried friend of his father's and an employee on the same road.

"You are just the lad I was looking for," he continued. "One of our train hands has been dismissed as unworthy, and we want Johnnie Hobart to fill the vacancy."

Most gratefully he accepted the offer, and faithfully discharged every duty, winning thereby the confidence of all.

This happened many years ago, and if we should meet Johnnie now we should find him in a position of great usefulness and trust. Step by step our young fireman advanced until he reached the office of superintendent, honored by all who knew him.

The little cottage has been exchanged for a desirable home of his own, and he is thus enabled, by the means honestly gained, to provide those so dear to him with many luxuries and comforts.—Christian Mirror.

TO TELL THE HOUR OF DAY OR NIGHT.—Sling a shilling or a sixpence at the end of a piece of thread by means of a loop; then, resting your elbow upon a table, hold the other end of the thread between your forefinger and thumb, observing to let it pass across the ball of the thumb, and thus suspend the shilling in an empty goblet. Observe, your hand must be perfectly steady, and if you find it difficult to keep it in an immovable posture, it is useless to attempt the experiment. Premising that the shilling is properly suspended, you will find that when it has recovered its equilibrium it will for a moment be stationary; it will then of its own accord, and without the least agency from the person holding it, assume the action of a pendulum, vibrating from side to side of the glass, and after a few seconds will strike the hour nearest the time of day; for instance, if the time be twenty-five minutes past six, it will strike seven, and so on of any other hour. It is necessary to observe that the thread should lie over the pulse of the thumb, and this may in some measure account for the vibration of the shilling, but to what cause its striking the precise hour is to be traced remains unexplained; for it is no less astonishing than true that when it has struck the proper number its vibration ceases, it acquires a kind of rotary motion, and at last becomes stationary, as before.—Sower's Young Folks.

WHO MADE IT?—Sir Isaac Newton, a very wise and godly man, was once examining a new and very fine globe, when a gentleman came into his study who did not believe in God, but declared the world we live in came by chance. He was much pleased with the handsome globe and asked:

"Who made it?"

"Nobody," said Sir Isaac; "it happened here."

The gentleman looked up in amazement at the answer, but he soon understood what it meant.

During the cross-examination of the plaintiff, the following pointed colloquy took place between him and the defendant's attorney: "Were you ever in Albany?" "Yes, sir." "How long were you there?" "Six months, sir." "Were you in the penitentiary at the time?" "Yes, sir; but I never was in the Assembly, sir."

The Edifying Grace.

In one of his characteristic parentheses Paul, if he does not add something to his wonderful delineation of love, epitomizes the marks by which it is to be recognized. "Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth." The controversy in the church was concerning "the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice unto idols." On the part of some there was assumption of superior wisdom, and they were so puffed up as to disregard the views and scruples of others. The temper was dogmatic rather than charitable. There was a disposition to despise and override the opinions and feelings of those who could not agree with them. Their course was calculated to breed dissension, and to pull down and destroy. Certain opinions and convictions are knowledge in the apostle's meaning, and these, when held without love, are the fruitful source of trouble. Knowledge thus held puffs up the professors of it, leads them to think more highly of themselves than they ought to think, and to brand those who differ from them as perversely ignorant and opposed to the truth.

Practically this knowledge without love is a false knowledge, a conceit and a delusion, and one of the worst aspects of self-deception. "And if any man think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know." As a matter of experience, the test lies in the spirit manifested. The same experience may be differently apprehended, and, if formulated as a doctrine, the terms of the statement may vary; but if called to judge those who claim the experience we must be governed by the apostle's declaration that "knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth." Charity, we are sure, is not puffed up, but there is a phase of knowledge or opinion that is. Genuine love is always humble, considerate, and of seemly behavior. It takes the wind of pride and the stubbornness of dogmatism out of the heart, and those who have it will esteem their fellow-Christians more highly than themselves.

If the matter in dispute happens to be love itself, then the test is all the more conclusive. The puffed up spirit that assumes superior sanctity, and that sows the seeds of caste and divisions among Christians of the same communion, is a wrong spirit. It may be mysticism and fanaticism, but it is not the spirit of the gospel. That which engenders strife is not charity. An experience that cannot be professed and held so as to promote harmony and peace among converted people, and so as to elevate without disintegrating the body of Christ, must be wanting in the great essential. Charity edifieth. It builds up the church. Its sweetness and beauty are diffused in the society, and it is as a precious aroma in the house of God. It is at the point where good men differ that this edifying grace is most conspicuously manifest. Here love comes in, if anywhere, and it is here that its power to heal and build up is exhibited. If at this point there is a puffed up spirit, a temper of intolerance toward those who apprehend the matter as we do not, and a disposition to disparage their spiritual attainments, the presumption is that in disputing about love we have lost it. The measures of opinion may be intolerant and tend to schism, but those of love will always make for peace. The methods of the one are likely to be exclusive and separating; those of the other will be to unify and to promote the fellowship of all who have faith in Christ and are led by the Spirit of God.

The differences among Methodists on the subject of Christian perfection have led to a good deal of trouble, and to much uncharitable controversy, especially among our brethren in the North. The variance seems to be largely in the way this experience is apprehended, and in the manner of its attainment. It is agreed that the substance of perfection is love. In a letter to one of his correspondents, Mr. Wesley says: "I want you to be all love. This is the perfection I believe and teach; and this perfection is consistent with a thousand nervous disorders which that high-strained perfection is not. Indeed my judgment is that (in this case particularly) to overdo is to undo; and that to set perfection too high is the most effectual way of driving it out of the world." As thus explained to Bishop Gibson, the prelate replied: "Why, Mr. Wesley, if this is what you mean by perfection, who can be against it?" And we believe that among Methodists at this time there is agreement on the point that love is the bond of perfectness, and that love so perfect as to cast out fear is the rightful experience and privilege of the children of God. There are differences as to whether it be a growth, a second blessing, and as to whether a residue of sin is left in the heart after regeneration, which must be removed by a specific act of faith.

Good and holy people entertain these different views, and, for aught we know, they always will. This should, however, lead to no divisions and to no parties in the church. If love pervades all who differ, there will be no trouble, there will be no invidious distinctions and judgments, and while love is preached and sought and professed, special phases of opinion will cease to rend and divide the followers of Christ. Love is the fulfilling of the law, and love builds up. We have enlarged somewhat upon Paul's parenthesis, wherein he gives us the contrast between the knowledge that puffeth up and the charity that edifieth. We may take this, in connection with his larger description of charity, as our guide in reference to what perfection is, and as the grounds of self-examination. Every lineament in the picture unfolds this feature and expression of love. It is the edifying grace. It strengthens and encourages the weak and struggling, it is not provoked by the supposed ignorance and misconception of those who may be regarded as weaker brethren, it does not separate itself from those who may be on the lower rungs of the ladder of Grace, but draws and cheers and comforts, "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Charity edifies the whole body of Christ by uniting it in the bonds of love. It counterworks the tendency to fanaticism, because it leavens the entire spirit and tempers the harshness of strong convictions with the consciousness that all are liable to err. The true and the false in religion are often much alike in certain stages of development, but the tares and the wheat are manifest in what they produce. The principle of discrimination is given in reference to the most vital questions of the religious life. That which puffs up, whatever be the profession, is a delusion, at the least, if it be not an error bordering on sin. That which edifies is the true and genuine doctrine, and the experience which answers to the word of God. The edifying power of charity is in the life, tempers and words of those who possess it. Thus exhibited, it is sharper than the blade of the polemic, and clearer and stronger than the statement of the best-constructed creeds.

The Lost Opportunity.

The frequency and regularity of the most wonderful things in the natural world seem to produce the very opposite effect to what we might expect. If the sun arose only once a month, or if a man died only once in a century, there would be perhaps a much greater sensation than now. So if men neglected an opportunity only once in a lifetime it might be much more impressed upon their minds. The fact, however, that probably every day has registered a lost opportunity causes us to regard the loss as a necessary part of life—the moral and mental parallax, which must enter into the calculation by which we are to determine our position in the moral universe, our orbit, our rate of motion, and our relation to all the units of that system in which we move. The parallax of lost opportunity, we contend, will not give the world our real position, but only the apparent, and therefore a mere admission of its existence will serve to rectify the obliquity of a lifetime; that an imaginary removal of the obstructions which prevent immediate determination of our whereabouts is as good as an actual removal; and that our shortcomings and obliquities will be balanced by those of others. When a school boy, I remember that to miss a word or question was not half so humiliating if all my class missed it along with me; and so in the school of life it may be observed that the disorders of society and the failures in business do not impress the moral or business sensibilities of any one very powerfully if every other one is committing the same blunders or crimes. Yet there is always a turning-point, where we become conscious of the fact that the opportunity has been lost, and that it is now too late to retrieve it. The boy in the class by and by finds himself brought in contact with another phase of life, where he needs what he neglected to bring along with him. It seemed easy to get off where all were, like himself, unable to answer his question; but now he is brought into another class, where he is the only one who makes a failure. It is painful to suffer disgrace alone. He may have boasted that he was not eager to appear wise or learned above his own peers—that he was not ambitious of a conspicuous place; but now to have won a conspicuous place in disgrace is doubly painful. We fall, as the school boy, to recognize the moral quality in the neglect of the opportunity; that we are beings created to be conspicuous, and that it is impossible for us to avoid being so; that, like the two baskets of figs, the bad is very bad, and the good very good. Esau despised the birthright—this conspicuous position to which he was born. It was the lost opportunity to him; "afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he found no place for repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears." Refusing to be conspicuous on the right side, he became conspicuous on the other. The ten spies, who went out with Caleb and Joshua, did not choose to become conspicuous. They professed to be men of practical common sense; they calculated the material obstacles to the advance of their tribes into the promised land. They were men of affairs, and rulers in their several tribes. But they became conspicuous as corpses upon the very next day. The tribes who refused to appear, led by the folly of enthusiasm, to advance against an enemy, became notorious in the folly of proposing to return under the lash of a task-master, who had never promised them anything but oppression. They did not wish to appear over scrupulous in keeping their allegiance to the law and leadership of one who had shown himself both just and wise and temperate in his rule, and so they boldly rushed into the prominence of disloyalty and infidelity to their own avowed principles. They would not merit the praise for obedience, but they would win the odium of mutiny.

This example of the Israelites furnishes us with several points worth considering. 1. Those who seek to prevent the advance of the world in the right direction are the first to realize the lost opportunity. They may have a large popular following, but their very popularity is the more ominous to themselves. 2. Their influence is felt for future generations in proportion to their popularity. Note the fact that Judah and Ephraim became the leading tribes in connection with the fact that Caleb and Joshua were the representatives of those two tribes. 3. Notice that in the neglect of an opportunity to advance we generally make a retrograde. We propose to throw away what we have already gained. I remember once regretting having started in the Christian course so early in life, since arduous duties were too early imposed upon me. The result was that in less than two years I had lost all that I had ever gained. I was a hardened backslider, and found greater difficulty in being restored than to be converted the first time. So mark in regard to the Israelites. They lose all—they must retrace the desert; they must learn the law again; they must endure untold sufferings; tears must be shed in a soil that will return no fragrant blossom; battles must be fought with no spoils or rest after victory; forty years must go for nothing. 4. Notice also that we think we can regain the opportunity; and by attempting it we bring ruin and shame on ourselves. The Israelites thought they could retrieve their mistake two days afterward. But a battle was fought, a defeat suffered, and the hallowed sorrows of parent for son, of wife for husband, of child for father slain, was all poisoned by the fact that this death and woe were over murder and sorrow unmixed with penitence. "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself." Tears like these do not touch God's heart. How much of the mourning of the world, and even of Christians, is but "a sorrow that worketh death!" 5. What might have been the glory of Israel had they gone right into the land of Canaan! To have had Moses and Aaron thirty-seven years, and Joshua seventy seven, all working to establish the kingdom and the true worship of God, with a faithful and zealous people to assist them—what might not have been expected? So what might not our lives be if we would follow unhesitatingly the voice of God! How much do we lose of that actually gained, and what woes do we incur for nothing! But, above all, what glorious possibilities in the future are forever blighted in the lost opportunity!

Bishop Pierce in the North.

Bishop Pierce, in the Southern Christian Advocate, gives account of his recent visit to the North. The following extract is very entertaining and suggestive:

I saw some things in Northern Methodism to admire. In their love-feasts there is more freedom from constraint than with us. It is a family meeting—all is free; they are not afraid of each other. Their speeches are not stereotyped—they say something—make a point; they are short and fresh. Again, I think the members are more active, more identified with the church, more ready to serve than our people. The church belongs to them and they belong to the church. But, as with us, there are many things to deplore. The rule on class meetings is a dead letter. The institution itself fares no better North than South. With its status legislation has had nothing to do. The causes of its decline lie back of all General Conference action. Family prayer is greatly neglected. The social means of grace fare very much as among ourselves. Methodism is alike in its faults as in its virtues. Both sections of the church might, and ought to, do better. May Heaven revive and reform and restore us all, and give us the signs and the power of the years of the right hand of the Most High.

I spent a few days with my friend, Dr. Deems, in New York. To him and his family I am indebted for no little kindness. I cannot canonize him, as Paul did "Gaius, mine host," but if I were Paul I would. I was rejoiced to see with my own eyes, and to hear on all sides, that the doctor is doing a good and great work. The Church of the Strangers is an institution of power—a providential instrumentality.

On invitation of Bishop Harris and Dr. Vail, I attended the Preachers' Meeting on Monday morning, and heard an elaborate essay in defense of Methodist church polity, intended, as I thought, to neutralize an attack from without, as well as forestall some schemes from within. The comments pro and con were brief, but spirited. I was introduced and invited to address the meeting, but declined, as I did not think it proper to interject remarks irrelevant to the programme of the occasion. The number of ministers present (a hundred, I suppose) indicates the strength of the church in this great city.

My enjoyment was greatly marred by a cold, which inflamed and irritated my throat distressingly. The houses, the churches and the offices are all heated by furnaces, and the air is hot and dry—an unnatural temperature—and when you go out the keen, icy, cutting wind strikes into the marrow. The alternation is extreme and violent, and accounts for the prevalence of pulmonary and pneumonic complaints among Northern people. The winter, all agreed, had been unusually mild, but any and every day while I was there would have been called cold in middle Georgia. At any rate, I was so disordered by a cold, and its effects, as to be unfit for the pulpit or society. So, declining several invitations to preach, I went, in the morning, to hear Mr. Beecher. The text was Exodus xx, 4. The discourse was profound—deeply interesting. His manner is natural, unaffected; style largely colloquial, with now and then an intense oratorical paragraph. He is not fastidious, nor even careful, in his grammar or pronunciation, but rushes along under the impulse of his mental action and emotional nature, content to make himself understood. My impression was that he did not feel as free as is common with him. He lacked what we Methodists call "liberty;" yet such is the man's power and art and resources that he never permits the hearer's interest to flag. I was more struck with his prayers than his sermon. The composition was more elevated, the sentences better constructed, his language beautiful—perhaps a little too ornate for a chastened taste. They were reverent, humble, and singularly appropriate to his subject and the occasion. I will not say they were models, but there was not one commonplace, no stereotyped expression, and yet simple and felicitous in Scripture quotations. Mr. Beecher does not seem to me to have an original, creative mind; but he has the power of fresh, crisp expression, which makes old thoughts seem new. The mental soil is rich, and, a seed-thought dropped in, the fecundity is marvelous. I ought to say the church is a plain one, and of immense capacity, and, as always, was full.

At night I went to hear Talmage, but was woefully disappointed. The morning and evening were both devoted to raising money to pay a heavy church debt. Mr. Kimball, the great "church-debt lifter," occupied the hour. According to reports his success is wonderful; but why is hard to say. He does not seem to have any special aptitude for the business—no extra gifts—no magnetism of presence, voice or manner. There is no element of power, but earnestness and tenacity. I take him to be a religious man, and, rejecting all claptrap, he urges only Christian motives. On this occasion he did not succeed very well, but I judge in another trial he will work it out.

On Monday I had been invited to address the Preachers' Meeting, and would have done so, but I was so unwell with cough and cold that I wrote an apologetic note and concluded to leave for home. I was bound by engagement to stop a day in Philadelphia with my old Kentucky friend, Rev. J. S. Malone. I wished also to spend a day with Bishop Simpson, but he would not be at home till the next evening, and so, feeling no better, I turned my face steadily homeward. My friend carried me around to see various objects of interest, chiefly Fairmount Park and the Centennial grounds. The papers of 1876 made everybody familiar with these, and so I forego all description.

Eating my indisposition, the visit was very pleasant. I am glad I had the opportunity to go and mingle with the church and people. Whatever may be true of fraternity as a great church question, my reception was cordial, and my intercourse with the preachers and people courteous and kind. The spirit of Christ is the spirit of unity, and the less we legislate and diplomatize the better for the interests of peace and harmony. Reunion under one jurisdiction would bring up questions pregnant with passion and strife. More of the mind of Christ among us all, North and South, will bring us as close together as the mission of Methodism demands.

Rev. John C. Wills, D. D.

F. H. Smith, of the Virginia Military Institute, writing in the Richmond Christian Advocate, gives the following interesting sketches of Dr. Wills:

The death of this distinguished teacher and divine calls for more than a passing notice. May I ask the privilege of saying a few words in connection with his most interesting and eventful career?

In June, 1810, the board of visitors of the Virginia Military Institute met in annual session. The appointment of State cadets from the vacant districts was among the first duties. On reading over the testimonials of the various applicants, a letter from Hon. Archibald Atkinson, senator from the Isle of Wight district, arrested their special attention.

Col. Atkinson stated that on going into a tailor's shop in the town of Smithfield, on a matter of business, his attention was attracted by a sprightly youth of sixteen years, who was sitting on the bench sewing on a pair of pantaloons, but while thus employed, he was observed looking intently at a small book which he had placed within the vacant space in his lap. He said to him:

"Johnny, what are you doing?"

The youth colored deeply, but modestly replied:

"I am studying arithmetic."

Struck by the earnest desire to improve himself, Col. A. said to him:

"I notice there is a vacancy for a State cadet in the Virginia Military Institute from this district. How would you like to go there?"

His eye brightened with delight at such a prospect, but he added:

"I am bound to my trade."

"But," said Col. A., "I know your employer will gladly release you. What then?"

"Yes," said John, "I know he will; but I have no money to pay my expenses even as a State cadet."

"Suppose I raise the money for you—how then?"

"Most gladly would I go, and ever remember with gratitude your kindness if you will secure me the appointment."

This simple narrative, given in the letter of Col. Atkinson to the board of visitors, secured at once the unanimous election of John C. Wills, the subject of this notice, as the State cadet from the Isle of Wight senatorial district.

Cadet John C. Wills matriculated on the twentieth of July, 1840. More than once he expressed the desire to return to his home, so deeply did he feel his want of preparation and the fear that he might not be able to master the course of studies now before him, to all of which he was an utter stranger. But he was encouraged to persevere; and, when this was fully decided upon, he went to his work with the earnestness of one whose success was sure. Day by day he grappled with the difficulties of mathematics, and day by day these difficulties vanished; and when his class was examined, in January, 1841, J. C. Wills was second in mathematics. This result settled all his troubles, and on the fourth of July, 1843, he was graduated.

The distinction which he had gained in the mathematical course prompted the board of visitors, upon the recommendation of the faculty, to appoint him an assistant professor of mathematics immediately after his graduation. He proved to be one of the best of teachers; so that, when the trustees of the academy at Heathsville, Northumberland Co., Va., applied to the Virginia Military Institute for a suitable graduate to take charge of the academy, Mr. John C. Wills was nominated and was unanimously elected.

Gentlemen are now living who were the pupils of Mr. Wills in this academy. His reputation became so well established that his services were demanded in a larger sphere, and he was elected professor of mathematics at Randolph-Macon College. Here he rapidly rose in influence, being regarded by the distinguished president, Rev. Dr. Smith, as the best teacher and the best disciplinarian he had ever known. He was ordained a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church South while at Randolph-Macon.

From Randolph-Macon Professor Wills was called to the presidency of a university in Alabama, and then to the presidency of Central College, at Fayette, Howard county, Mo., where he labored with earnestness and great success. He died while at his post, like a true soldier, on the eleventh of February, 1878, esteemed as a man of great learning, piety and executive ability, and holding high rank as a minister, professor and instructor of youth, having been a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church for nearly twenty-five years.

Centenary College, Louisiana.

The college has a better attendance this year than last, and the faculty is more complete than for many years. It is doing good work, and everything is moving on well. The patronage is, however, far less than it should be. Our people everywhere need to be awakened to the vital importance of educating the rising generation. We clip from the Woodville Republican the following account of the recent semi-annual exhibition of the literary societies:

Responding to an invitation from President Andrews, we last Thursday a week visited Jackson, La., to attend the semi-annual exhibition of the Literary Society of Centenary College. We regret that we arrived too late to be present at the exhibition of the preparatory class, conducted by Prof. I. D. Wall. We were glad to learn, however, that it was well attended and highly entertaining. Just here we may remark that great credit is due Prof. Wall for the efficient and thorough manner in which the Preparatory Department is managed this session.

On Thursday night the spacious exhibition hall of the college was filled with an intelligent and genial assembly to witness the society celebration. Six young gentlemen, elected from the society, delivered addresses, all of which were very good, and by their preparation and delivery evinced a high degree of talent and close application. A string band was in attendance, and lent additional attraction by discoursing melodious music.

The principal feature of the evening was the address of Maj. H. Van Eaton, on the subject of the "Missions and Rewards of the American Scholar." It was listened to with marked attention by the students, who seemed to appreciate the speaker's efforts to point out the reward that awaits the true scholar. We heard several say this was by far the finest address that has been delivered at Centenary for years, which is no small compliment when we remember that he has had such men as Drs. Rivers and Munsey, and John Ellis to precede him. In our opinion it was a most chaste and finished oration, showing by its completeness and preparation that the speaker had deemed the occasion and theme worthy of his best attention.

At its close the president came forward, and in a few well-timed and complimentary remarks thanked the speaker for the address, and said it could not fail to have a most beneficial effect among both students and faculty.

While in Jackson it was our good fortune to be the guest of President Andrews, to whom and his excellent wife we return sincere thanks. We were glad to learn from the President that the college is increasing in numbers. There is every reason that it should do so under its present faculty, one and all of whom are eminently fitted for their respective places. The buildings of the college are commodious and well adapted for their purposes. We doubt if there are any college buildings in the South superior in size and architectural appearance. The grounds are beautiful and capacious, affording the students ample room for exercise. The last half session of the college opens this week, and we hope to hear of large accessions to the number of students.

Centenary and the noble men who are laboring so earnestly in her behalf deserve success; and we earnestly wish it may be so.

The Southern Christian Advocate says:

We are gratified to learn that a letter has been recently received by Dr. Haygood from Bro. Allen stating that, unless providentially hindered, he will attend the approaching session of the General Conference at Atlanta. He proposes to sail from Shanghai about the middle of March. His presence will be a delight to numerous friends, and will, we doubt not, inure greatly to the welfare of the mission.

WITHOUT ADDRESS.—Some marriage notices, obituaries and other communications are on hand in which the full name of the writers are not given. They cannot be published until the editor has the address of the writers. In some cases initials are given, in others the Christian name. We must have postoffice and name in every case.

The seventh anniversary of the New Orleans Seamen's Friend Society, auxiliary to the American Seamen's Friend Society, will be held in the Carondelet Street Methodist church on Sabbath evening, the seventeenth instant, at half-past seven o'clock. Sermon by the pastor, Rev. John Mathews.

The Mississippi Legislature adjourned on Tuesday, March 5. The regular session of the Louisiana Legislature ended on Thursday, March 7. The Governor has called an extra session of fifteen days.

The Senate Committee on Claims has decided, by a majority of one, to report a bill providing for the payment of $150,000 to the Methodist Episcopal Church South for the occupation of its building at Nashville during the war.

The pleasure of doing good is the only pleasure that never wears out.

Books and Periodicals.

A SERIES OF LECTURES ON TRANSUBSTANTIATION AND OTHER ERRORS OF THE PAPACY. Delivered in St. Louis, Mo., by H. M. Marvin, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Second edition. St. Louis: Logan D. Cameron, Agent Advocate Publishing House, 1878.

These lectures first appeared in book form, we believe, in 1860. They were originally delivered on successive Sunday nights in the Centenary church of St. Louis, and such was their merit that their publication was called for by many who heard them. There are in all twenty-three lectures, of which the first six treat of the Lord's Supper and transubstantiation. The others deal with the questions of the infallibility of the church, the primacy of Peter, tradition, the Romanist theory of church unity, corruptions of worship, the Roman Church in prophecy, what Romanism has done for religion and civilization, the mission of Protestantism, and some other relative topics. The lectures abound in clear statement, well selected authorities, and in close and logical argument. We regard the issue of this second edition as timely, and calculated to do much good. The volume makes a 12mo of 592 pages, handsomely bound, and the type and paper are unexceptionable. The frontispiece is a steel engraving of the lamented author, the best of all the likenesses of Bishop Marvin that we have seen, and the one to be adopted and perpetuated in history. The picture is worth more than the cost of the book. Retail price of the work, $2.

IS THERE A HELL? An Inquiry and an Answer. By Rev. John Cass, A. M. Published by D. Lothrop & Co., Boston.

A 12mo pamphlet of 31 pages. The author believes there is a hell. He proposes to discuss the question of its duration another time.

—The Sunday School Times, Philadelphia, on the twenty-second of February, issued a Washington's birthday number. Among other articles of interest, there is a brief one from President Hayes. The President says: "The only American whose birthday is generally known and widely celebrated is Washington. The Father of his Country is remembered and honored throughout the world for what he did and for what he was. None of my young readers who read the Sunday School times are likely to have an opportunity to do such great deeds as were done by Washington. But all of you will have an opportunity to be like him in character. They can have his love of country, his integrity, and his firmness in doing the right. To have such a character is better than rank, or wealth or fame. It is a possession which cannot be taken away. As Webster said so impressively of a 'sense of duty:' 'It will be with us through this life, will walk with us at its close, and in that hour of inconceivable solemnity which lies yet further onward it shall be with us.'"

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.—The numbers of the Living Age for the weeks ending February 23 and March 2 have the following noteworthy contents: A French Critic on Goethe, Matthew Arnold, Quarterly Review; Natural Religion, part 3, Macmillan; An Oxford Lecture, by John Ruskin, Nineteenth Century; March of English Generation Through Life, Quarterly; French Home Life, Blackwood; Macleod of Dare, by William Black, and Within the Precincts, by Mrs. Oliphant, both from Advance sheets; The Great Four-fold Kingdom, Fraser; Doctor Lavardin, Macmillan; Shakespeare in France, Nineteenth Century; Poems, translated from the German of Frau von Ingersleben; Pleasant People, Saturday Review; Antoine Laurent Becquerel, Nature; The Cruelty of Pecuniary Crime, Spectator; Skating in Winter, Pall Mall Gazette; The Emotions Due to Christ, Bliss, Spectator, and the usual store of poetry and miscellany.

Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine, for February—republished by the Leonard Scott Publishing Company, New York—has the following articles: Mine Is Thine, part 8; Ironclads and Torpedoes; Above the Clouds—A Raverie on the Bel Alp; Ride for Life; A Visit to Sophia on the Heights of Kamerleh, Christmas, 1877; The Life of the Prince Consort; A Patriot Queen; Translations from Heine, by Theodore Martin; The Storm in the East, No. 9; The Meeting of Parliament.

St. Nicholas for March, besides a wonderful display of fine illustrations, has a most tempting array of articles. Among them we note: Nasby, the Little Lapp Maiden; Jo's Wonderful Troubles; How Debts Are Made; A Talk Over Hard Times; Secrets of the Atlantic Cable; A Night with a Bear; Westminster Abbey; A Monument and a Story.

The Edinburg Review, January, 1878—republished by the Leonard Scott Publishing Company—has the following table of contents: 1. The Cromartie Papers. 2. Harvey and Cesalpino. 3. The French in Indo-China. 4. Correspondence of Charles Sumner. 5. Titian. 6. Third Volume of the Life of the Prince Consort. 7. Stanley's Discoveries and the Future of Africa. 8. The Military Power of Russia. 9. Dr. Schliemann's Exploration of Mycenæ. 10. The Coming Conclave. 11. Principles and Prospects of the Liberal Party.

—Scribner's Monthly, for March has: A Trip to Central America, illustrated; An American Colony in a Normandy Manor-House, illustrated; An Earthquake Experience, illustrated; Personal Reminiscences of Lincoln, No. 2; What Our Boys Are Reading; Last Days of Edgar A. Poe; Susan Lawton's Escape, and other articles. Topics of the Time, and the other editorial departments, are fresh and vigorous, as usual.

—The Semi-Tropical is published and edited by Henry W. Reed, Jacksonville, Fla. It is among the best of our Southern agricultural publications. Price, $3 a year. We have received the January number.

Publisher's Department.

NICOLL, THE TAILOR.—The name of this gentleman will be readily known by many of our readers as being without a rival in his business in the Eastern cities, and whose admirable fitting garments and splendid workmanship are the best evidence of his claims upon the public. He has recently opened a branch store at 118 Canal street. An examination of his stock will show the selections of foreign and domestic goods. See advertisement.

SASH, BLIND AND DOOR STEAM FACTORY.—George Purves, corner of St. Charles and Clio streets, has become thoroughly established in this city by virtue of his polite and upright course of dealing. His stock of lumber is always carefully selected, and provided to supply the peculiar wants of this section; consequently those who desire to secure choice stuff will always find large supplies at his place of business. See card.

COMMISSION MERCHANT.—Our friends on the gulf will do well to take the fact that Mr. Austin Harbin has established a cotton sampling house here for the sale of country produce of all kinds, and solicits consignments from his numerous acquaintances and others. Mr. Lambert, who has had much experience in this business, is in charge, and will give his undivided attention to the interests of correspondents.

FERTILIZERS.—Mr. Hugh W. Montgomery, an esteemed merchant of this city, has in to-day's paper of special interest to planters and farmers. Mr. Montgomery is agent for the sale of guano and other fertilizers especially adapted to the needs of cotton and cane planters. Those interested should not fail to communicate with him.

OUR old friend Samuel E. Moore, Esq., has accepted the agency of the Blanchard Fluid Cure Co.'s preparations for this section of country. Mr. Moore is a worthy man, and we heartily wish him success in this new line of business. An advertisement of the company will be seen in the ADVOCATE.

HAIR MANUFACTORY.—Mr. R. Blondeau, who has been advertising with us for some time, has a new card in the paper to-day. As a hair dresser he is unexcelled, and all kinds of hair work will give satisfaction to the patrons. Mrs. R. will carry on the hair dressing in connection with the business.

COAL.—Planters, foundries, steamboats and private persons will find it to their interest to look to coal in A. Lambert & Co., agents for Joseph Walton & Co., of Pittsburg. The brand stands very high, and we warmly recommend them to our friends.

CHINA PALACE.—Call, or send to Mr. Le Navra's, 129 Canal street, if you want anything in the crockery line. His stock is large and well assorted.

SINGER SEWING MACHINE.—Persons wanting a machine that will last a lifetime should get a Singer. They give universal satisfaction.

DRY GOODS.—Fresh first class dry goods at E. H. Adams & Bro.'s, 594 Magazine street. See advertisement.

EXQUISITE ODORS.

The Eulupic Perfumes made by Dr. Price are the favorite perfumes for the handkerchief and toilet. His Floral Riches surpasses in rich, fresh, flowery fragrance any other Cologne or toilet water. Dr. Price's Pet Rose, Alata Bouquet and other extracts are excellent.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

WILBOR'S COD LIVER OIL AND LIME.—The friends of persons who have been restored from confirmed consumption by the use of this original preparation, and the grateful parties themselves, have by recommending it and acknowledging its wonderful efficacy, given the article a vast popularity in New England. The Cod Liver Oil is in this combination rendered of its unpleasant taste, and is rendered doubly efficient by being coupled with the lime, which is itself a restorative principle, supplying nature with just the right kind and assistance required to assist and reform the diseased tissues. A. B. WILBOR, Boston, is the proprietor. Sold by all druggists.

CHARMING PICTURES.—To introduce their goods J. L. Patten & Co., 182 William street, New York, will send a package of Decalcomanie Pictures, with illustrated catalogue, to every reader of this paper who will send eight cents (stamps taken) for mailing expenses. These pictures are highly colored, beautiful and are easily transferred to any object, so as to imitate the most beautiful painting. 20w

THE BEST PROOF *for the fact that Dr. E. Farm, Garden and Household.

LUSCIOUS STRAWBERRIES.

NEW AND SELECT VARIETIES.

It is not to be wondered at that so much enthusiasm has been shown, recently in reference to this popular fruit. When we compare some of the mammoth berries that were exhibited last year, for the first time, with some of the small and inferior kinds that have held sway so long in our gardens, we are led to say that the new comers are justly praised. Beautiful berries, indeed, they are, and possessed of qualities that render them equal favorites with those who are growing fruit for market, as well as with those who grow them for their own amusement or for private use. Amateurs of recent years seem to be paying more and more attention to the strawberry, and in some instances have planted in their gardens as many as thirty or forty varieties, now testing them by using one method of cultivation, and then again in some other way, frequently obtaining remarkable results. The acquisition of some of our finest berries to our list of fruits is due to these amateur experimenters, and they well deserve our thanks. Among varieties that I will mention at this time will be found some that are due to the experiments or watchful care of some of these enthusiastic fruit-growers.

Great Prolific.—The unusually cordial welcome that this new berry is receiving is a proof that its qualities are being well appreciated. Though exceeded in size, as yet, by some of the other varieties that I have on my grounds, yet from a study of the habits of the plants I am led to believe that a little extra care bestowed upon it will lead to its yielding berries of the very largest size. Already have scores of berries been picked measuring from four to six inches in circumference, and when the ground is made still richer the public may yet be permitted to see specimens that will rival the far-famed Essex Beauties or Great Americans. The plants thus far have yielded splendid crops, and of a very superior quality of fruit.

Cinderella.—This variety is, perhaps more widely known than the preceding one, and yet it is still one of the newest of the strawberry family. Its bright color, good qualities for shipping to market, and the large size of the fruit very quickly attracted the notice of professional fruit-growers. The hardiness and productiveness of the plants assist also in making it one of the best for profit. Last summer the berries frequently sold at fully double the price realized for the common Wilsons which will give some idea of its value for market purposes. It is equally desirable for family use, as its rich aromatic flavor recommends it to be well appreciated.

Duchess.—Correspondents in Mississippi, Alabama and in some of the other Southern States write me that they are greatly pleased with this famous berry. We find also it proves to be one of the hardiest and most productive, and when grown "in hills" or in separate plants has yielded enormous crops, over two hundred berries having been counted upon a single bush. Its very early ripening make it a great favorite.

Russell's Advance, Duncan and President Lincoln pride themselves also as being among the very earliest to ripen, while Centennial, Champion and Golden Defiance seem to take equal pride in being among the latest. Perhaps at some future time I may be able to give them a further description.

Strawberry plantations may be made during March or early in April at the South, but not later than that, unless the plants are obtained from the North, where the growth is more backward. To be successful in growing these extra large varieties to the best advantage, it will pay in the beginning to see that the ground is deeply spaded and plowed, and well enriched. Make the rows either two or three feet apart, with plants either twelve or fifteen inches distant from each other in the row. If plants are obtained through the mails, it is well to moisten the roots before setting them out. Cultivate well, and the splendid berries that will be obtained will plainly show that the descriptions that have been given can be easily verified.

OUR FAMILY BREAD.

Truly the most important edibles to avoid are those which are calculated to injure the "staff of life." SCIENTIFIC —It is interesting to find that by American vegetable physiologists that there is no essential difference between the woody and foliaceous system of vegetation. A stem is, indeed, conceded by them generally to be as much made up of modified leaf as the inflorescence is generally taught to be. Hence it is not surprising that stems should sometimes act as leaves, and at other times as stems; sometimes leaves and stems are so blended and their structure modified that we cannot tell certainly which to refer it to. The "needles" are leaves or of fine character, [many explanations illegible] genus Phyllanthus), one can hardly say whether there are separate leaves along a stem, or whether, as the branchlets fall with the leaves, they are leaflets on a pinnate leaf. Mr. R. J. Lynch has been discussing this in a recent issue of the Linnean Society's proceedings. He finds that these branchlets disarticulate as leaves do, and that there is a bud in the axil where the branchlets fall from. In our country the Southern cypress and arbor-vitæ disarticulate branchlets just as Phyllanthus is here described to do; but it is not on record that buds are formed in these axils.

A RAIN-TREE.—The consul of the United States of Colombia in the Department of Loreto (Peru) has written from Yurimaguas to President Prado, informing him that in the woods adjacent to the city of Moyobamba there exists a tree called by the natives Tamia caspi (rain tree) which possesses some remarkable qualities. It is a tree about fifteen meters (about fifty feet) high when full grown, and of about one meter in diameter at the base, and has the property of absorbing an immense quantity of humidity from the atmosphere, which it concentrates and subsequently pours forth from its leaves and branches in a perfect shower, and in such abundance that frequently when the ground in its neighborhood is converted into a perfect bog. It possesses this curious property in its greatest degree in summer precisely when the rivers are at their driest and water most scarce; and the writer of the letter proposes that it should be planted in the more arid regions of Peru for the benefit of agriculture. This is not the first time the power of condensing moisture, and throwing it off in drops or rain, has been ascribed to plants in tropical regions. Humboldt says of the Edible Aroum (Colocasia esculenta) that "it literally distills water, and launches tiny drops in the form of a jet from the points of the leaf." Its magnificent, heart-shaped leaves, "carefully and ingeniously observed," are ordained "that from ten to a dozen drops of water may fall down every minute to refreshen the roots of the plant." Prof. Schouw, in his "Wonders of Vegetation," says: "There can be no doubt that a weeping-tree before your eyes" was seen some years ago in the Botanic Garden of Candia; from the foliage of which water fell like rain."

COMMERCIAL.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Tuesday, March 12, 1878.

There is a desperate effort being made by the railroads to induce the grain shippers of the West to use their lines for transportation, instead of the Mississippi river, the natural road to the sea. These roads have reduced their freight charges so low that it seems impossible for them to make expenses; but in spite of the low rates overland there is a strong disposition on the part of the Western merchants to ship by way of New Orleans. It is to be hoped that the merchants of this city will prove equal to the emergency, and not allow this trade to be diverted from them, as has been the case. The Times, of this city, is doing good work in urging the necessity of establishing a Board of Trade for furthering the interests of our grain trade

The business of the past week has been very fair, though no changes of any importance have taken place in prices.

Gold opened in New York yesterday at 101 and closed at 100¼; here it opened at 101⅛@101¼, and remained the same at the close of business.

Exceptional paper is quoted at 7@8 per cent.; A1 do., 9@10; loans on collaterals, 7@8, and on morigage, 8½@10.

State consols range from 82½ to 83 and premium bonds 36¼ to 37.

We take the cotton report which follows from the Democrat:

The market to-day was dull under the influence of unfavorable news from abroad. Arrivals for Liverpool were lower, Havre was depressed and New York 4 or 5 points lower on futures. Nevertheless, there was a fair demand, but buyers were disposed to utilize the unfavorable condition of other markets for a decline in prices; in this, however, they were unsuccessful, although some sales were made at lower figures than the closing quotations of the Exchange The sales footed up 4 850 bales

The official closing quotations of the Cotton Exchange were as follows:

	To-Day.	Yesterday
Low Ordinary	7¾	7¾
Ordinary	8⅝	8⅝
Good Ordinary	8¾	8¾
Low Middling	9¼	9¼
Middling	10¾	10¾
Good Middling	11⅛	11⅛
Middling Fair	11⅝	11⅝

Sales to-day, 4,850 bales. Market dull and easy.

It is a fact worth noticing that when stocks are lying flat on their back the churches in Gold Hill and Virginia have larger congregations than at any other time. The motive which causes the Comstocker thus to turn comparatively pious reminds one of the old Scotch lady who asked the captain what the chances were "Madam," said the seaman solemnly, "we must trust in God." "Eoh, sir, an' has it come to that?" cried the frightened dame.

"We have lost a great deal by our religion," a woman said to her husband. "Yes," replied her husband; "you lost a bad temper, and I lost a bad habit of drinking, and a ragged coat."—Vermont Chronicle.

Some one, on being asked the difference between Romanists and Ritualists, replied: "The difference is that the former are papists and the latter apeists."—Truth.

DEAR SIR: The No. 7 Diebold Safe purchased some time since went through the large conflagration, and remains forty-eight hours in the burning ruins. The iron on the sides and front was very much bulged out. Considering the extreme heat to which it had been subjected, we feared greatly for its contents; but judge of our joy and surprise when, on opening it, we found all our books and papers in good condition.

PEACE, BE STILL.

BY W. J. BABCOCK.

...ath's sea a fearful storm was sweeping,
So cold and chill;
One was there upon a billow sleeping,
...to the billows, in their fury leaping,
Said: "Peace, be still."

...hen the storms of earth sweep round our ...velling,
Both loud and shrill,
...ker, speak, our anxious fears dispelling,
...to the tempest in our bosom swelling,
Say: "Peace, be still."

...friends we loved are falling all around us,
Look where we will;
...the chains that to the earth have bound
Say: "Peace, be still."

...ms but yesterday we bore a sister
Her grave to fill;
...that home where loving hearts have missed
...where that widowed mother oft has kissed
...Say: "Peace, be still."

...dimmed eyes, look up, and cease repining;
Wait Jesus' will;
...dear one in heav'n is brightly shining,
...her brow life's fadeless flow'rs are
...Then, "Peace, be still"

...we, one by one, shall cross the river,
...so cold and chill,
...thank we stand, and hear and shiver,
...of every earthly good the Giver,
Say: "Peace, be still"

ST. PETERSBURG, March 13.—The Journal de St. Petersburg declares untenable the reported English demand that all points of treaty should be submitted to the Congress. If the mission of the Congress is to result in peace, subjects of a European character, and which might lead to excepted but resultless discussion, must be set aside.

Prince Ouroussoff will shortly proceed to Rome as semi official representative of Russia to the Vatican.

ATHENS, March 13.—Gen. Grant entertained the King of Greece at luncheon to-day, on board the United States steamer Vandalia.

CONSTANTINOPLE March 13, 1878. Prince Hassan has refused to obey the order of the Porte to evacuate Varna, declaring that he awaits the Khedive's orders. There is some agitation in Syria in favor of annexation to Egypt.

The Grand Duke Nicholas' visit to the Sultan has been postponed until after the treaty of peace has been ratified.

LONDON, March 14.—The Standard announces in official form that the British squadron in the Mediterranean is now at Besika Bay, and will advance to the Dardanelles so as to be nearer Admiral Commerell who commands off Gallipoli. Admiral Commerell's squadron thus becomes more powerful than Admiral Hornby's, and will form a reliable reserve.

A special to the Standard from Vienna says: The Roumanian agent will hand to Count Andrassy a memorandum to-morrow intimating that Roumania refuses to be bound by the Russo-Turkish peace preliminaries.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times says: Accounts of the war-like preparations of England and Austria cause but little excitement here. The conviction that peace will be maintained is general.

The Rome correspondent of the Times states that the Italian authorities have notified the Bishop of Salerno that his appointment is void, as the patronage of that see is vested in the King, not in the Pope.

The chancellor said to the House of England had agreed to go into the Congress." The chancellor also said he could not enter into details, but he might say that in the Congress each power would maintain liberty of action.

It was not intended that the matter should bind the minority. England will maintain her views in the Congress and will require, before entering it, that every article of the treaty of peace should be placed before the Congress in such a manner that the Congress can judge whether the articles are to be accepted or not.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 14.—At the request of Mr. Layard the Sultan has approved a charter for the Protestants of Turkey similar to that possessed by the Greek Armenian Church.

HAVANA, March 15.—Hon. John E. Leonard, member of the United States House of Representatives from Louisiana, died this morning at the Telegraph Hotel, in this city. He arrived here on the fourth inst. and had engaged passage to return to New York on the ninth, but was taken ill the same day. His illness resulted in yellow fever which terminated fatally. All classes of the community manifested great sympathy for Mr. Leonard, who is only thirty-two years old and highly accomplished. His death is deeply deplored.

ATHENS, March 15.—The Official Journal announces that Russia has rejected the proposal for the admission of Greece to the Congress. Public feeling is consequently much excited against Russia.

LONDON, March 16.—The Pall Mall Gazette has the following dispatch, dated March 16: "The Pope, notwithstanding opposition, has ordered the Italian bishops to legalize their positions, giving them liberty to demand an exequatur from the government. This defines the Papal policy. It means a tacit acceptance of the loss of temporal power."

A Reuter from Constantinople says: Reouf Pasha is empowered to request that Varna be restored to Turkey.

The typhus fever rages at Adrianople and Philippopolis.

There is much sickness at Erzeroum and at Constantinople.

ST PETERSBURG, March 17.—The ratifications of the treaty of peace were exchanged to-day. The conditions will be published as soon as they are communicated to the powers.

Reouf Pasha will depart immediately.

The Agence Russe denies that Russia opposes Greece being represented in the Congress, and adds that the Greek powers alone can advocate a congress. The representatives of secondary and other interested States will be admitted as delegates. In reference to the questions wherein their States are concerned, steps are now being taken for the progressive retiral of the Russian army from Turkey.

LONDON, March 18.—The Times has the following from St Petersburg: The treaty leaves a good many points open. It reserves the question of the straits for the Congress, and leaves the southern frontier of Bulgaria to be determined by the International commission, according to the nationality of the inhabitants.

The question of annexation of the port of Kavala is left to the same commission, and thus serious difficulties on that point are avoided. Lord Derby will probably receive the treaty next Saturday, as a courier for London will leave on Tuesday.

PESTH, March 18.—Bismarck has notified the Austrian government that Russia, in consequence of his intervention, has consented to submit all the peace conditions, without exception, to the Congress for discussion, should the Congress make a demand to that effect.

Baltimore Conference, M. E. Church South

This body, says the Episcopal Methodist, convened at St. Paul's church, in this city, on Wednesday morning, the sixth instant, at half-past nine o'clock, Bishop McTyeire introducing the session with appropriate exercises. The attendance at the opening was unusually large, and the weather most propitious for this uncertain season of the year. Bishop McTyeire presides with his characteristic dignity and administrative tact, occasionally relieved by Bishop Doggett, who has been in attendance since the second day of the session. The latter delivered a most impressive charge to the class of young men admitted on trial.

On Sabbath the pulpits of all the Methodist churches in the city, and several of other denominations, were supplied from the Conference. The day was bright and beautiful, and the attendance upon public worship unusually large. Bishop McTyeire preached in the morning, and Dr. Deems, of New York, at night, to crowded congregations at St. Paul's church. We know not when we have listened to more able discourses. The ordination of deacons was had at the close of the morning services, and of elders at night. Bishop Doggett preached in the morning at Trinity and at Mount Vernon Methodist Episcopal Church at night.

The report of Rev. A. H. Redford, book agent, was referred to the Committee on Publications. It shows the amount limited to the relief of the Publishing House by the Baltimore Conference last year to be $882.50.

Rev. W. W. Walker recently pastor of Printy church, Baltimore, was, at his request, granted a location.

Total collection for domestic missions was $2,152.35; total for foreign missions, $3,611.73; special collections for both foreign and domestic missions, $103.34; from other sources, $826.58; grand total, $6,587. Recapitulated—To amount on hand March 1877, $4,071.58; receipts $6,587; total $7,918.58. By amount applied to missions and special missions $2,940.18; by amount turned over to the Missionary Society, $3,879.40; by cash on hand, $124; total, $7,018.58. As compared with 1877, the collections fell off in all the districts except Baltimore district, where there was a slight increase. The collections for foreign missions increased $223.55, and those for domestic missions fell off $1,502.57, making the net decrease for the year $1,339.02.

At the session on Monday, March 11, the following delegates to the General Conference were elected: Lay—Moses Walton, J. H. Piggatt, C. D. Magruder, E. Hamill, R. B. Prettyman, G. W. Newton, J. B. Wilson, J. A. Carter. Clerical—The following six were elected on the first ballot: Rev. A. W. Wilson, D. D., Rev. John S. Martin, D. D., Rev. Samuel Rogers, Rev. Samuel Regester, D. D., Rev. R. R. S. Hough, D. D., Rev. David Thomas. Two delegates were to be elected the following day. We have no report of the close of the Conference and of the appointments.

Rev. Dr. Bennett, president of Randolph-Macon College, writing to the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist March 2, says:

Our intermediate examinations are over, and we are now in the second term of the session. In numbers we have reached 140, which is 14 above the number reported at the Virginia Conference in November. The students are working well, very well, as may be seen from the reports for five weeks ending December. Taking the whole number of students and giving each four studies, we find that the average is 33d out of 400, which is the standard of perfection. Taking 40 of those who have the best marks the average is 38d. This shows that we have young men here who can and do work.

The New Orleans Picayune of March 17 says: We have the Two Republics of the city of Mexico with dates to the sixteenth ultimo, from which we take the following:

There is considerable commercial movement in Tampico.

The Voz de Mexico having pointed to the arrival of American Protestant missionaries in Mexico as significant of the policy of the American government to sow dissensions among the Mexican people, the Two Republics denies that the American government has anything to do with the sending of missionaries to Mexico.

The Scriptures give four names to Christians taken from the four cardinal graces so essential to man's salvation: Believers, for their faith; saints, for their holiness; brethren, for their love; disciples, for their knowledge.—Andrew Fuller.

The Marvin Memorial Association.

MR. EDITOR: The following extract, from a secular paper in Texas, has been sent to me: "The Christian Advocate contains a statement that Bishop Marvin's family does not solicit a home from the church. The family is in independent circumstances, and one of his sons is a prominent lawyer of St. Louis."

Referring to the above, allow me, as president of the Marvin Memorial Association, to say: 1. The first paragraph in the foregoing extract is true—Bishop Marvin's family has not solicited a home from the church. The movement in the matter originated with, and was inaugurated by, others, and the family knew nothing of it until informed of the plan. Mrs. Marvin and her children then hesitatingly consented to accept a house from the church, should it be offered to them as an expression of love for the ascended husband and father. 2. The second paragraph of the extract—to wit: "The family is in independent circumstances, and one of his sons is a prominent lawyer of St. Louis"—conveys a very erroneous impression. Bishop Marvin did not die insolvent, but his assets were very limited—so limited, indeed, that were his family compelled to purchase or rent a dwelling, their income would be insufficient for their support. The knowledge of this, with other facts, led to the organization of the Marvin Memorial Association whose circular sets forth the case as delicately as possible. Bishop Marvin's only son is quite a young man, and is just entering upon the practice of law. 3. As some of the papers had given forth the opinion that the Bishop's family were in actual destitution, Mrs. Marvin felt aggrieved, and requested her pastor, the Rev. Dr. Wilson, to correct such an impression. She and her children were not destitute, and to receive funds upon such a representation would be to accept help under a false impression. To those who understood the facts in the case, and appreciated the feelings of a most refined and sensitive family, Dr. Wilson's letter appeared most appropriate. He says: "I am requested by Bishop Marvin's family to say, as their pastor, that they are not in destitute circumstances so as to be objects of charity, nor have they consented to be so represented before the church." It seems to me that it should have occurred to the church that the effort now making to secure a home for the family of our deceased Bishop would not have been undertaken had there been no necessity for it.

During his life Bishop Marvin gave to the church, out of his salary, more than enough to have purchased a dwelling for those who cheerfully shared with him a most rigid self-denial, and whom he has left without a home. At one time, for instance, he gave to one of our institutions $3,000, which he paid, within a few years, from his allowance as a Bishop. Only six weeks before his death he gave, for the relief of our Publishing House, $750. I have examined his bank book, and there appears upon it evidence of his having given, within less than two years, hundreds of dollars to young preachers and students, and to benevolent institutions. I do not doubt he gave more to the church, by self-denial and sacrifice, than any other minister in the connection. He impoverished himself, at least partially, that he might assist others.

Knowing these things, and having fallen in the gratitude and generosity of the church, our association confidently made its appeal. The result must now be with those upon whom the claims of a noble life have laid the responsibility.

Let no trivial excuse debar any who may desire to aid us, of the privilege of erecting a stone over the sacred dust of our faithful Bishop Marvin, or of giving a home to those whom he left with us.

We are quite desirous of completing our work by the time the General Conference meets, and we would be pleased to have all our pastors, Sabbath school superintendents and the entire membership of the church forward contributions to us as soon as possible. All papers favorable to the worthy objects we represent will please copy this communication, and otherwise assist us in this labor of love.

J. W. LEWIS,
Pres. Marvin Memorial Association, St. Louis.

Sunday in Washington.

Last Sunday, the third instant, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, was an interesting day in Washington. The morning was threatening—prospects for rain; but about ten o'clock the clouds passed away, and a large congregation assembled at Mount Vernon church to hear Bishop McTyeire, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The Bishop delivered a plain, strong and interesting gospel sermon, which was heard with marked attention. The sermon made a fine impression on the appreciative audience, and hopes are entertained that the good seed will bring forth abundant fruit. At the close of the sermon the Lord's Supper was administered to a large number of communicants. The service was conducted by the Bishop, who was assisted by several ministerial brethren, among whom was the Rev. Mr. King, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. It was pleasant to see Christians of the various churches kneeling together at the same altar, commemorating the love of their Lord and Master Savior. Quite a number of the members of both houses of Congress were in the assembly and at the sacramental table. One of the pleasing incidents was the presence of President and Mrs. Hayes. Both took evident interest in the worship of God. Mr. Hayes is a friend to the Christian cause, and Mrs. Hayes is a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. To see her bowing at God's altar in becoming attire, and showing her sister countrywomen that she loves the Lord Jesus Christ, is an example worthy to be imitated by all classes, the rich and the poor. At the altar on Sunday the North and the South, the East and the West met together; and, "the Lord was the maker of them all."

At four o'clock P. M. the Sunday school met, and was addressed by Bishop McTyeire and Dr. McFerrin. The school is prospering.

At half-past seven o'clock in the evening Dr. McFerrin preached to a large audience, notwithstanding there was the appearance of a heavy rain.

Letter from North Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: The weekly visit of your most excellent ADVOCATE often reminds me that I have several times promised you I would write you occasionally in regard to the state of affairs in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

I prize the ADVOCATE very highly, not only for the general information it contains, but because it is like receiving a communication from one's dearest friends. It is the organ of my old Conference, where the earlier years of my ministry were spent. But, although this subject awakens many pleasant memories of the past, it is not unmingled with sadness. Time has wrought many changes. The noble men who stood in the front rank have nearly all passed away. Of the nine of thirty who were admitted thirty-three years ago, of which I was a member, but two remain in that Conference, and altogether but five are now connected with the itinerancy, one of whom is superannuated.

The last number of the ADVOCATE is peculiarly interesting to me for two reasons: 1. It contains Dr. Andrews' tribute to the memory of our lately deceased Bro. Ross. It is my opinion that no better man ever lived than Bennett Battle Ross. He was my presiding elder while I had charge of Franklin Street church, Mobile, in 1862-3, where I learned to appreciate his high-toned Christian character, and to love him for his kind and generous disposition. There are many people in the bounds of my district who recollect him in his boyhood and early ministerial life, and the universal testimony is as to his purity of character. The end of such a man is peace.

2. Because it contains an able communication from my old friend, Chancellor Dillard, in reference to the notorious Bob Ingersoll's late attack upon Christianity in his attempt to vindicate the character of Tom Paine. It is not that I have any fear as to the result so far as our holy Christianity is concerned, but it is refreshing to see men of the chancellor's ability coming to the front in such times to vindicate the truth. Chancellor Dillard is one of the best writers in this country, and well has he sustained himself in this contest. I hope he may become a regular contributor to the ADVOCATE.

I think I may say that the church in this section is looking up. Preachers were all at their posts soon after Conference, and have generally started off well. Since our political troubles have been settled I think there is a decided tendency to spiritual improvement. I think the people in their impoverished condition show more liberality in contributing to sustain the church than they did when they were rich, and growing richer from year to year. It is true there are many now who fail to do their duty, and so there were then.

I spent a few hours with Bishop Paine at his home a week ago, and found him in tolerable health. He is as much as ever interested for the church, and looks to the meeting of the General Conference as a period of great importance in the history of our church.

There are some other things I would like to say, but editors do not like long communications; so I close wishing you and the ADVOCATE increasing prosperity.

OKOLONA, MISS., March 12, 1878.

Bishop Wiley has organized a Methodist Conference in China. It is divided into five districts, and, besides the missionaries, he stationed 60 native China preachers.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey began a series of meetings in the Boston Tabernacle on the tenth instant, to continue for two weeks, after which they will go to New Haven.

Periodicals

—Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for April is the best number yet issued of this excellent family magazine. The leading article is an elegantly illustrated paper entitled "A Curious City," by Franklin Clase Clark. Mr. James Meffer roll has a curious and interesting article on "Ether." "The Source of Reform," by Mrs. L. E. Brooks of Alabama, ought to be read by every family in the land. Bishop McTyeire's article on Bishop Marvin is a very able paper, above the ordinary range of biographical sketches. Dr. Deems contributes a sermon on "Christ's Cure for Trouble." An amply illustrated and very full article on Pius the Ninth is in this number, which has also a portrait and sketch of his successor, Leo the Thirteenth.

—The March-April number of the International Review has the following articles: Reminiscences of Alexander H. Stephens; Those of Gen. Richard Taylor; Elements of National Wealth; The Mexican of the Mexicans; Some Noted Women of Bologna; The Method of Electing the President; Modern Love; The Relation of Morality to Religion; Silver in Art; Imperial Federalism in Germany; New York and Its History; Contemporary Literature.

—Our Sunday school periodicals for April have been received. The Magazine is unusually rich in contributed articles. Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Granberry and President Starke are among the writers for this number. The Visitor and Little People were never better—paper, illustrations and selections are all of the best. The Magazine, Visitor, Little People—all three—should be in every family and Sunday school.

—The North American Review for March-April, 1878, has: The Army of the United States; English and American Universities Contrasted; Stonewall Jackson and the Valley Campaign; The Death Struggle of the Republican Party; The Position of the Jews in America; The Political Alliance of the South with the West; The Doctrine of Eternal Punishment; Contemporary Literature.

—Appleton's Journal for April has: The American at Work, illustrated; New Ireland; A Visit to the London Cookery School, and other articles, some good, and others objectionable.

—We have received the American Gardener for April. It is a very handsome illustrated quarterly, devoted to gardening. Beach, Son & Co., publishers, New York. Twenty-five cents a year.

—Dison & Co.'s Musical Monthly, No. 10, has been received. It contains six pieces of music and songs. Published monthly by Dison & Co., Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

—Awake, My Soul, to Joyful Lays (O Salutaris Hostia), for contralto or tenor voice, by J. Wiegand, New York. Price, thirty-five cents. We have received a copy.

—The Southern Cultivator for March has been received. It is an excellent number of this superior agricultural journal.

—The Earnest Worker for March—Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va.—has been received.

Bishop Marvin's Biography.

Rev. T. M. Finney D. D., member of the St. Louis Conference, and president of Bellevue Collegiate Institute, Caledonia, Mo., has undertaken this important literary work. He solicits aid in collecting materials for it. The Bishop was known to a great many people, and there are persons in all sections of the Southern country who can contribute items of interest. The following instructions and suggestions may serve as a guide to those who may be disposed to respond to Dr. Finney's request:

Furnish, from personal knowledge or authentic information, incidents of his social intercourse, and of his pastoral and episcopal labors and his public ministrations in regular services, protracted meetings, church dedications, and other special occasions, together with recollections of sermons and addresses.

Give, as accurately as may be, the date and locality of such incidents, and the sources of information and other authentications of them.

Furnish the originals or copies of letters which may be supposed to be of public interest, or illustrative of personal or ministerial character.

All articles, to be of use, must be made before April 15 next—all addressed to Caledonia, Washington county, Mo.

THE SMILE AND THE SIGH.

A lovely smile, which smiled in sadness,
Once hailed upon the passing breeze
A new-born sigh, which elicited in gladness
To give a restless mortal ease.

The smile and sigh soon formed a union—
A union everlasting, blest—
Where by in brotherly communion,
Each worked to give the other rest.

Thus, mutually their toils relieving,
They lived in peaceful light and shade
No petty jealousies conceiving,
Of naught, not even death, afraid.

And when, with friendship still unbroken,
Fate caused them for a time to part,
Each of the other kept a token,
To prove the two were one at heart.

For, smile & sigh to heaven was carried
On angels' golden wings one day,
While, sighing, the smile on earth still tarried,
And sent its charms to lifeless clay.

Till then this world was often dreary,
But since then (so the legend saith)
Death's sigh gives life unto the weary,
Life's smile itself illumines death.

Fasting.

MR. EDITOR: It is not my purpose to write an exhaustive article on the subject of fasting, but to present such a scriptural view of the duty, and, I may add, privilege of fasting as may lead all who desire it to keep an acceptable fast unto the Lord. To fast in a scriptural sense simply means to abstain voluntarily, in a greater or less degree, for a longer or shorter time, from our ordinary food, as our bodily strength and other equally imperious duties will permit; and to devote ourselves more than ordinarily to spiritual meditation, self-examination, and earnest prayer for such special blessings as are most needed, either for ourselves or others. The minds of many tender-hearted Christians are painfully perplexed by not noticing and separating the different sorts of fasting recorded in the Bible, as miraculous fasting, hypocritical and sinful fasting, and such fasting as is acceptable to God and profitable to men. I can only give a few examples of each:

1. Miraculous Fasting.—Moses fasted, on two occasions, forty days and nights without "eating bread or drinking water."—Deuteronomy ix, 9, 18. Elijah also seems to have fasted forty days and nights, after eating an ample meal prepared for him by an angel, on a long journey to Mount Horeb.—First Kings xix, 8. Our Savior also fasted forty days and nights in the wilderness.—Matthew iv, 2. But no Christian is required to keep, or can possibly keep, such fasts as these. The physical nature of those persons was supported by miracle while their minds were wholly absorbed in communion with God.

2. Hypocritical and sinful fasts, such as those mentioned in the fifty-eighth chapter of Isaiah, and by our Savior, Matthew, vi, 16. In these cases, while the celebrants disfigured their faces and ostentatiously assumed a sad countenance that they might "appear unto men to fast," they were guilty of the vilest hypocrisy, for they were systematically neglecting many of the cardinal duties of religion, and indulging in many acts of fraud and oppression toward their fellow-men. Such perverted fasts were very offensive to God, and followed by a curse, but never a blessing.

3. Fasts Acceptable to God and Profitable to Men.—To mention all those recorded in the sacred canon, from Moses to the Apocalypse, would be to quote a large portion of the Bible. Except it were on the day of expiation, Leviticus xvi, 28-31, when the Israelites were to cease from work and afflict their souls, I recollect no stated weekly, monthly or annual fasts appointed by divine authority. I know that the Jews and also many of the heathen observed many stated as well as occasional fasts, but by what authority I do not know. It seems to have been left discretionary with them to fast whenever their spiritual necessities or impending calamities suggested its importance. Under the Christian dispensation we are taught, both by precept and example, to fast, but no fast-days are appointed by inspired authority; we are not told how often we should fast in a week, month or year, nor how long, or how much we should abstain from our ordinary food. We are only told that when we fast we must not be as the hypocrites; but anoint our head and wash our face, so as not to appear unto men to fast, but only unto our Father who is in secret. All other circumstances as to the particular days, number of times, amount and length of abstinence, and other religious exercises connected with it, are left to the enlightened judgment and good conscience of Christians generally. The apostles and primitive Christians, no doubt, observed many well-ordered private fasts, and on extra occasions, involving the public interests of the church, they incidentally set apart days for united and earnest fasting and prayer, as when new preachers were to be ordained, or missionary evangelists sent to foreign lands. Fasting, properly observed, is not only a precious means of grace to individual Christians, but it seems there are certain evils—easily besetting sins, it may be—which cannot be overcome but by prayer and fasting. Christ said to his inquisitive disciples on a certain occasion: "This kind can come forth by nothing but by prayer and fasting." But the great difficulty among Christians is to learn how much and how long they should abstain from food on their fast-days. As there is nothing mandatory in the New Testament on this point, it seems to have been left discretionary with each Christian to decide this matter according to his best judgment. One duty should not be allowed to conflict with or displace another, if it can be avoided; and as there are some duties which cannot be properly discharged when both body and mind are in a state of lassitude from fasting, we should not abstain so much or so long as to render ourselves incapable of discharging other, at least equally imperious, duties. Both the bodily and mental conditions of different persons are so dissimilar that one rule cannot apply to all alike. Daniel's three weeks' abstinence, as recorded in Daniel x, 3, I think, may teach Christians a profitable lesson on the subject of fasting. He says: "I, Daniel, was mourning three full weeks. I ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth." He doubtless ate enough each day—perhaps of pulse or other vegetables—to give him sufficient strength for the discharge of all his onerous duties; but he abstained—that is, he fasted—from "all pleasant bread, flesh and wine;" and we may safely imitate his example. If our physical strength and necessary labors will not allow us to fast entirely from all food until the dinner-hour, we may, at least, abstain from "pleasant bread, flesh and wine," and sweetmeats; only taking a little plain food, while we devote as much of our time as is consistent with other claims upon us to meditation, self-examination and prayer. I have known a few Christians that I thought fasted too much; but I regret to say I have known many more who ignored the duty almost entirely. Christians ought to study the subject thoughtfully and prayerfully in the light of scriptural precept and example, and act according to the best light they have. I know of no scriptural authority for keeping what is called the lental fast of forty days, which is observed by the Roman Catholic and a few Protestant Churches.

FINANCIAL STATISTICS.

MR. EDITOR: In this communication I propose to look at and examine the financial report of the Alabama Conference as regards the salaries of the preachers and presiding elders. In this examination I am aware that figures may not always tell the whole truth. But, then, we must be governed somewhat by the figures furnished in the minutes, or else dispense with such publications. I will now furnish a table of the several districts, with the number of pastoral charges each district embraces, the amount each presiding elder received, with the average pay per pastoral charge, and the whole amount the preachers in charge received, with the average, as follows:

DISTRICT.	Pastoral Charges.	Paid P. E.	Average.	Paid Pr. in Charge.	Average.
Mobile	15	$1,640	$80	$10,700	$801
Greensboro	16	1,304	76	5,325	413
Selma	16	1,307	81	7,180	118
Prattville	14	1,210	80	6,082	343
Montgomery	12	1,278	106	8,307	692
Union Springs	13	1,021	81	5,667	440
Eufaula	13	1,150	101	7,287	561
Marianna	8	701	90	4,692	211

This table shows that the average pay to the presiding elders amounts to $1,111, and that of the preachers in charge to $468. In the Conference 8 stations pay the pastors the sum total of $13,150, making an average of $1,315. Deducting the amount 8 stations pay from the whole amount paid pastors ($72,979) will leave $39,829; making an average, paid to 103 pastors, of $386. The above figures show that 8 presiding elders and 8 preachers in charge of stations receive the total of $22,313, while 103 other pastors receive the total of $39,829.

I will now furnish a table showing the several financial grades of pastoral charges of the districts, omitting the 8 stations just referred to. This gradation will range from the highest point of payment below the lowest point in the 8 stations mentioned, to $800. Excepting the 8 stations, no pastoral charge paid its pastor as high as $800; hence the grades will be counted by hundreds, as follows:

DISTRICT.	Charges.	Paid.	Charges.	Paid.	Charges.	Paid.	Charges.	Paid.	Charges.	Paid.
Mobile	2	$800	...	$700	12	$600	1	$500	2	$400
Greensboro	1	800	...	700	12	600	1	500	4	400
Selma	1	800	2	700	12	600	...	500	2	400
Prattville	1	800	...	700	1	600	...	500	4	400
Montgomery	1	800	1	700	...	600	4	500	1	400
Union Springs	...	800	...	700	2	600	...	500	3	400
Eufaula	1	800	2	700	4	600	3	500	1	400
Marianna	...	800	...	700	...	600	...	500	1	400
Total	6	$4,000	3	$2,700	13	$7,800	10	$5,000	18	$4,000

Deducting the grand total number of preachers (40) embraced in the above table from the 103 (omitting the 8 stations above referred to) will leave 63 pastors in the Alabama Conference who received, last year, less than $400 each. Many of these, dear brethren, had wives and children to care for and support out of this small sum. Verily, some of the faithful cross-bearers are laying up rich treasure in heaven. In Greenville, Ala., 1875, Bishop Marvin said: "In heaven the preacher will have greater rejoicing for having served poor than rich appointments." But who of us think so?

ANGUS DOWLING.

CLAYTON, ALA., March 6, 1878.

Abroad in the World.

While at Dallas I paid Rev. W. C. Young, formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, a short visit. Bro. Armstrong, known to most of us, lives three miles in the country. Col. W. L. Knox, who was once one of our most active and influential laymen while within the bounds of our Conference, is located in this vicinity. Many Louisianians settled there soon after the war, and during the political troubles through which we have passed, and, with others, are sharing the fortunes of the country.

The Texas Central road affords facilities for seeing a very large portion of the State. Entering the cars forty-five minutes after seven o'clock, the day's travel was begun. After a short run we emerged into the prairies, larger, perhaps, than those lying in the vicinity of Sherman. They seemed to "stretch out their arms like seas," and to "grasp in all the shore." High and rolling, they drain themselves well, and offer great inducements to those who wish to locate there. With regard to this particular locality, I conversed with one Texan who seemed inspired with his theme, and even grew eloquent as he discoursed upon its merits. One hundred and seventy-five miles from the northern line of the State, or something near that, the road enters a poor country, much of it woodland, which continues to within a few miles of the gulf. My imagination had painted it otherwise. Numerous towns and villages, thrifty and prosperous, have grown up, as if by magic, along this great thoroughfare of travel. Comfortable farm-houses and good orchards do not adorn and beautify the country, as in the valleys of California or the prairies of Missouri. Comfort is not sought so much by the Texan as vast tracts of land, and large herds of cattle and horses. The most imposing structure I saw by the way was the State Military Institute. It is a model of taste and beauty, and commends itself to those who wish to give their sons a useful education.

Texans are exceedingly jealous of the reputation of their State. Anything in the country or people which will make an unfavorable impression upon the traveler has a ready solution. A new-comer who ventures to write anything which is seemingly derogatory to their estimate of the State, however truthful it may be, is soon made the subject of a scathing editorial, or some one who has time and leisure pays his compliments to it in a correspondence which severely rebukes him for his temerity. Disinterested parties—observers with unbiased minds—see more clearly than those who are blinded by selfish interests, and a degree of ignorance occasioned, in a large degree, by a failure to acquaint themselves with the great and busy outside world. Love for their own State, for their own homes and for their own institutions will cover a multitude of facts unsatisfactory to others; but while travelers have such easy access to the country, those who wish to inform themselves and others as to its advantages and disadvantages will not fail to give a clear and correct statement of these, however earnestly protested against. While Texas is a great and growing State, it is not an Eden, and not likely to be until the fires of the judgment shall have refined and purified it.

Marvin College, under the fostering care of the Northwest Texas Conference, and located at Waxahachie, seems financially to be involved—a debt which was in part, if not altogether, contracted when the building was erected. Dr. Gaskill, one of our local brethren from Louisiana, but now a member of this Conference, is agent for it. We shall be glad to hear, at the end of this Conference year, that the debt has been entirely canceled, and that at the beginning of the coming year the session of an institution bearing the name of so good and great a minister will open with the most favorable auspices.

The "American Bible Union" is a society, as you are aware, whose object is to publish a revised edition of the New Testament, favoring the peculiar tenets of their creed, and especially on the subject of baptism. I met the general agent of this society for the State of Texas. We traveled together some fifty miles on the cars. From him I learned that the society which he represents is still striving to introduce this edition into every household where it is possible to do so. The agent himself has imbibed the same spirit, and with an earnest zeal, worthy of a better cause, is advocating the superior claims of this edition to that of King James. All the denominations are represented in this society, say the advocates of this revision scheme; but it is the grossest perversion of truth to say that any Methodist, Presbyterian, Episcopalian or Congregationalist has gone into the society as the accredited representative of any church named. I soon discovered that it was a sectarian enterprise, not to be defended creditably by any one. This young Goliath is ready to discuss this subject with any accredited minister of the Methodist or any other church. He challenges the Methodist Church to an ecclesiastical combat in any Southern city. If any one of learning and talent desires to accept such a challenge, I would say to him that he is wasting his time. A few crow-shot thrown into the camp of this commander of the host will give him a quietus which will last him until his enemy has gone to some other locality to discharge the duties of a grander mission. On the subject of the new revision we need not have any apprehensions, as even among their own people they have been unable to induce one in a hundred to accept and use it, instead of the one we use, in private, in our families and churches. We are engaged in a great work, and cannot descend to this scheme, which promises no good.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names. Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

IT becomes my painful duty to announce the death of Col. CHARLES WALKER, of Fannsdale, Marengo county, Ala., which sad event took place at his residence on the morning of the first of January, 1878. Col. Walker was born in Burke county, Ga., in the year 1800, and, after spending fifty-three years in his native State, removed to Fannsdale, Ala., where the remaining years of his life were spent. He was one of the grand old men who have lingered to us from a former age—the connecting links between the present and the past—standing almost isolated mementoes, telling an existence of which they are the lingering representatives. He was reared by Christian parents, and in early life had the great truths of the gospel instilled into his mind and heart, and his life began to embody their beauty, and grow symmetrical and lovely beneath their transforming power, until at last the outgrowth was a character which God approved and took unto himself. Though he was a deeply spiritual man, yet he was ever a cheerful Christian. His religion made his soul instinct with life, aglow with hope and radiant with joy. His light shone before men, and such was its beauty and loveliness and brilliance that men were attracted by it, and won to the cross from whence the light had streamed upon his own heart. His home was a realm over which love reigned in undisputed empire, and from which there radiated the kindly beams of purity and peace and joy, and to which they all converged, as to a congenial and common center. The weary itinerant there found a sweet asylum from the dust and toil of the outside world, and, wrapped in the embrace of its holy associations, he sometimes felt that he had found an Eden into which the serpent had never entered.

Col. Walker was a man whose heart was large, whose sympathies were catholic, active in all the just and manly enterprises of life, but who reserved his intensest love and solicitude for the church of God. It was here that his generous nature found a theater for the full and grateful play of all its consecrated powers. Into this sacred treasury the wealth of his being was cast. All that he was, all that he had was God's. He recognized himself a steward, not a proprietor, and his life's endeavor was to make the most of what he held in trust for the good of his fellow-man and the glory of his God. From the time that his heart was given to God, and his life consecrated to his service, nothing caused him to swerve from the path of duty, or falter in his allegiance to the faith once delivered to the saints. Even in the time of his prosperity—when he seemed to have found the alchemy by which all that he touched was transmuted into gold, when lord of broad lands and affluent in all that the world prescribes as essential to happiness and honor—he was the same earnest, faithful, loving, winsome Charles Walker; and when, during the long night that empaled our land and filled with its darkness our sunny homes from 1861 to 1865, his earthly effects were swept away as by the besom of destruction, he remained firm in his faith. The current of his being set to God. His desires and labors and efforts were uniformly toward heaven, and all things, whether prosperous or adverse, were made subsidiary to the glory of God, and the shaping of his own character after the perfect standard of the Master. He was indeed a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, who grasped the promises of God with a holiness which brooked not anything like misgiving, and who lived in intimate communion with him. And it was this intimacy with the Divine, this habitual waiting upon God, that was the secret of his power, of his triumph in adversity, and that fortified him for the last dread trial, which, though agonizing, was by God's grace the last ordeal, through whose refining fires he was to be prepared for a faultless presentation in the presence of his glory.

About three years before his death he noticed the formation of a peculiar growth near the salivary gland of the right cheek. It caused a little apprehension in his own mind and in the minds of friends, which, however, was soon allayed by his physician who informed him that it was produced by irritation from the pipe-stem, and would speedily disappear on his desisting from the use of tobacco. He did so; but the growth continued to develope until it had well-nigh filled the entire inner surface of the cheek. A visit to a very eminent physician of Atlanta, Ga., disclosed to him and his astonished family that it was a malignant type of cancerous tumor, which would terminate fatally at an early day. He met this shocking announcement with calm courage, and with Christian submission returned home to suffer and die. It was our privilege to be with him much during the last few months of his sojourn here; and, though fierce was the sting of his affliction, we ever found him the rich possessor of that firm trust in God which had so beautifully characterized his long and useful life, and which, at last wreathed his dying lip with a smile, and lit up his pallid face with a glory which mantled down upon it from the throne. As illustrative of his resignation and his confidence in God, we recall a conversation had with him several months before his death. As we stood upon the door-step one mild morning, when the unrisen sun lay in soft radiance upon leaf and flower, and all nature seemed instinct with life and joy, he said: "It is very sad that I am so afflicted; but this sadness would deepen into despair did I not know that the hand of the Almighty was in it. This reconciles me to my fate, and I am ready to suffer and die if God wills it. And at this moment, were he to call, like a child I would answer: 'Father, here am I.'"

It was not until the morning of the first of January that his Father called. The young year was scarce three hours old when the chariot came and the hero, tried by the conflicts of seventy-seven years, went home like a plumed warrior, to be ranged in his Master's kingdom. "He rests from his labors, and his works do follow him."

HIS FRIEND AND PASTOR.

DIED, in the city of Baton Rouge, December 1, 1877, SARAH J. USHER, wife of the late W. J. Usher, Esq. Her maiden name was Barrow. She was married to Mr. Usher in December, 1837. She joined the Methodist Church before she was married, and died in the faith. She loved to talk of her life before and just after marriage—of the dear old times she used to have at camp meetings, and of Uncles Winans, Pipkin, Clinton and Pipes. In raising her family, her children were deprived of religious influences; but she always instructed them at home on Sabbath, encouraged them in reading good and useful books, and always took the ADVOCATE and Sunday School Visitor. It was her delight, when her children were small, to gather them around her and read to them the children's column. She taught her children that to read a chapter in the Bible and say their evening prayer was the last thing to be thought of at night before retiring to rest. With some of her children this habit is so strong that it is impossible for them to sleep without first performing this duty. In her latter days she enjoyed but few religious privileges, and was debarred the opportunity, so highly esteemed by many more favorably situated, of attending church regularly. Her last illness was attended with much suffering. At the time of her death her home was near Greenwell Springs, in East Baton Rouge parish. She went to Baton Rouge on business on the nineteenth of November. After arranging her business to her entire satisfaction, she started home on the twenty-third of November. The Comite was so swollen that it was impossible for her to cross. She returned to Baton Rouge, thinking it would be better, if she had to remain from home, to be with one of her daughters, who is living in Baton Rouge. She went to bed that night apparently in perfect health. The next morning (Saturday) she was unable to rise, and requested that her old family physician should be sent for. The physician smiled at what he termed her fears, for she told him she feared it was her last sickness. On Sunday and Monday she seemed much better. On Friday evening her sufferings were so intense that she prayed to be released. One of her daughters begged her not to pray to die, but to pray to live, adding: "Ma, the world is a blank to me without you." The answer came, accompanied by a sad, sweet smile: "I want to die, for the good One is with me." If I live the evil one might be with me." On Friday night she lay in a state of semi-consciousness; seemed to be holding communion with unseen persons, and repeated part of the fourth verse of the forty-sixth psalm: "There is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of our God." Also the fifth verse of the twenty-second chapter of Revelation: "And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light; and they shall reign forever and ever." One of her daughters, seeing that she spoke with difficulty, and knowing that it gave her pleasure to have her favorite chapters read to her, repeated the twenty-second psalm, which was one of her favorites. It seemed to give her pleasure, and she instantly said: "The precious blood of Jesus, which cleanseth us from all sin!" Her daughter then asked: "Ma, is Jesus with you?" She answered: "Oh, yes, he is with me." She then seemed lost or unconscious of her surroundings, murmured the words, "Mary, Mary, pure and good" (Mary was the name of one of her children who had preceded her to the spirit-land,) talked of the holy city, the new Jerusalem, and said "Here we have no abiding home; but see that one which is to come." She told her children to meet her there. On Saturday, December 1, she breathed her last. Rev. Mr. Goodwyn, the pastor at Baton Rouge, came to see her on the day of her death. He sang to and prayed with her, but she was unable to articulate. She tried so hard to make her daughter understand what she had to say to them; but it was impossible. They only knew that she was calling the names—that she could not bear for one of them to leave the room. The last words they heard her utter distinctly were: "Almost home in glory!" To the last she raised her hand in token of victory.

A DAUGHTER.

DEATH OF MRS. A. C. MITCHELL, JR.

MRS. SUSIE DAWSON MITCHELL died in Glennville, Ala., January 6, 1878, aged twenty-four years. She was the young child of the late Rev. Dr. Thomas H. Dawson, of blessed memory. In many elements of her character she was strikingly like him—so gentle, so loving, so patient, so considerate. Never was a daughter reared with more thoughtful tenderness and care. From childhood, prayers and pious counsel and pure examples surrounded and blessed her. These, by divine help, shaped her opening life, and gave cast to her character, and were sanctified to her salvation. Her early piety saved her from the frivolities of fashionable life, and from the dissipations of depraved society. She was admired and petted and courted, for she was bright and beautiful; flattery dropped its vain, false words in her ear; for her society spread its snare, and lured with syren tongue; but neither all, robbed her young heart of its spiritual freshness, nor changed her pure spirit from its consecration to Christ. Young womanhood found her only maturing into greater steadfastness and better symmetry. Brighter and more steadily shone the light which Providence seemed specially to have placed "upon a candlestick, that it might give light unto all that are in the house."

In 1873 she found the companion of her heart's choice, and on the twenty-third of October she was most congenially married to Mr. A. C. Mitchell, Jr., at Glennville, Ala. Five years of happy married life followed. Two sweet children blessed them; one preceded her. When, at length, the end of this beautiful life is reached, the happy loving wife, the devoted mother, the fond child, the tender, clinging daughter must depart and be with Christ. The summons came suddenly, but it only caused the pain to be shorter. That fearful scourge, diphtheria, swept over the community. She, among many others, was attacked, and after days of suffering Jesus took her. The triumph of that timid, shrinking soul, as she consciously dying! Fear was taken away, and she talked of dying as a pleasant journey. Grace lifted her out of herself, so she was enabled to bid farewell to husband, mother, brother and sisters with calmness and joy. It was wonderful to behold. Oh, the all of grace. Let us thank God and take her.

Also, little MERRIE SUSIE, only child of Americus C. Mitchell, Jr., aged twenty months, died in Glennville, Ala., February 1878. Only three weeks before, the mother, Mrs. Susie Dawson Mitchell, passed into rest. How great this bereavement!

DIED, in Coryell county, Texas, December 21, 1877, Mr. J. THOMAS MCGREGOR, aged forty-eight years.

The deceased was born in Grant county, N. C., lived many years in Claiborne parish, La.; and removed to Coryell county some eight or ten years since, where he made his home until his death.

He had been a professor of religion and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for many years, and exemplified in his life and dealings with his fellow-men that his religion was a principle which was neither periodic nor spasmodic. While it afforded him peace and joy, it exhibited the fruits in life as enabled all who knew him to say of him praise for well-doing. He was a man of quiet and reserved manners, was most esteemed by those who knew him best; served his day and generation; lived to purpose, and for heaven. He never married; leaves no only brother, T. F. Maugum, of the Alabama Conference, as the only survivor of his immediate family. No mother, sister or brother was present to minister to him in his last moments; but the hand of friendship was there, and kind ones to minister. The hope that comforted in life satisfied him until life's sun went down, and his spirit returned to God, who gave it.

H. H. HARE.

EDNA MITCHELL, daughter of the late Capt. Julius C. Mitchell, died of diphtheria, in Glennville, Ala., February 1878, aged five years and ten months. She was the pet of the family, and was an unusually sweet and interesting child. Our children are not lost, but gone before. If we would find them we must look where God reigns and angels dwell.

I used to observe that what was called "natural fruit" in my grandfather's orchard was poor stuff, only for the swine. The valuable fruit was on grafted limbs. So the natural fruit of the human heart is sinful and worthless; it requires the ingrafting of a new principle—the divine grace to yield the fruits of the Spirit. Whoever prefers to live without God, and to follow the devices and desires of his own heart, will have his teeth set on edge by and by when he has to eat what he has been growing and storing up.—T. L. Cuyler.

A venerable physician of Philadelphia, Dr. Condie, the author of a work on diseases of children, would not keep a carriage, notwithstanding his large practice, and is made responsible for this mot: "If a doctor drives one horse, it indicates physical weakness; if he drive two, mental weakness."

A statesman, we are told, should follow public opinion. Doubtless so; but a coachman follows his horses—holding firm hold on the reins and guiding them.—Hare.

SONNET.

In pitiless gloom, when earth lies shivering cold,
And lessening summer-squares with annoy
Are bordered, while the streams impetuous flow,
Mad with escape from durance, waxen bold;
When sounding winds forth sally from the wold,
Bride willi fierce wings the rainy air, and go
Back to their sounding caves, a coward foe;
And life peers out of darkness manifold—
Upleaps the ghost of pain. I hear the groan
Wring from my palsied heart as the froth fell—
Swift darkness, where my noon of bliss had shone.—
And, with clinched hands, parched lips and prayer, "Farewell"
I breathed—henceforth to walk to woe and moan—
Hope gone, heart dead—and hear their funeral knell!

Variety in the Structure of the Bible.

Observe the important consequences of this constant variety in the literary structure of the Bible.

It becomes, by reason of it, a universal book; since there is no tribe or nation that does not enjoy story, song, parable, eloquence; that does not therefore welcome the Bible, as opening to it new realms of thought, presenting that thought in the most engaging and fascinating forms, and giving the mind intellectual gratification, while tending all the time to irradiate and renew the moral nature. There is almost no other Oriental book which is valued and sought in the Western world. But this is just as familiar to the Western mind, as congenial to it, as if it had been prepared in Europe. There is no other book, read studiously in Europe, which is read with equal interest and gladness in the Society Islands, in India, China and among the barbarians of South Africa, just emerging from their dense darkness. But the Bible goes to the African as to the European; goes to the islander of the sea, to the Chinaman and the Hindoo, to the Indian and the Arab, as well as to the citizen trained by schools, expert in business, in these United States. There is, of course, a certain local color in it which makes the missionary who reads it in the East, and who interprets it into the Arabic—which makes the traveler, reading it in the East, among the localities where its writings first found their life and form—appreciate the beauty and the wonder of it the more. But it is, beyond all others, a universal book; and largely by reason of this amazing many-sidedness of its literary constitution.

Then it is also a comprehensive and commanding book, as addressed to any individual student; because it appeals to each faculty of the mind, interests all, and leaves none unchallenged. It appeals to men in all moods of their feeling. It appeals to them in all stages of their life, from childhood onward, through maturity, until the extremest limit of age. It appeals to them thus not merely by reason of the substance of the truth which it communicates, but also of his variety of means by which it conveys it—in song and story, in law and proverb, in parable, argument and lofty vision. Every faculty of the mind is therefore addressed by it, and is also gratified by it. We are sometimes in trouble because certain parts or passages of the Bible are less interesting to us, at least in certain moods of feeling, than they have been before; are not as interesting to us now as they were when we were children; or have lost the celestial glow which was upon them when we read them with tears and with triumph in our grief. But the Bible is intended to furnish something for every mood, the most sorrowful and the most cheerful, when the soul is sunken in grief, and when it is rising in new-born ecstasy of strength and hope. It has parts for the little child, and parts for the aged. It is the only book in the world, because it is the only one which has this marvelous completeness of constitution, which the little child and the venerable grandparent will gladly sit down and read together; which is at home in the Sunday school, and equally at home in the highest university; which the most disciplined mind can never exhaust, yet which the youngest and most immature can find full of attraction, instruction, inspiration. This, by reason of the marvelous manifoldness of its literary structure, as well as by reason of the grandeur and the glory of that system of truth which is evermore contained within it.

Observe too, what an educating book it becomes by reason of this astonishing variety in its constitution. It requires a man to match one part against another; to read the poem in the light of the narrative; to interpret the argument by the light of that revelation of the Son of God which is given in the four matchless, divine biographies of him; to interpret the primitive precept, even, under the radiance of that final vision of judgment which flashes its startling splendor on us from the great white throne; to interpret Christ's declaration of forgiveness by the miracles which he works, and the doctrine of sanctification by the Spirit by the crystalline pagen of the golden streets of the new Jerusalem. We are to analyze and annihilate and reconcile parts, to bring one into a close comparison with another, so that out of all we may derive the ultimate truth which God could give us in the Scriptures. The flower and the oak, the forest and the stream, the southwest and the ocean, are alike parts in this manifold Bible; and we cannot fully comprehend one without considering all. So it comes to be a book which educates the mind as no other can; which tasks every faculty in it; which requires in its student a moral state sympathetic with his from whom it comes, and which requires our care of perusal, from end to end, in order that we may wholly understand it.—R. S. Storrs

When a man is "rooted to the spot" by fear, does he branch out before he leaves?

Passages of the Straits.

The first recorded passage of the Dardanelles was the celebrated one effected by Leander, at a period of which neither Virgil nor any of the numerous poets who celebrate the feat have furnished the date. But the earliest attempt to pass these straits was that of the unfortunate Princess Helle, who endeavored to cross on the Ram with the Golden Fleece from Europe to Asia, and whose name has since clung to the sea in which she was drowned. Every one knows, but some will perhaps not object to being reminded, that Leander lived at Abydos, on the Asiatic side of the Hellespont, and Hero, the Pagan nun, of whom he had become enamored, on the European side, at Sestos. The procession in which the young priestess of Venus figured on the memorable occasion when Leander gazed upon her for the first time might easily have been seen from the opposite shore; and with a good glass—which, however, Leander would have been unable to procure—the features of Hero herself might have been distinguished. The channel at its narrowest point is considerably less than a mile, and, according to some estimates, less than half a mile across. The distance has been variously put down at 500 paces, 875 paces, and about a mile. Gibbon says 500 "paces"—meaning, apparently, by "pace," not the ordinary modern pace of two feet, but the ancient Roman pace of five feet. A respectable French authority says 875 "paces," but without defining the word "pace." If, as has been generally calculated, the distance across at the narrowest part of the Dardanelles is about equal to the distance across at the narrowest part of the Bosphorus, then 600 yards may be adopted as the correct measurement. These are the figures of the late Gen. Cheney in regard to the latter channel, arrived at after an actual survey. A swim of 600 yards would not, and doubtless did not, fatigue Leander in fine weather; for each night he made the return passage. He had, however, to strive against a powerful current, and but for Hero's flaming torch, which he must have kept constantly in view, he would have landed, as Lord Byron did, some centuries later, a few miles lower down than the point for which he had been making. Perhaps, however, in Leander's time this current did not exist; or his lifeless body would not one fatal night have been washed ashore, not far from the temple to which the now distracted Hero was attached. Besides the Princess Helle, and at a more recent period Leander and the priestess Hero, several sailors belonging to Admiral Duckworth's expedition in the year 1807, are known to have been drowned in the Hellespont. Xerxes, too, must have lost a certain percentage of his 1,700,000 men, all told who went over from Abydos to Sestos; and some of the accidents inevitable in such cases must have happened to the troops of Alexander the Great, when a portion of the infantry and all the cavalry of his army passed from Sestos to Abydos. Nor can the Turks in crossing to Sestos, when in 1357 the crescent was first planted on European soil have been exempt from such misfortunes as, in the conveyance of large bodies of men over water, are sure to be caused by leaky boats, badly constructed rafts and kicking horses.

It need scarcely be said that the first passer of the Bosphorus from shore to shore was Io, transformed into a heifer through the amorous persecutions of Jupiter, and driven into the sea by the maddening attacks of a gadfly. It has already been mentioned that across this branch of the great historical and mythological canal, which from Agamemnon's siege of Troy at one end to Mohammed the Second's seige of Constantinople at the other, has been the scene of such world-important conflicts, the army of Darius crossed. The only entry of a military force from the Black Sea into the Bosphorus since the time of Constantine's Black Sea enemies, the pirates occurred in 1833 when the Russians after making explanations on the subject to the Western powers, occupied the Turkish capital in a friendly manner with the view of guarding it against the Sultan's rebellious vassal, the Viceroy of Egypt.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Earthquakes.

1. Earthquake annals inform us that in the 1,707 years previous to the Christian era there were 58 earthquakes, 1 of which only were disastrous.

2. During the next 900 years, to the end of the ninth century, 197 earthquakes occurred, and 15 only were disastrous.

3. During the next 900 years, to the end of the fifteenth century, 535 earthquakes occurred, 44 of which were disastrous.

4. During the next 300 years, to the end of the eighteenth century, 2,811 earthquakes occurred, and 190 were disastrous.

5. During the first 50 years of this century, to 1850, there occurred 3,240 earthquakes and 53 were disastrous.

This rapid and steady increase of earthquakes in past ages, and especially since the Christian era is a remarkable fact, and worthy of attention. Mr Mallet records less than 7,000 down to the year 1850; but Mr. Austed, the English geologist, and M. Perry of France, have tabulated over 7,000 previous to that date. The occurrence of 3,240 in a period of only 50 years is truly remarkable. At this average number, in 16 years (from 1850 to 1866) we have over 1,000 more, thus swelling the number to more than 8,000. Of destructive or great earthquakes, he writes Ponton "the number registered to the end of 1865 is 231, only 3 of which occurred before the birth of Christ." Our blessed Savior, who perfectly knew, said: "There shall be earthquakes in divers places" (Matthew 24. 7,) and the prediction has been wonderfully fulfilled ever since.

The next two years (1867 and 1868) surpassed all others in the number of destructive and other earthquakes. Mitylene was destroyed April 3, 1867, and 1,000 lives were lost. We (the writer) saw it in ruins a few days after, and the people living in tents. During the single year 1868 it has been estimated that "more than 100,000 souls perished by these unparalleled convulsions." In these two awful years (1867 and 1868) it was estimated that the total number of earthquake shocks felt in all parts of our globe were not less than 4,000. In the month of January, 1860, 11 earthquakes were registered. In the single month of September, 1840, Prof. E. Merriam chronicled the occurrence of 20 earthquakes in all parts of the globe. "In California no earthquake of any note took place from 1812 to 1850. From 1850 to 1868 over two hundred shocks were counted, or one for every month." Baron Humboldt, in his "Cosmos" of 1845, says: "If we could obtain daily intelligence of the condition of the whole surface of the earth, we should very probably arrive at the conviction that this surface is almost always shaking at some one point, and that it is incessantly affected by the reaction of the interior against the exterior."

Old Mother Earth has been in painful, convulsive throbs and shudderings ever since man lost Eden, and sin and rebellion against God entered the world; and though the evidence of the terrible guilt and trouble has been increasing for nearly 6,000 years, yet learned skeptics and infidels do not believe it. They would not, perhaps, if one rose from the dead! It would seem that Paul was a good geologist when he wrote (Romans 8, 22:) "We know that the whole creation groaneth, and travaileth in pain together until now."

We have seen the terrible ravages of earthquakes in distant lands, but received our deepest impressions of earthquake power by examining the locality at Lisbon years since, where 30,000 persons lost their lives in a few minutes, in November, 1755, or 122 years ago. The morning was calm and serene. It being Saints' day, the cathedral church was filled and candles lighted. Suddenly the earthquake came. Crowds rushed to the quay or wharf, lined with vessels and filled with people. In a moment all sunk down out of sight into the yawning chasm. The edifice took fire and consumed many.

These few facts are not new, but they may refresh the minds of our readers. Earthquakes have a terrible history of disasters, with impressive lessons. They all point to the final convulsion of the last, tremendous scene of earth.—New York Observer.

Unsuccessful Workers.

Despondent Christians do not make successful workers or valiant soldiers. "Feeble hearts," and "ready-to-halts," and "little faiths," win no battles and wear no crowns. They are so occupied with themselves, with their own experiences, with their own feebleness, with their ricocheting moods and feelings, that they have no time for manly, noble service. They are so busy in trying to perform "acts of faith," and in trying to feel them, they are so intent on analyzing them, in order to ascertain whether they be all of the exact quality and quantity which will recommend them to God, that they have no space for "joy in believing," and no room for the free, large-hearted labor which such joy, calling out to lend to, passed up and down on the waves of unbelief, like Paul's ship in Adria, they are in fear of perpetual shipwreck, and have no heart to work. Shutting their eyes against the light, they grope their way uncertainly, and cannot run the race. Afraid to believe, but not afraid to doubt; afraid to trust, but not afraid to distrust; doubting themselves and making a reason for doubting God, putting away peace, but giving full scope to gloom; refusing light, but letting darkness reign within them—they are not in condition to do hard work; nay, to do any work. Strength comes from joy, and of that joy they have none. They refuse both food and medicine, and they become lean and sickly. They are fitter for the hospital than the battle field. They seem, too, to get more and more emaciated, though the food provided is abundant. Laboring under what the physicians call atrophy the more they eat, the less they seem to be fed.—Horatius Bonar.

Roots and Branches.

A pioneer goes west and settles on a new piece of land. Everything is to be done. His wife begs for a little flower-bed and a kitchen garden. "Not this year," is the husband's reply. "I have too much that must be done; the trees to be felled, the stumps to be rooted out, the sod to be broken up, the log-house to be made more comfortable." The next year the wife repeats the request and gets the same answer. At length by the third or fourth year, the husband says to his wife in the spring: "Now you can have a kitchen garden if you want it, and even a flower-bed, if you care for such notions." The first thing was the essentials; vegetables for the table and the flowers came afterward.

So men imagine that religion is the culmination of moral culture. They suppose that they must begin with morals and go up to religion.

The immoral man says: "After I have ceased to do evil and learned to do well; after I have broken up the habit of profanity, after I have got control of my appetite, after I have broken in my temper, after I have the great over-mastering habits cleared and the small underbrush of petty vices grubbed up, then I will begin to cultivate the higher graces—I will see about getting religion."

But that is not the New Testament teaching concerning religion. Religion is the beginning, morality the consummation; religion the root, morality the fruit; religion the seed, morality the tree. Except a man be born again he cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. After the cradle comes the growth; you are to be religious that you may be moral, not moral that you may be religious.—Lyman Abbott.

Religious Intelligence.

—Bishop Gobat recently held an ordination service at Jerusalem, at which three natives were ordained deacons and three priests.

AUSTRIA.—The Old Catholics have imperial permission, at last, to organize churches, conduct public worship and administer church discipline. Now let us see whether they will do it.

—Princeton Theological Seminary (Presbyterian) numbers 114 students, of whom thirty-seven are in the senior class. Union Theological Seminary (also Presbyterian, New York) reports 115, with 45 in the senior class.

—In some portions of Sweden there has been a powerful revival, which began in efforts to promote temperance. The Baptist, Methodist and Lutheran Churches co-operated in the work, the pastors of all working unitedly.

—The largest foreign field of the Church Missionary Society is in India, where it has 73 stations, 120 European missionaries, 95 native clergy, 2,400 native teachers, 1,070 schools, 13,000 scholars, 78,000 native Christians. Last year there were no less than 1,230 adult baptisms. The work, which absorbs nearly half of the society's large income, is carried on in twelve or fourteen different languages.

—Whitefield's latest successor in the Tottenham Court Road chapel, London, is the Rev. Thomas Nicolson. This is the charge which the Rev. Llewellyn D. Bevan left a year ago to come to the Brick church, New York. The edifice, which is peculiarly ugly, was built in 1756 from Whitefield's own plans, and the dedication sermon preached by him. It was here, too, that his funeral sermon was preached by one of the Wesleys. Mr. Nicolson's pastorate began January 6.

—A missionary writes from German Switzerland: "In Frauenfeld I was just in time to be present at the Sunday school conference of the whole canton, held every half year. It was stated that there were thirty Sunday schools in that canton, while a few years ago this work was almost unknown. Smaller meetings in four different parts, as well as some calls in private families, proved to me that Sunday schools were at the present time the principal means of evangelization in this canton, and often were paving the way to the preaching of the word."

—At the time Bishop Cheney left the Episcopal Church and united with the Reformed Episcopal, suit was brought to prevent him from officiating as rector of Christ Church parish, Chicago, and to prevent the new organization taking its property out of the Episcopal Church. The case has just been decided, in the Supreme Court of Illinois, in favor of the Reformed Church. Mr Chief Justice Scofield, in delivering the opinion of the court, says that "the entire control of the property, moving, etc., and the employment of the rector, is vested in the parish or congregation, and that the case, as made, fails to show any trust in favor of the particular faith, tenets or practices of appellant, but leaves the entire use, disposition and control of the property in the parish or congregation."

MISSION WORK IN UTAH.—During the past fourteen years all the Christian sects have built up schools in various parts of Utah, the mere moral influence of which has created a universal desire among the people for better and larger educational facilities. So strong has this desire become in the hearts of the people that they demand free schools to-day, and if the Mormon priesthood does not yield to the demand it will inevitably be overborne. St. Mark's (Episcopal) school in Salt Lake City and the Salt Lake Collegiate Institute (Presbyterian) are both admirable institutions, the former instructing an average of 300 scholars and the latter 150. The aggregate attendance throughout the Territory in the schools of both denominations is in the vicinity of 1,000. The Methodists also have several institutions, the leading one—the Rocky Mountain Seminary—numbering some 200 scholars. In the face of this work, all the time on the increase, the gigantic Mormon error must some day go down.

—The Baptist missionaries in Burmah have opened a mission among the Padoung tribe, a people numbering about 50,000. The tribe consists of two divisions, one of which is noted for the excessive ornamentation of its women. Sometimes a woman will have not less than thirty pounds of brass wire coiled around her neck and legs. The hair is also done up in a very elaborate style, with pulls, silver shields, and large headed silver pins, with chains attached. "Moung Shwa dee, who is aided by the Cranston Street church, Providence, R. I., was the first man to undertake work among the Padoungs. A man, becoming very angry with his wife, deserted his village, and, in his wanderings stopped at a Gee Kha village, where Moung Shwa dee was then pastor. From him he heard the gospel believed, and became anxious for his own people. He returned home and there preached the gospel, and soon a few of the principal men went to call Moung Shwa dee to become their teacher. Returning with them, he found them surrounded by savage enemies; but God gave him power with the people and he soon restored peace. He gathered a large school, which has continued to the present, and in which scores of this tribe have learned to read parts of the Bible understandingly. In my last visit I listened with delight to their singing of gospel hymns, as sweetly sung as any I have heard in Burmah among the natives. They appear to have a peculiar talent for music." The Rev. A. Bunker, who writes this for the Baptist Missionary Magazine, recently visited the tribe, and organized the first church among them of eleven members. There are several schools in operation, and native evangelists of other tribes go from village to village preaching the gospel. Many villages are now asking for teachers.

Our Young People.

AN APOLOGY FOR "CHRISTINE," OUR OLD CAT.

A red bird, in the summer time,
Her pretty nest had made,
And in the soft and mossy bed
Three little eggs were laid.
And day by day she cherished them
With tender, loving care,
Not knowing of the danger that
Would soon befall her there.
Ere long the little birdies came—
Three tiny, helpless things,
So ugly too!—no feathers on
Their backs or on their wings.
But, daily cared for, daily fed,
I knew they soon would be
As pretty, and as joyous too,
As birdies get to be.
The nest was in a rose-bush made,
Embowered 'mid leaves and flowers
Protected from the noonday heat,
And from the summer showers.
The mother-bird and little ones
Were happy all day long,
I hear chirping voices answering to
Her sweet and merry song.
I went one day to see the nest—
The little birds were gone!
And on a tree close by I saw,
The old bird—all alone!
No joyous note now filled the air,
So frightened? there she sat;
For close beside me, on the ground,
Was "Christine"—our old cat!
'Twas she who tore the nest away.
But she is not to blame;
For cruel, wicked boys, I know,
Have often done the same.
It was her instinct led her there,
And she would go again,
Yet never know or think that she
Had caused the poor bird pain.
So we must all forgive her for
The sorrow she has brought,
And when cats begin to reason,
Then, perhaps, she can be taught.

Note from the Editor.

We have a great many letters on hand from our little friends—many more than we can publish. We scarcely know how to select. We shall continue to publish such as inclose a subscription to the ADVOCATE. Some others may appear occasionally. But in order to find room for selected articles the most of the little letters will necessarily be delayed, and, perhaps, not published at all. The editor is always gratified to hear from his little friends, and only regrets that their letters cannot all be published.

From Our Little Friends.

HERMOSA, TEXAS, March 2, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I see but few letters from the Lone Star State. If some of your little readers could come here they would see many curiosities, at least they are curiosities to me, and I have been here nearly a year. We have centipedes, tarantulas, stinging scorpions, horned frogs, prairie chickens, mule rabbits, besides a great many other things that I had never heard of until my papa moved to Texas.

I am going to school. Papa is my teacher. He says that I am doing very well for an eight-year-old boy.

We have no Sunday school, but think we will have one soon. My parents are members of the Methodist Church. Mr. Blue is our preacher in charge, and Mr. Musset our presiding elder. Your friend,

M. D. L. PHILLIPS.

ASCENSION, Iberville Co., LA., March 11, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I read the ADVOCATE every week. The last ADVOCATE has no letter from the little folks. Perhaps you have room for a short letter from me. I live in the quiet village of Brewersville. We have a large academy, two nice churches, and a good evergreen Sabbath school. We are blessed with many kind neighbors. They say times are hard and money is scarce; but it is pleasant to know that we have love for each other. Rev. J. W. McCabe is our pastor. He is such a good man. With much love to all your little readers, I bid you God-speed.

From your little friend,

CORA ELLA HANE.

PARKER COUNTY, TEXAS, March —, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing you publish so many letters from children, I thought I would write a little. I love to read the ADVOCATE, and especially the Child's Corner. Pa moved from Perry county, Ala., to this place in 1875. I do not like Texas as well as Alabama. We have but little preaching, and, I fear, less religion. Bro. Stovall is our new pastor. I like him very much, and trust he may be the means of my becoming a Christian this year. I will ask your little readers one question: Who found the mules in the wilderness?

Respectfully,

JOHNNIE L. HOPKINS.

A Fisher Lad's Life.

One morning, some eighteen or twenty years ago, there was found on a door-step in London a basket. The basket was taken inside the house and opened, while all the family stood eagerly looking to see what it contained. When the lid was lifted a strange sight met the eyes of the people, for inside the basket lay a little baby boy as comfortably as Moses laid in the ark of bulrushes in the far-away times of which we have all read. Many exclamations greeted the discovery, and very soon the baby began to cry for food. Some milk was given to him, and then those who had found the treasure wondered what should be done with him.

"There is only one thing to do," said the father of the family. "We cannot keep the little stranger, for we are too poor. He must go to the work-house."

At that moment a policeman was passing, and they called him in and told him all about it. He carefully examined the clothing of the child to see if there were any marks by which the parents might be discovered; but there were none, and it soon became evident that the poor little boy had been left there by those who cared nothing for him, and never meant to claim him.

"You must come with me," said the policeman, "and we will give him into the care of the work house authorities."

This was done, and the little castoff child found a home. But he had not been there long when a new difficulty arose. The boy must have a name, but, since his parents were unknown, what could they call him? This was a puzzle. But after a time somebody suggested that since he had no name he should be called Charlie Noname; and so he was.

I am afraid it is not a very happy life which little children live in work-houses, and Charlie Noname was no happier than the rest. He would, almost certainly, have been glad to change places with any of the little readers of this story, if that had been possible; but there was nothing for him to do but to stay there for several years, going to school as soon as he was old enough, and being as good as he could under the circumstances. After a few years Charlie was old enough to go to sea, and it was decided that to sea he should be sent. He was not sorry to leave the only home he had known, for it had not been like the comfortable homes which so many of you enjoy; and he had a boy's love of adventure, and thought it would be a really splendid thing to make a voyage, though he found afterward that it was not by any means as pleasant as he imagined. He went with a number of other boys to Hull, from which town he was to be sent out to the fisheries. A very happy thing occurred to him as soon as he arrived at Hull, for a lad spoke to him and gave him an invitation.

"Come to our bethel to-night," he said. "We have a school there, and our teachers are first-rate men. There is a good fire, and plenty of games, and you can write a letter or do anything you like, besides getting a cheap tea and a bed."

Charlie went with this new friend, and spent a very happy evening. The teacher spoke to him more kindly than he had ever been spoken to before in his life, and his heart was quite touched by the interest which they evidently felt in him. And the others also were exceedingly friendly, and told him many things, among the rest that most of the boys there had some money in the savings bank, and that some of them were ambitious enough to believe that they would one day become skippers or captains; and Charlie felt his own heart fired by the desire to grow into a respectable and useful man. But perhaps what pleased him most of all was the singing. Some of the boys sang well, and they had a song-book from which they selected their favorites. The last thing before the teacher left a hymn was sung, and then a gentleman prayed for the lads, asking God to bless them and protect them on the sea, and bring them all home again. Charlie thought the hymn was the most beautiful thing to which he had ever listened, and many a time did it come back to him when he was on the sea. It began:

"Rocked in the cradle of the deep."

Charlie had many hardships to endure during his first voyage. He found the weather very cold and the work difficult. For some time he suffered from sea-sickness, and very little sympathy or nursing fell to his share. But when he was better and the sun shone out, he began to like the sea-faring life very much, and to feel that he would be sorry to be always on land. And then there was much excitement connected with the fishing, and Charlie was as glad as anybody when there was a good haul.

Whenever he went ashore he always visited the bethel; and no doubt it is chiefly owing to this fact that he has been so entirely successful. At the return of his first voyage, though he had only a little money, he put some of it away into the savings bank; and this he did always whenever he took his wages. And now the result is that he has a good sum laid by; and what is, perhaps better still, he has been several times promoted, and is in a fair way of becoming a "skipper."

There was one night when Charlie quite gave himself up for lost. There was a terrible storm, and the fishing-smack was driven on the rocks. But the sad thought of the hymn he had heard at the bethel, and knew that even if he went down he would be to sleep, and that the sleep would be very peaceful. Charlie loved and trusted the Lord Jesus Christ, and knew that he was with him even on the stormy sea. You may be sure that he prayed very earnestly, and his prayer was heard, for the little vessel got off the rocks and weathered the storm.

"Rocked in the cradle of the deep"

Boys and girls, are you thankful for your calm, happy hours? Then show your gratitude by praying for the poor fisher lads who are exposed to the dangers of the sea.—Marianne Farningham.

A negro was sentenced in Floyd, Ga., to be hanged next September, and he asked the judge to appoint an earlier day. His honor remarked that propriety prevented a change. "Never mind the propriety, judge," said the prisoner; "I'm the man that's going to be hanged, and I ought to have something to say about it."

If a friend points a gun at you, knock him down. It will be time enough afterward to find out whether it is loaded or not.

That One Vice.

"One vice he had—profanity." Such is the close of a rather eulogistic notice of a recently deceased public man by a religious journal. It is not every religious journal that would have mentioned this one vice. Many such journals have lauded the man and his political career, and, for anything that they said about him, he might have been a saint, as well as an uncompromising enemy to slavery and a stanch Republican.

We do not expect much of the secular papers in this respect, but certainly religious papers should be discriminating in their commendation of public men. No public life, however honest, or however bold and consistent in advocating political measures which we approve, should be permitted to hide great and shocking vices. Unqualified praise of men who are known to have been licentious, profane and intemperate must tend to blunt the moral sensibilities even of religious people, and also exert a damaging influence upon the youth of the country. And yet the politics of men and their services to a party are permitted to cover a multitude of sins. As to their private lives, they may be coarse, profane and sensual, and yet, while living, they are praised; and when dead the most extravagant encomiums are passed upon them by those who assume to be the exponents of good morals and of the Christian religion. It may be right and just to commend what is commendable; but silence, in reference to the well-known vices of public men, may be construed as an indorsement of the whole character. The vilest men sometimes have been countenanced by some portions of the religious press, because of a common political interest and sympathy.

Ex Senator Wade is not the only political saint, canonized within the last few years, who was habitually profane. And these men are held up for the admiration of posterity, and as examples to the young men of the country. They may have been profane, libidinous, drunken, but their distinguished services in the great political struggles of their time surround them with a halo of glory in which their personal vices are entirely lost from our sight. As between one political party and another there may not be much to choose on the score of morals, but Christian men in the pulpit or the press, or in the sphere of duty as citizens, have no right to countenance sin, or to overlook flagrant vice in those whom they support and eulogize. The vices of public men become as public as themselves, and their influence is pernicious in proportion to their eminence. Profanity at headquarters is very likely to pervade the entire army, and drinking presidents and swearing senators will have many imitators throughout the country.

The generally recognized vulgarity of swearing has largely driven it from polite society, and its indulgence in the presence of ladies is regarded as a serious breach of good manners. It is a coarse and degrading thing, and as unbecoming a true gentleman as it is offensive to the Christian feeling. Religion condemns it, upon the highest grounds, as prohibited by the word of God, and as tending to destroy all reverence for sacred things. Among the vices it can scarcely be ranked as minor or trivial. It is a breach of the divine law, and utterly at variance with the purity of the Christian conscience. No Christian man can hear a profane oath without feeling that his God is insulted, and that his dearest feelings and tenderest sensibilities have been outraged. It is not a slight matter, nor one of indifference, that a great partisan leader had this one vice. Writing of ancient Israel, the prophet says: "For because of swearing the land mourneth." It is a sin of such considerable magnitude as to be singled out as a reason in itself for the visitations of the divine judgments. Other forms of wickedness prevail, but profanity is probably more common than any other. Children learn to swear before they are capable of contracting some other vicious habits. On the streets, cars, steamboats, and, worst of all, among the laboring classes it is heard.

It is the companion of almost every other vice, but often, as in the case of the distinguished ex-senator, it is alone. One vice he has—profanity. It has become a habit, and as difficult to overcome in many cases as alcoholism itself. In order to reformation, as hard battles have been fought over this vice as over any to which men have become enslaved. As a rule, the inveterate swearer can be cured only by the converting, heart-changing grace of God. Conversion cuts it up by the roots, and nothing else can. Profanity is the expression of the malignant passions—of anger, hatred, impatience, and of every ill temper. It is the utterance of the devil that is in the corrupt heart, the blooming out in words of the pent-up corruption that is in the soul. It may sometimes rise to the Christian consciousness as a horrible temptation of satan, to be instantly put away and trampled down with righteous indignation. It behooves Christian men in the world to keep their lips clean. Peter's fall was marked by cursing and swearing. It is not the only instance in which the denial of Christ has been attended by profanity. It is a heinous sin, to be bitterly repented of, and to be put away by instant return to the Savior whom we have dishonored.

Not often alone, but when there is but this one vice how dreadful the revelation that it makes in regard to the state of the heart! How far from God must it not be when the sacred name can be lightly and irreverently used, and when that of the blessed Savior is besmirched with the breath of scolding and passion! It may be the one vice that a man has, and yet he who can be profane must be alienated from God, ungrateful to Christ who died for him, and contemptibly guilty of grieving and resisting the Holy Spirit. It may be outwardly the breach of a single commandment, and a vice toward which public opinion is more tolerant than toward some others, but it indicates a state of the heart and a type of character at war with the authority of God. It is polluting to the soul, it spreads as a contagion, and becomes the spring and fountain of a general social contamination.

Although it may sometimes be the one vice that a man has, and in such cases carried to the extreme of interlarding all conversation, yet we suspect it is generally the beginning of other forms of sin, and one that paves the way for unbridled license. If employers swear, their clerks may do the same, and more. If our prominent men in politics, in business and in society are profane, and respected and eulogized by the religious press and by religious people at the same time, shall we wonder that swearing comes to be regarded as a matter of little moment, and that the relaxation of moral restraint in this particular opens the gate for every kind of wickedness? In our estimate of the character and services of public men we cannot safely leave their morals out. If we must make them the subject of study and the materials of history, the main element of human worth and usefulness should not be passed over.

Southern Review.

DR. SPARROW'S SERMON.

The number for January, 1878, well maintains the reputation of this Review. It is not our purpose, however, to discuss the merits of the Review in general, but to call attention to the sermon of Dr. Sparrow, from a text so weighty and profound as to suggest, from the outset, other than superficial treatment: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."—John vii, 17.

We would speak as favorably as possible of any sermon having the purpose and tendency to promote pure and spiritual religion—and such is this. Perhaps the popular preacher generally owes his reputation, more than to any other one thing, to the fact that he plays gracefully about the edges, and upon the mere surface of truth; but a sermon proposing to elucidate the very truth, and to such an audience as the Southern Review gathers to the preacher, ought to go right home to the heart and center of the subject. This Dr. Sparrow's sermon does not do. It is, according to our appraisement, wanting in unity, and makes some surprising mistakes in reference to the teaching and meaning of Scripture. After the first division it wanders off into such generalities as might, with a few verbal alterations, be more suitable to many other subjects. It reminds us of what a lady once said of another famous preacher's sermon: "I thluk," said she, "he is the greatest preacher in the world, for I have heard him preach that sermon from several other texts, and I verily believe he could preach it from any text in the Bible."

The text is, in part, Christ's answer to the question of the Jews: "How knoweth this man letters, never having learned?" His answer is that the knowledge of his doctrine does not come by the ordinary methods of the schools, but by performance: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine."

Dr. Sparrow hits the nail on the head when he says: "We conclude, therefore, the first step of a sincere inquirer after truth to be the abandonment of all known sin, and the performance of every known duty. By acting thus he is pursuing the course laid down in the text." He had the thread in hand that would have enabled him to unravel the skein. Why he should have dropped it, or have gone to pulling others along with this until he got his subject all into a tangle, we do not clearly perceive. If a man will do what he already knows, he shall thereby come to the knowledge of other and adjacent doctrines, and then to others lying yet above, until he comes to know all that may be necessary to assure him that Jesus is the Messiah, and that his doctrine, even upon its highest plain, is divine. To this Roos, Neander and Stier all agree; indeed this is evidently the process, for he is to advance to this knowing by doing, and yet cannot arrive at the highest truth per saltum, but step by step the mist grows thinner, and his spiritual eye is sharpened and takes in a wider range as he moves upward by performance.

Now, instead of pursuing this line of thought, to which he was shut up by his subject, he just wanders off at random. He says: "The second step would be to forsake all vicious connections." A very good "step," no doubt, and one that we would commend to all who wish to do right. But the question is: How do we know that it is the "second step" in this connection? The assumption involves the doctor in a dilemma. If the inquirer knows that he ought to do this, it is contained in the first proposition; but if he does not know, of course he cannot take the "second step." The fact is, "secondly" does not grow out of the subject organically; he just nails it on mechanically, as an apprentice might nail on a loose piece of timber anywhere to the foundation, to make the edifice go up as it can. If he were preaching from the text, "Evil communications corrupt good manners," then this "secondly" might be his thesis. If he were preaching from the text, "Let us lay aside every weight," then this "secondly" would be germain to the question, and might come in somewhere. But in the text under discussion we fail to perceive its appositeness. What we have said of "secondly" will for the most part apply to thirdly and fourthly. If secondly, thirdly and fourthly are all duties known to all men, then, in order to unity, they ought visibly to cluster around and proceed from the first proposition as branches spring from the trunk; but if the knowledge of them is reached by doing, then it surely was incumbent on the preacher clearly to map out the way. Nevertheless, in his random way he carries us through some good country, where we find refreshing streams, and a wholesome, bracing atmosphere, and at last with open eyes we find ourselves gazing upon spiritual beauties, and delights, that show the preacher to have been born of the Spirit, and to have some experience of his own. This, surely, is a great thing. What we complain of is that he fails to go by the way sketched out by his text. He "shoots with a double wabble," and, although he does at last hit the mark, there is too much at stake to commend that method to others.

We propose now to examine some assumptions that seem marvelous. The very first sentence might suggest to the thoughtful reader that he is starting out with no very accurate guide: "When we consider the compass of the sacred Scriptures, constituting, as they do, one portable volume, and reflect how large a portion of this little volume is occupied in mere history, it would seem almost impossible to have compressed into the remaining space all the instructions necessary for us in our present state." A large portion of the Bible "mere history!" If we take the word "mere" in its derivative signification—merus, pure, unmixed—or as used by the best speakers and writers—only this and no more—we are astonished at such a declaration. Does he mean to say that a large portion of the Bible is pure history?—only this and no more? We thought at first it must be a lapsus, but when we gave attention to the next and last clause of the sentence we could not think so. He goes on in the next clause to say: "It would almost seem impossible to have compressed into the remaining space all the instructions necessary for us in our present state." This assumption contradicts both the Scriptures and the facts. St. Paul declares that "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God;" or, rather "All Scripture divinely inspired is profitable, for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." Sacred history is burdened with revelation; otherwise it would not be sacred. If we do not find revelation in it we may know, by that token, that our sea-line is too short to reach the bottom; even the Ten Commandments are set in a frame of history. The reason for choosing largely, mostly, the historic method is obvious. Most men have little capacity to comprehend mere abstractions; if we listen to the conversation of ordinary men we shall find that they go but little out of the sphere of history, their own or their neighbors', with now and then, perhaps, a little sprinkling of the same from modern or ancient times. Even the best minds are not, for the most part, accustomed to travel much outside this sphere. The very text chosen, as the foundation of the sermon, ought to have saved the preacher from this error, since the knowing must come by development through performance—the historic method. If an under-graduate had offered this sermon to a Conference committee the committee would have pointed him to the historic method as best suited to the capacity of man; to Bishop Marvin's sermon, "God in the Old Testament Scriptures," wherein he shows conclusively that God reveals himself mostly by the "historic method;" and then to his next sermon, "God in the New Testament Scriptures," wherein he shows that the method is still historic;" and would finally have exhorted him, in his own words, borrowed from the Savior, to "search the Scriptures"—that such a wonderful mistake might not be made again.

On page 99 he says: "Sometimes indeed, we find the God of Providence pouring unlooked for treasures into the lap of the most indifferent; and the God of grace meeting the persecuting Saul on the way to Damascus, and shedding spiritual light upon his reluctant mind. But these are exceptions." The italics are his own. He emphasizes "exceptions." Of all superficial views of Paul's conversion, this is the most superficial. If this be correct, then Augustine's view of irresistible grace would be false in general, but true in particular; and the contrary view of Arminius would be true in general but false in particular. Oh, no! Such "variableness," such more than "shadow of turning," in the principles of his administration, can not be predicated of God. The light that shone upon Saul was simply that "true light that"—by some method—"lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Saul was not converted by the vision on his way to Damascus. That was for conviction—to prove to him that Jesus was the Christ. And whoever is convinced of this, if he had but the honest purpose to do the will of God that Saul had, would be in as favorable condition as Saul was after the vision, while he waited, fasting and praying three days for conversion. Grace meets every man as certainly as it did Saul, and if he is not converted it is because he is "disobedient unto the heavenly vision." But if we will let him tell his experience in his own way the difficulties will all vanish. In his defense before King Agrippa he tells of that wonderful vision that met him in the way; and if his "reluctant mind" had been forced by Almighty power, the simple statement of the fact would have been his complete vindication. But does he put it that way? No! He says: "Wherenpon, O King Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." The fact is, Saul's conversion, instead of being an "exception," was one of the best illustrations of the truth of the text. Saul was honestly following his convictions of right; even in persecuting the church he thought he was doing God service. As such he was bound, sooner or later, to come to the knowledge of the truth; otherwise the promise of the Son of God, in the text, would have been broken. This is no exception. There are no "exceptions." If the poorest soul that swelters on the equatorial sands, or that shivers amid arctic snows, like Saul of Tarsus, will but do the best he knows, sooner or later he shall come to the knowledge of such truth as may be necessary to his salvation. It may not come in the shining of light above the brightness of an Asiatic noonday sun, but it shall come in God's way, and therefore in the best way for him; for the promise cannot be broken. If it were necessary God would kindle new suns in the firmament, or burn down all the stars of heaven, to light up his way to himself and his salvation; for there is the promise.

W. A. McCARTY.

All Too True.

We noticed at some length the papal memorial ceremonies in New Orleans. The ceremonies in Mobile took place on Sunday, February 24, in reference to which Bro. Price Williams writes pointedly and truly:

It was: 1. A desecration of the Sabbath. 2. Protestants must have been in Catholic spirits to have placed themselves where they were bound to feel that they were there in some sort as participating the doings and sayings of the occasion. 3. The position assigned the Pope in heaven is simply sacrilegious, and is a fit relic of the age of barbarity.

We cannot see how Protestants could consistently and conscientiously participate in such ceremonies, and especially on the Sabbath. We are somewhat confused as to the whereabouts of the deceased Pope. Prayers are said for the repose of his soul and masses celebrated for his deliverance from purgatory, and then again, and at the same time, it is said that he has entered into glory.

At the memorial services in Mobile Dr. Layton delivered an address, in which this passage occurs:

The Catholic universe is jubilant. Some days ago we lost him who for nearly thirty-two years was the guide and the father of so many millions of men scattered over the surface of the earth. But no; I am mistaken. We have not lost Pius the Ninth.

Having fought the good fight, he has gone to receive his reward. After so long a life, and a life so full of merit, we must rejoice to know that he has entered into glory; and I repeat, we have not lost our father. We are convinced that in heaven he continues to protect the church which he loved with a love so strong and tender.

We have already received a positive proof of that love. Is it not he who has obtained for us by his prayers the signal favor which at this moment causes the Catholic universe to rejoice? Yes, we are jubilant, because a successor to Pius the Ninth is already seated upon the throne he left vacant.

The intercessions of Christ and of Mary do not suffice, and it would seem that those of the glorified Pope are even more efficacious than either. "In heaven he continues to protect the church he loved!" A very poor dependence, a very weak protector, we should say. Can intelligent Protestants, by their presence at memorial services, countenance such impious nonsense and such gross absurdities?

Rev. George Muller, of Bristol, England, the celebrated author of "Life of Trust," at this time on a visit to New Orleans, is conducting a series of religious services in the Canal Street Presbyterian church. He preached twice on Sunday, March 17. On next Sunday, March 24 he will preach in German, at the Dryades Street Methodist Episcopal Church South, at eleven A. M.

We heard Mr. Muller at a night service. His wife, a very grave lady, and plainly dressed, sat on the platform, and paid devout attention to the sermon, though taking no part in the services more than other hearers. Mr. Muller is somewhat above the medium height, rather spare, a good forehead, and a well shaped head altogether, indicating a well-balanced mind. Earnestness, thoughtfulness and perfect repose are expressed in his regular and not unprepossessing features. Although upward of seventy, his thin hair is not yet white, and his voice, though neither loud nor strong, is not tremulous. There is a perceptible German accent in his speaking, and many of his words are so pronounced as to be almost missed by the English hearer. His neck is tightly swathed in the old-fashioned and voluminous white neck-cloth, reminding us of Bishop Capers and others of the Methodist fathers.

The sermon was on rejoicing always, delivered without notes, but well arranged, and clear in every point. It was the marrow of gospel truth, spiritual, plain, evangelical, and calculated to interest and edify spiritually-minded people. His preaching is not of the sort to draw or entertain the crowd. In the course of the sermon it fell in his way to say that he spent the first twenty years of his life in sin, that he received Christ by faith fifty two years and four months ago, and that he had rejoiced in the Lord from the day of his conversion. He bore strong testimony against Christians attending theaters, and said that ten thousand dollars would not induce him to enter one for the purpose of witnessing a play. In quoting Scripture he turned to the place, and read, giving chapter and verse.

It cannot be said that Mr. Muller is an extraordinary preacher, but he is certainly an extraordinary man. Think of these facts: He has now under his care five orphan asylums, in which are 2,203 orphans. In connection with these asylums are 52 day schools, and numerous Sunday schools, and the children are taught trades, and prepared for useful and industrious pursuits. Within the last thirty years more than 800 children have been received, educated and trained in his asylums, and in this time he has raised and expended, as we are told, nearly three millions of dollars. And he has never directly asked any one for money. He asks it of God, and he has never failed to receive the funds that were needed for his work. He is himself, and his asylums are advertised all over the world, but no direct appeals for money have ever been made.

The regular annual commencement exercises of the Medical Department of the University of Louisiana took place in New Orleans on Monday, March 15. There were fifty-two graduates in medicine, and ten in pharmacy. The medical schools this spring have graduated a multitude of young doctors—more, we should think, than can find a paying practice. A medical education is an excellent preparation for mission work in foreign fields. In Armenia, India, China and Japan American physicians are said to be in demand. Why should not some of the hundreds of young physicians, who are also religious young men, seek these important fields of usefulness, where they may minister to the bodies and souls of those who are destitute alike of the advantages of Christianity and of science? Whether at home or abroad, the physician who is devotedly pious has rare opportunities of doing good. Many of these recent graduates are members of church, and we hope, experimentally acquainted with the doctrines of the gospel. As they go out into the world, and settle down to the practice of their profession, we hope they will maintain their Christian character and endeavor in every way to exalt and magnify their Christian calling. In the intimate relations which the physician sustains to the family, and in the grave responsibilities of watching the sick, it helps our confidence much to know that he is a man of prayer, and that he takes with him, wherever he goes, the gospel banner, and that he lives in communion with the good and great Physician.

Rev. T. M. Finney, D. D., of the St. Louis Conference, is about to prepare a work entitled "The Life and Labors of the Late Bishop Enoch Mather Marvin, Together with His Hitherto Unpublished Writings." It is to be published by J. H. Chambers, of St. Louis. This publication is made with the consent and co-operation of the family of the deceased Bishop, in return for which the publisher, besides incurring the expense of preparing and publishing the work, secures to the family royalty; and, by direction of Mrs. Marvin, advances to the Marvin Memorial Association $400 on account of said royalty.

The publisher informs us that the preparation of the work has also been taken in hand by the author, and will be prosecuted with all possible dispatch consistent with the production of a just and complete biography, such as will be expected of one so distinguished as a man so eminent and beloved as a servant of the church.

For more than a week past Bishop Keener has been confined to bed, suffering much from a disorder which, though not critical, has at times extremely painful. He will be up about soon, we trust; but he ought to be allowed to rest awhile.

We have received a circular announcing that the first annual convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of Louisiana will be held at Baton Rouge, beginning on Friday, April 25, and closing on Tuesday, April 30.

The New Orleans District Conference will meet at Baton Rouge, on Friday morning, April 5, at nine o'clock. Members from the city will leave on a regular packet on Thursday evening. Bishop Keener is expected to preside.

Rev. H. Urquhart writes us that the Auburn Female College, Auburn, Ala., is doing even better than its friends expected.

Human things must be known to be loved; but divine things must be loved to be known.—Pascal.

To Mexico.

Rev. W. M. Patterson, writing to the Western Methodist, gives an entertaining account of the outward voyage:

On the morning of the fifth day out we came in sight of the Mexican coast, but found that the norther had driven us about forty miles south of Tampico, our intended landing, which is seven hundred and ten miles from New Orleans. By noon we were anchored off the coast of Tampico, two miles from the mouth of the river of that name, the city of five thousand inhabitants being six miles up the river. Communication with the natives on shore was opened through flag signals. It is a peculiarity of the Mexican people to put off till to-morrow everything they can. So not until the next morning could they come out with their lighters (small sail boats) and exchange freights. The leading export of the place is honey, which is gathered principally from the woods, and sent in barrels to New York, and sold for thirty or forty cents per gallon, the sales of last year amounting to several thousand barrels. Formerly the honey was thrown away and the wax alone used—used in making candles for the Roman Catholic churches. A number of chickens were also brought on board, upon which Bishop Keener assured me we had not yet gotten out of our parish. Tampico has been for some time occupied by a missionary of the Presbyterian Church, but with what success we could not definitely learn. Back of the barren, sandy hills which border the gulf, and reaching far above the sparse and scrubby trees, eight miles away, the tower of the cathedral could be distinctly seen. About noon, after custom-house duties had been attended to, we were again off for the next port, Tuxpan, ninety miles away. On the left could be seen nothing but water and sky meeting in the distance, while far away to the right was a range of mountains back of the broad valley next the gulf. Sometimes one range would rise from behind another, heading its lofty peaks up into the sky. Sometimes a "sugar loaf," or some like single mountain, several thousand feet high, would rise up from the midst of a valley, and present a scene to hold for hours the gaze of the enchanted traveler. Some of the valleys are said to be in a high state of cultivation, while the mountains abound with various wild animals. No railroads have yet been constructed through this section of country, and one of the boatmen informed us that in some localities the monkeys are so numerous and bold that they intercept telegrams passing from New Orleans to Vera Cruz—this way the delay or loss of a telegram is accounted for.

Night overtook us before Tuxpan could be reached, and this gave uneasiness to some of us, for there was danger of running upon a reef, as was evidenced by the presence next morning of the wreck of the fine steamship Havana, still standing high out of the water, but broken—a warning to other navigators. After the same custom-house process, and lighting and loading had taken place, at Tampico, we set out again for Vera Cruz, a distance of one hundred and twenty-five miles. The coast is very lost none of its beauty and attractiveness during the day, but rather grew in interest as above and beyond the loftiest peaks of the range of mountains, before seen, distinctly appeared the snow-capped summit of the far-famed Orizaba. It was more than a hundred miles away. And at evening, as the sun went down through a clear sky, gilding with its rays both land and sea, especially lifting up the pure atmosphere of mountain heights, and illuminating with its glorious scintillations what's perpetual snow, we realized a delightful feast to the eye, the mind and the soul. The next morning's sun found us anchored in the port of Vera Cruz, of which place I shall speak hereafter.

We have received from the publishers, Bryan, Brand & Co., a copy of Bishop Marvin's book, "To the West by Way of the West." We learn that twelve thousand copies have been sold, and the demand continues. We do not wonder at this, for it is a work of extraordinary interest and of remarkable merit. Every Southern Methodist should read it, and we believe nearly every one will. We have commenced the volume, and shall have something more to say of it after awhile. We read the letters as they came out originally in the Nashville Christian Advocate, and we are enjoying them more in this book, and the interest is heightened by the sad and ever present reflection that the gifted and loved author is in heaven, and that this book is his all his parting gift—his dying legacy. It cannot fail to be a blessing to the church in enlarging its supplies for our mission work, in quickening the faith of our people. A new supply of the book has recently been received at the New Orleans Depository.

Under Gen. Martinez Campos the Cuban war has been brought to an end. The insurgents are to be granted amnesty, slaves are to be gradually emancipated, the island is to have representation in the Spanish Cortes, and no distinction is to be made hereafter, as to rights of persons or property, between the native Cubans and the Spaniards. This new and enlightened policy of Spain secures the independence of Cuba or its annexation to the United States more than ever improbable and remote.

Danger is imminent. Shakespeare.

On Monday, March 18, the Supreme Court of Louisiana reversed the verdict in the case of T. C. Anderson, member of the late Returning Board, and ordered his discharge from custody. So far as we can understand the decision, it was based upon technical grounds. The altered returns were those of the supervisors of registration, and not of the election commissioners; and it was not charged in the information that the altering of the forged instrument was done by Anderson in any official capacity. The New Orleans Times says:

The result has been to rest the great question of the Louisiana fraud upon a technical point—whether the "consolidated returns" were a public document within the meaning of the law or not which point has been decided in the negative by our Supreme Court. There will be no disposition, we think, to question the correctness of the decision. It proves that the prosecuting officers and the judge of the lower court erred in judgment in not proceeding concerning the great swindle, of which the Vernon returns were a small and insignificant portion. Indeed the opinion of the court in overruling the other exceptions clearly enough intimates a perception of the gravity of the moral offense committed, while it properly confines its legal effect to the legal questions presented. The decision is that Thomas C. Anderson was not guilty in law of uttering and forging a public document in the manner and form charged. The great question of the guilt of the board in so falsifying the result of the election and defeating the will of the people stands unaffected by this decision. The opinion of the country on this point no technicality can neutralize, and no court, however august, modify.

The other members of the Returning Board will probably now be discharged, as the decision of the Supreme Court covers the grounds on which they are held for trial.

The Nashville Christian Advocate says:

We take occasion to state, in answer to a correspondent, that the expert employed to examine the affairs of the Publishing House was not selected by the book agent or the Book Committee, but by a convention of the delegates of the Tennessee Conference, lay and clerical, and some delegates of other Conferences; the Book Committee approving heartily of the selection. The gentleman who is doing the work is truly an expert, and a faithful man. He is empowered to employ such assistants as he may require. The book agent had nothing to do with his appointment, though he approves of it. The Book Committee wish to have a thorough investigation; they have had no interest to serve except that of the church. They have devoted much of their time, and lent their credit to the house for thousands of dollars, and have contributed generous donations for its relief. We hope nothing will be said or done to prejudice the public against the house, the committee, agent or expert.

Dr. Joseph Holdich has resigned his position as secretary of the American Bible Society, and Dr. Albert S. Hunt has been elected. Dr. Hunt will be remembered as one of the fraternal messengers from the Methodist Episcopal Church to our General Conference at Louisville, in 1874.

The Rev. John Baer, D. D., says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of March 16, died on Monday morning at three o'clock, at his residence, No. 48 McCulloh street, after an illness of several weeks, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. He was the oldest minister in the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and one of the oldest and best known ministers in the denomination in the United States. He was born in Rockingham county, Va., and in 1814 at the age of twenty-two, entered the ministry, his first charge being at Connellsville, Pa.

Publisher's Department.

FURNITURE DEALERS.—R. M. & B. J. Montgomery have the largest and best-assorted stock of furniture in the South. They import largely from foreign and domestic factories, and, purchasing in such quantities as they do, are enabled to offer all obtainable discounts to the trade and other customers, the advantages of which cannot fail to be considered by those requiring goods in this line. The personnel of this firm is too well known to require other than passing notice at our hands. All orders will receive prompt and careful attention. We commend them to our readers.

FOR MILLINERS.—Mr. F. Tujague, 11 Chartres street, has a large assortment of articles for millinery which were imported direct by himself, and which he can afford to sell at low rates. He would call the attention of country buyers especially to his stock, with the assurance that they can get better articles and have a more varied stock to select from than elsewhere. See his advertisement.

MOSS.—Mr. John S. McDonald, the well-known moss manufacturer, has a card on this page. Mr. McDonald has devoted much time and labor up to the business of cleaning moss by machinery, and his signal success deserves appreciation. We can warmly recommend him to our friends as a clever and reliable man.

DRY GOODS.—Any one wishing to buy choice dry goods of any description should call at the store of J. A. Zellenman, 50 Magazine street, corner of St. Andrew, where fresh and good articles are sold right at the lowest prices. Especial attention is paid to country orders.

BETHESDA WATER.—Those who are suffering from Bright's disease, diabetes, dropsy, fever and other complaints, drink the Bethesda water, recommended by some of the most eminent physicians. L. C. Arny, 26, 28 and 30 Bienville street, is the general agent.

FREDERICKSON & HARTE, on Canal street, have a fine stock of strings, perfumery and musical instruments. The house is reliable, and parties from the country wishing to buy need have no hesitation in leaving their orders.

THE Crescent City Street Sprinkling Company have improved apparatus for laying the dust, and charge reasonable prices for work done. Parties interested should call at 32 Carondelet street, up stairs.

SOUTHERN BELLE.—The above is a beautiful illustrated magazine for ladies and families. It is devoted to instruction and amusement. Send, postpaid, for fifty cents per annum. See advertisement.

J. S. RIVERS, LITHOGRAPHER AND ENGRAVER.—Read the advertisement of the above well known gentleman, on the eighth page, and send him your orders. No better man to do business with.

COMMISSION MERCHANT.—J. A. Rogers, 117 Decatur street, will attend to the sale of all country produce. He is perfectly reliable. See advertisement on the seventh page.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT.—If you want anything in the fishing line go send to the reliable gentleman, R. Rhodes, 95 Charles street.

CHINA PALACE.—At 121 Canal street will be found one of the best-assorted crockery stores in the city.

DRY GOODS.—E. H. Adams & Bro., 594 Magazine street, pay particular attention to country orders.

GIVE THEM A TRIAL.

Any lady or gentleman who will give Dr. Tutt's Pain-Pad Plasters a single trial will be charmed at that for exquisite sweetness and permanency of odor, no perfumes in this or any other country are compared with them.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

THE WILBOR'S COD LIVER OIL AS EXPORTED is still no longer a foul drink; it is a delicious article, as clear as sherry, and the nicest thing to take. As prepared by Dr. Wilbor it removes all the nauseating taste, and is a perfect preparation of the Phosphates and Lime, giving it many very valuable properties and the healing qualities of the oil, and to persons who dislike fish it is invaluable. This article also forms a most valuable tonic, and will cause weak and debilitated persons to become strong and robust. It is prescribed by all respectable druggists throughout the country, and is an article that should be in every family, for convalescence, before the system appearance of a sickness, or to all who are troubled with the Lungs. Manufactured only by A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

A VALUABLE DISCOVERY.—Dr. C. W. Benson, a practicing physician at 106 North Eutaw street, Baltimore, Md., (town) has paid much attention to nervous diseases, and recently discovered extract of celery and chamomile, combined in a certain proportion, invariably cures the dyspepsia, either bilious, dyspeptic, nervous or sick headache, neuralgia and nervousness. This is a triumph in medical chemistry, and sufferers all over the country are ordering by mail. He prepares it in pills at 50 cents per box. The Doctor is largely known and highly respected in Baltimore.—Episcopal Methodist.

☞ These Pills can be ordered through any druggist, or sent postage free.

PIZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies who use it daily to be the only preparation that does not reach to the skin, a pimple, or be a black spot to the purest. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 67 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Lindell Hotel.)

WE WORTLIE in all confidence recommend DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC. We would exhort the weak to discard all unmedicated and impure stimulants, and use this—"nature's great restorer." It acts on the stomach and bowels, increasing the appetite, assisting digestion, building up the weak, frail and broken down system. For sale by all druggists.

DR. HARTER'S LIVER PILLS are a safe, certain and mild purge, and by increasing the dose they become very energetic and sure LIVER PILLS, acting especially on the Liver, starting and regulating the flow of bile, and expelling it from the body. For sale by all druggists.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

DOWN WITH THE DUST! is a familiar cry. If you can't get it down yourself, the Crescent City Street Sprinkling Company will do it for you. Call at the office, 32 Carondelet street, and leave your subscriptions. Terms are reasonable.

Husband.—"Dear me, how gritty and dirty everything is in the house!" Wife.—"That's because you don't subscribe to have the street sprinkled. How do you suppose I stand it all day long?" tc

THE BEST PROOF for the fact that Dr. F. Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic, or Fever and Ague Tonic, is the most reliable Chill Tonic in the world, we find in the statement that Finlay & Thompson, the large wholesale druggists in New Orleans, guarantee that it cures Chills and Fever in every instance, and that it does not contain any Quinine, Arsenic, Strychnine or any other poisonous drug. For sale by all druggists.

NEW TESTS FOR MILK.

Dr. Heausner, of Barmen, has recently devised a simple apparatus, called a lactoscope, which is based on the capacity of pure milk. It consists of two round plates of glass about the size of a watch crystal, placed parallel and held about one half inch apart by a metal strip, which passes between them, dividing the space between them into two sections. In the lower section is placed and secured some pure milk, or, better, some permanent white fluid of precisely the same opacity as pure milk. On one of the glass plates are some fine black lines. The upper section is filled with the milk to be tested and secured with an elastic band. On holding the apparatus between the eye and the light, the black lines being on the side opposite the eye, the black lines will be seen more distinctly through the less opaque medium. If the milk to be tested is less opaque than the normal liquid, as shown by the lines being more distinctly visible through it, the milk has probably been watered or skimmed. Alone this little apparatus, which sells in Hamburg for $1.87, is of little use, but can prove useful in connection with the lactometer, both to be followed, in doubtful cases, by a chemical analysis.

In regard to the chemical analysis of milk, which is the only reliable test of milk, Prof. Lehmann, of Munich, proposes the following modification to save time: A weighed quantity, say nine or ten grammes of milk, is diluted with an equal weight of water, and poured out in a thin layer upon a porous plate of burnt clay, very dense and fine-grained. The water of the milk, as well as the milk sugar, albumen, and a portion of the salts dissolved in it, are absorbed by the clay plate, while the total amount of fats and casein in the milk remain on the plate in the form of a thin skin or film. This film is easily removed with a horn spatula, and then dried and weighed. If it is desired to determine the fats alone, this film may be extracted with either, and thus the two most important constituents of milk very quickly determined. In many cases it is sufficient to know the total weight of the principal solid constituents of the milk, hence also the amount of water for which scarcely two hours are required. This method also possesses the advantage that a great number of samples can be tested at once without much trouble. It also does away with the uses of numerous costly platinum dishes and troublesome water baths, which are always getting dry if not carefully watched. The operation is so simple that it can be used by any person who possesses an accurate balance and a set of weights.—Scientific American

Drainage and Improving Soil.—Good soil is the first requisite in a garden. Without this you cannot be sure of success in anything. Soil, like everything else, wears out with use; it needs renewal from time to time. The market and vegetable gardener generally understands this and provides the proper stimulus for the ground; but the flower garden, though originally in fine condition is very often permitted to exhaust itself. Where flowers have been growing many years new soil does wonders. Rich manures also make flowers grow, but they do not always flower well in proportion to their growth. If new soil cannot be had, a wheelbarrowful of manure to about fifty square feet will be enough. If the garden earth looks gray or yellow, rotten leaves will improve it. If it be heavy, add sand. If very sandy, add salt—about half a pint to fifty square feet. If very black or rich, from previous years' manurings, use a little lime—about a pint, slaked, to fifty square feet.

Next in importance to its quality is the requirement that it be thoroughly dug. William Coleman well says: "Spading is hard work; better let Patrick do it. But watch Patrick. It will pay you to sit on the fence or at least be near enough to see that he puts his spading fork down deep, turns the lifted soil entirely over, breaks up the lumps, and throws out the weeds and the stones. If you don't you will be likely, in the course of summer cultivation, to turn up a good deal of buried treasure of this kind." If the garden is full of hardy perennial flowers the next fall use a fork and dig not too deeply.—American Gardener

How to Make Rolls.—When mashing potatoes for dinner, put a tablespoonful of it into one pint of the water they were boiled in, and set aside till bed-time. Then strain it through a colander, add one pint of milk, one large spoonful of lard, one spoonful white sugar, one teaspoonful salt, one penny's worth of yeast, and flour to make a stiff batter. Leave it in a moderately warm place. In the morning add flour enough to make a soft dough, working it well. Let it rise again, roll out, grease half and fold it over, cut into round cakes, fold together, drawing a dull knife through as you fold them. Let them rise again for half an hour or till light, and bake in a quick oven from fifteen to twenty minutes. In cold weather the milk and water should be lukewarm; in hot weather the milk should be scalded and cooled. The potatoes must be pared before boiling, and the kettle in which they are boiled must be perfectly clean.—Country Gentleman

Tomato Pinkeys.—Pare and quarter good, ripe tomatoes, put them in a porcelain kettle with not the water, so they will not burn. They require to be cooked until the juice is nearly all out; then add one pound of white sugar to each pound of fruit. Cook slowly one half hour.

SCIENTIFIC.

A few years ago very much ought was given by scientific men the question how long seeds might in their vitality, and we gave in columns abstracts of all the pa- that appeared. Our readers may ember that all the evidence that worthy of being called evidence wed the popular idea about the period that seeds would live in ground, or in tombs or burial- es, was erroneous. The subject been introduced again into Eng- scientific circles, and the Rev. rge Henslow, a distinguished ntific man, called to investigate It was another case of "wheat an Egyptian mummy." He that some of the grain which after four thousand years" Indian corn an American grain, was unknown in Egypt in an- t times. The operator had for- en this when selling his won- ful seed to gullible English (and erican) tourists. We are still hout any evidence that old seeds grow.—Independent.

QUICKSILVER MINING EXTRAOR- ARY.—The Virginia City Enter- gives an account of a novel hod of obtaining quicksilver pur- d by a couple of ingenious Ger- s. Each man is provided with a -inch iron rod about ten feet in th. At the upper end the rod is ent as to form a loop or eye large gh to admit the hand, while at lower end is a copper head about to in length, shaped like the head soldering iron, and weighing e ten pounds. This head has a e octagonal bulge in the middle, in each of its eight faces is a is about an inch in depth and three-quarters of an inch in ter at the top. In working, the go into the bed of the river, and their probes down into the sand, or gravel, as the case may be, then begin churning. As they churn, the quicksilver moves ard and into the hole, and either to the sides of the "bob" or ught in small cavities. The is frequently lifted from the and cleaned of the amalgam it accumulated by means of a small per. The cavities are more for catching the quicksilver that in at the sides of the hole when ground is shaken than for col- ing amalgam. As there are hund- and hundreds of tons of quick- in the bed of the river, all of h contains more or less gold and r, the two "bobbers" are doubt- making excellent wages.

Gents:—I must have more of your medicine, and wish that I could get it here on sale, as the express is too high to individuals. Among the Cannabis Indica, I have tried all the medicines usually prescribed in such cases. CONSUMPTION has baffled the most eminent physicians of the country, and all to no purpose as soon as he com- menced the Hemp Remedies he began to improve in health until I re- gained about well.

HENRY W. KIMBERLY, M.D.

Glover Well, Barren Co., Ky. Dear Sirs:—Please send me three bottles Cannabis Indica, box of Pills, and pot of Salve. Mother has been suffering with RHEUMATISM for twenty years, and tried all kinds of medicine, and says the Cannabis Indica is the only thing that ever gave her relief. Respectfully yours, JANE A. ASHBROOK.

Hyde River, Powershiek, Iowa, Gents:—I have just seen your advertisement in my paper; I know all about Cannabis Indica. Fifteen years ago my daughter had the ASTHMA; was very bad for several years, but was cured, and I used to keep the medicine on hand to accommodate my neighbors. I have taken it exclusively, and intend to continue it. Please send me a 50 box of your Salve. Respectfully, JACOB TROUT.

THERE IS NOT A SINGLE SYMPTOM of Consumption that this remedy will not dissipate, and it will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Ask your druggist for DR. JAMES' CANNABIS INDICA, and if they fail you, send to us direct. The Salve will satisfy the most skeptical. $2 00 per bottle. Two bottles for $3. Pills and Salve, $1.50 each. MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEART-BURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The smoothness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a exact unal part of a single drop magnified 250 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates; in fact perfect solution.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

COMMERCIAL.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
NEW ORLEANS, Tuesday, March 19, 1878.

We have to record rather a dull week in all kinds of business. Prices have a downward tendency, and buyers are holding off for still lower prices. This is especially noticeable in the stock and bond markets, which are much depressed.

There is a strong probability of the old mint in this city being re[illegible]li-shed, and in case this is d[illegible] establish business materially [illegible] it will.

We take from [illegible] Liverpool [illegible] C. Watts & Co's [illegible] of March 1, [illegible] articles relative to the impressions that prevail concerning [illegible] probable change in the prices of cotton should there be further war in which England is interested:

The Liverpool Daily Post, in an article on the "Cotton Situation," in its issue of this date, says: "No one appears to have a very definite idea of what effect a declaration of war would have on the cotton market but the prevailing notion is that prices would decline. Why they should decline is not very clear, because it is by no means certain that war will increase the supply or diminish the consumption of cotton. Prices were lower two years before the Crimean war than they were at any time during that war, and this, notwithstanding that America in 1853 produced what was at that time an unprecedentedly large crop, which led to a stock of cotton in the ports of Europe in September, 1853 equal to nearly five months' consumption. It was the over supply of cotton more than war, that forced prices down, the consumption of Great Britain being 31 000 bales per week in 1851 35,500 in 1852 36 610 in 1853 (when the war broke out) 37 830 in 1854 and 40,400 in 1855. At the end of 1852 the stock in Great Britain was 807 000 bales, or twenty-three weeks' consumption. At the end of 1854 it was 817 000 bales, or still about twenty-three weeks' consumption, although the rate of consumption had increased 1,200 bales per week; but at the end of 1857 (two months ago) the stock in Great Britain, including 110 000 bales at the mills, was only 513 000 bales, or about eight weeks' requirements for home consumption."

The Times reports yesterday's cotton market as follows:

New York and Liverpool were lower, and this market ruled weak and irregular closing dull at ⅛c. decline from Saturday's figures. The sales were only 3,250 bales.

The official closing report of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange today was as follows:

	To-Day.	Yesterday
Low Ordinary	7	7⅛
Ordinary	7¼	7⅜
Good Ordinary	8⅜	8½
Low Middling	9⅜	9⅝
Middling	10⅛	10⅜
Good Middling	11	11⅛
Middling Fair	Nom.	Nom

Sales to-day, 3,250 bales. Market dull.

VOL. 24. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 28, 1878. NO. 13

Others shall sing the song,
Others shall right the wrong,
Finish what I begin,
And all I fail of, win.

What matter, I or they?
Mine, or another's day,
So the right word be said,
And the life sweet, made?

Hail to the coming singers!
Hail to the brave light-bringers!
Forward I look, and share
All that they sing, or dare.

The airs of heaven blow o'er me,
A glory stings before me,
Of what mankind shall be—
Fire, generous, brave and free.

Ring, bells, in unreared steeples,
The seer's unborn peoples!
Sound, trumpets, far-off blown,
Your triumph is my own.

John G. Whittier.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—The Department of State is in receipt of official information down to the fifth instant from the United States consul general at Havana, and reports that up to that time the number of insurgents in the central department was over 2,000. The insurgents still occupied for in Eastern and Los Villas districts were variously estimated at from 2,000 to 4,000.

The terms given to the insurgents are generally regarded as honorable to them as to Spain. The rancors and animosities between the Cubans and Spaniards, which marked the early years of the war, have to a great extent disappeared, and the consul has no doubt that the remaining ones will before long give in their submission. The time is, on the whole, propitious for the introduction of the promised reforms on the island.

NEW YORK, March 19.—A special from Bismarck, D. T., says: Fresh reports from Poplar River confirm the previous rumors that the hostiles, suffering for food and buffalo-hides, are moving south. The reservation Indians north of the Missouri are among the forces from fear of Sitting Bull.

NEW YORK, March 20.—Dates from Rio Janeiro to the twenty-second of January state that the yellow fever was severe there, the fatalities among the shipping reaching twenty-seven to thirty daily. Stringent quarantine regulations are being enforced, and fevers prevail in the city, where the mortality averages fifty daily.

Prof. Charles F. Hartt, of Cornell University, in charge of the Brazilian geological survey, died of yellow fever.

The details of the loss of the British steamer Ashanti, at Castillos, received at Rio Janeiro, shows that she got to within a short distance of land, but the surf was so heavy that no rescue could be attempted from the shore. Capt Bayne and thirty of the crew perished—only nine were saved.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 20.—The steamer St. Paul arrived to-day from Honolulu bringing as a passenger Princess Lilia Kalakeka, heir apparent to the Hawaiian throne.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 22.—Advices by steamer Alaska from Hong Kong to February 16 and Shanghai to February 17, show that the famine prevailing over the northern provinces is causing unparalleled distress, and taxation is virtually remitted in eight provinces, but too late to afford relief. The government's resources are exhausted, and an alternative of an enormous portion of the people is threatened.

Advices from Yokohama to February 28 announce that the Emperor of Japan sent to the Emperor of China a decoration of the first class and the order of merit.

CHICAGO, March 22.—Advices at headquarters of the army indicate that Sitting Bull's forces aggregate two thousand fighting men. They do not fight unless some one crosses the Yellowstone. The situation is regarded as critical.

CINCINNATI, March 22, 1878.—The steamer James W. Gatt, with a full load of freight and ninety passengers, sank yesterday a few miles below Carrollton, Ky. No lives lost. The steamer was valued at $30,000, and insured.

NEW YORK, March 23.—The steamer Magenta left Haverstraw at twenty minutes of seven, limited at Long Slag, took aboard a large number of passengers, and started on her way to New York. At ten minutes to seven she had steamed out in the stream about two miles, when the passengers were startled at hearing a slight noise around the steam chest. Before they could decide what was the cause a terrible explosion occurred, and the vessel was filled with steam.

The passengers in the after part of the boat rushed forward, and were met by the escaping steam, which killed many. In the frantic effort to emerge from the blinding vapor a scene of the wildest terror followed. When the steam cleared away there were found lying in the forward part, near the stove, the bodies of seven men, two dead, eight badly and two fatally scalded.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, March 20.—The Russians are constructing a railway from Kharkoff to Jaunholi, which will enable them to throw troops directly into Odessa into southern Bulgaria and the Aegean Sea.

Suleiman Pasha arrived at Constantinople yesterday.

It is rumored among the Catholics in England that the Pope will shortly make Rev. Dr. John Newman a cardinal.

A special to the Standard from Pesth states that the Austro-Hungarian government has ordered the suspension of work on five Russian torpedo-boats, commenced near Vienna, pending an inquiry.

The Daily Telegraph's Vienna correspondent telegraphs: It is urged in official circles here that England has no ground to make war without first going to the Congress. If she does she will have the disapprobation of Germany and Austria. If England compromises the Congress, Count Andrassy's policy will be thwarted, and the hope of an ultimate Anglo-Austrian understanding must be abandoned.

MADRID, March 20.—Prime Minister Canovas Del Castillo yesterday informed the Cortes that the cabinet had approved the Cuban peace conditions, which were very honorable.

ROME, March 20.—Franchi has assured a distinguished foreigner that Pope Leo wished for a strong and united Italy. He only required firm assurance of complete freedom of the Holy See. The temporal power was not a dogma.

LONDON, March 22.—The Times has a dispatch from Volo, saying that the villages of Olympus, Repsana, Curia and Litocharie were sacked and burned by the Turks. The women, children and old men were massacred, except some who escaped to the mountain, which is still covered with snow. Unless a ship relieves them they will probably perish from cold and hunger. The insurrection progresses steadily.

A special dispatch from Rome to the Times says: A consistory will be held on the twenty-eighth instant. No encyclical will be issued, the Pope not wishing to commit himself to any definite policy in the present complication of European affairs. His holiness will only deliver an allocution, avoiding all political allusions.

The Standard has a Rome dispatch saying: The head of the Jesuits recently proposed to return to Rome, but the Pope received the proposition coldly, and the Jesuits therefore are in opposition to the Pope's general policy.

HAVANA, March 22.—Occasional heavy rains continue, and only about one-fourth of the sugar crop has been made so far.

It is estimated now that the crop will fall short about thirty or thirty-five per cent.

BUCHAREST, March 23.—The typhus fevers are very prevalent here and at Turn-Magurelli.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 24.—Fifty thousand Turkish troops are now encamped in the plain of Buyukdere, and there are fifty battalions on the lines defending Constantinople.

The typhus is increasing here.

The Sanitary Commission have arrived at Erzeroum from Tokat. They found twenty thousand corpses buried two feet under the ground, frozen, but not decomposed. The commission are deliberating whether to evacuate the corpses or use quicklime.

HAVANA, March 23.—Advices received from St Thomas to the nineteenth instant say: In Barbadoes the harvesting of the sugar crop is progressing favorably. Breadstuffs and provisions are plentiful. In other Caribee islands the crops are favorable.

BERLIN, March 23.—The North German Gazette says: It is evident that Russia regards war with England as inevitable, and knows that she was never better able to wage it than now.

LONDON, March 25.—A telegram from Cowes says: There is no doubt the Eurydice was carrying too much sail. She had her lower and upper studding sails set.

A Portsmouth telegram says: It is feared, with the men embarked at Bermuda, and probably from Admiral Rey's squadron of North American and West Indies, that the Eurydice had nearly 500 persons on board.

It is supposed that the capsizing and sinking of the British naval training ship Eurydice, off the Isle of Wight, in the afternoon, was due to the suddenness with which the squall overtook the ship and the fact that its entire force fell on a full spread of her canvas. As she was completely close on shore, a dangerous gust would give probably no warning, when sail might have been shortened or the ship's helm altered so as to improve her position; added to which, it is possible that the disposition of her guns, stores or other dead weight may have given leverage to the force of the wind by lessening her ordinary stability.

Later.—It is now believed that the Eurydice had about three hundred and twenty officers and seamen, of whom two hundred and seventy were young men in training, besides about twenty officers and men taken on board at Bermuda as invalids.

The Times' editorial, discussing Derby's demands and Russia's concessions, concludes: Thus she (Russia) declines the only condition in which our government will send a plenipotentiary to Berlin.

BERLIN, March 25.—The North German Gazette says: Considering to-day's news, the meeting of the Congress at an early date can scarcely any longer be expected. War between Russia and England need not, however, yet be regarded as a necessary consequence of England's attitude.

LONDON, March 26.—The Times' correspondent at St. Petersburg concludes a dispatch: Influential and moderate politicians remark that the fear of England's policy will force Russia to occupy Constantinople and drive the Sultan from Europe.

The correspondent adds: The only hope of peace is the speedy assembling of the Congress. That hope, however, throughout Russia, is fast fading.

The bellicose excitement is intense even in St. Petersburg.

Baltimore Conference.

This body adjourned on Thursday, March 14. We give additional items from the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist:

STATEMENT OF BISHOP M'TYEIRE.

The president of this body would respectfully submit the following statement, and request that it be made part of the journal:

I have received eighteen petitions or memorials from as many official boards within the bounds of this Conference, requesting that the number of presiding elders' districts be lessened and their territory enlarged. I respectfully acknowledge the receipt of these memorials, and represent to the brethren who send them that their proper direction would be to the General Conference, which alone has power to change the present law limiting the number of appointments in a district.

Agreeably to the wish expressed, and in pursuance of a policy which I consider for the best interest of the church, I have, according to the power vested in me, reduced the districts from nine to eight.

H. N. M'TYEIRE,
President Baltimore Annual Conference, M. E. Church South.

The Bishop stated that he had received a letter from Van Buren Ark., asking that he would send them a preacher. The Baltimore Conference had two men now on the Pacific slope. One of these, J. W. Compton, was stationed at Walla Walla, Oregon, and had been elected by the Oregon Conference a delegate to the General Conference. Laborers are much needed in Idaho, Kansas, California and Oregon, and throughout that vast western territory, where thirty, forty and fifty miles apart made a circuit residence quite comfortable. It was necessary that the Methodist rule should be followed, and the brethren should leave the old and comfortable places to seek these fields, where they were not only wanted but most wanted. It was true the law gave the Bishop the power to transfer the preachers from one Conference to another, but in this case the distance was so far that he would not assume the prerogative, but hoped a number of the young men would consult with Bro. Compton, and Dr. M'Ferrin, missionary secretary, and go forth to these new fields of labor.

The Conference proceeded to the election of the two remaining clerical delegates to the General Conference, and four clerical and lay alternates. The balloting resulted as follows: Clerical delegates: F. H. Whisner and Dr. S. S. Rozell. Clerical alternates: J. S. Gardner, Ezra E. Busey and Nelson Head. Lay alternates: John W. Watson, J. B. Wilson, S. B. Williams and L. M. Wilson.

Dr. S. S. Rozell, of the Baltimore district, was relieved from active work and granted a supernumerary relation.

The financial secretary, George Y. Tyler, having completed the general statistics of the church for the year, reported as follows: Membership, whites, 28,337; colored, 92; added during the year, 3,501; died, 321; increase over previous year, 775; baptisms, children, 1,371; adults, 1,181; decrease, 131; churches, 318—increase, 8; probable value, $532,667—increase, $5,811; amount raised for building and improving, $31,036 78—decrease, $3,043 17; present indebtedness, $67,760 07—decrease, $2,586 76; Sunday schools, 115—increase 20; expenses of Sunday schools, $5,780 88—decrease, $267 61; scholars in schools, 21,658—increase, 1,475; conversions in schools, 981—increase 31.

The joint board of finance Rev. S. K. Cox, D. D., chairman, reported the total amount received from districts and collections as follows: For superannuated fund, $5,100; Bishops' fund, $1,242 91; educational fund, $1,105 21; Bible cause, $221 27; total, $7,669 39. Disbursed as follows: To superannuated preachers, and to widows and orphans of deceased preachers, $5,100; paid the Bishops, $1,242 91; paid Randolph Macon College, $1,105 21; paid Bible societies in Maryland and Virginia, $221 27; total, $7,669 39. Estimates for the ensuing year: For superannuated fund $5,900; for Bishops' fund, $1,550; for educational fund, $2,000, for expenses of delegates to the General Conference $650; total, $10,100. Collections for expenses of General Conference delegates will be taken up in all the churches on or before the third Sunday in April. The report was adopted.

The eighteenth question of the general minutes was then considered: "Who are superannuated?" Under it the following responded, and were continued in their several relations: Thomas B. Sargent, Samuel Kepler, J. W. Tongue, Thomas Hildebrand, A. A. Eskridge, Henry Hoffman, William H. Wheelwright, William J. Perry, William Hedges, Elias Welty, P. S. E. Sixens, John Hank, Ephraim S. Kregle, George Stevenson and John W. Ewan. W. H. D. Harper was transferred from the superannuated to the effective list. Dr. John Polsal was transferred from the effective to the supernumerary list.

John M. Bass, Esq., of Nashville, died in New Orleans, March 11.

State Sunday School Convention.

At a meeting of the pastors, superintendents and teachers, representing the several churches and Sabbath schools in the city of Jackson, held at the Methodist church on Sabbath afternoon, the seventeenth instant, the matter of calling a State Sunday school convention was discussed and agreed upon, and the undersigned appointed a committee to make all necessary arrangements for the same.

In view of the fact that the International Sunday School Convention will be held at Atlanta, Ga., on the seventeenth of April, and it being desirable to have our State represented in that body, the committee have designated Friday, April 5, and the city of Jackson as the place for holding the first meeting of the State Sunday School Convention of Mississippi. We earnestly and cordially invite all Sunday school workers, of all Protestant denominations, to attend, and come prepared to give others the benefit of their experience and success in conducting Sunday schools. Each Sunday school will be entitled to one delegate. Superintendents are requested to bring the subject before their schools, with a view to the election of a delegate. All who expect to attend should notify the chairman of the committee before the first of April, in order that homes may be assigned them during their stay.

Should the railroads grant reduced rates to delegates, due notice will be given.

Gen. A. P. Stewart, chancellor of the University of Mississippi, has been invited to deliver the opening address on Friday night.

The convention will organize at ten o'clock A. M., on Friday.

J. L. Power, Presbyterian School.
W. J. Brown, Jr., Methodist School.
Wilbur Hobby, Baptist School.
H. M. Smith, Episcopal School.
Oliver Fulton, Episcopal Sunday School.

Bishop Marvin's Biography.

Rev. T. M. Finney, D. D., member of the St. Louis Conference, and president of Bellevue Collegiate Institute, Caledonia, Mo., has undertaken this important literary work. He solicits aid in collecting materials for it. The Bishop was known to a great many people, and there are persons in all sections of the Southern country who can contribute items of interest. The following instructions and suggestions may serve as a guide to those who may be disposed to respond to Dr. Finney's request:

Furnish, from personal knowledge or authentic information, incidents of his social intercourse and of his pastoral and Episcopal labors; and his pulpit ministrations in regular services, protracted meetings, church dedications, and other special occasions, together with recollections of sermons and addresses.

Give, as accurately as may be, the date and locality of such incidents, and the sources of information and other authentications of them.

Furnish the originals or copies of letters which may be supposed to be of public interest, or illustrative of personal or ministerial character.

All replies, to be of use, must be made before April 15 next—all addressed to Caledonia, Washington county, Mo.

Mansfield Female College.

MR. EDITOR: On March 15 we spent a very pleasant evening at the college, and were handsomely entertained by a well-adjusted closing exercise of a two days' examination.

President Armstrong has adopted the plan of having monthly reviews and examinations. The closing exercises of to-day consisted in reading original compositions by the young ladies. A well-trained calisthenic exercise closed the entertainment. The whole school, in uniform of blue and red, with metal tuitions, went through with these scientific motions or exercises, by which every muscle of the body is brought into action. They are admirably adapted to the development of the physical constitution. The president says that since the girls have been thus exercised they look better, study better, eat heartier, and complain less at what they have to eat. The college numbers about sixty pupils, which seems small; but, compared with other things, it is a fair success.

J. PIPES.

MANSFIELD, La., March 9, 1878.

NOTICE.—Rev. J. H. Winborne, L. E., has been appointed preacher in charge of Magnolia circuit, Woodville district. Rev. J. S. Arbothnot, L. D., has been appointed preacher in charge of Tickfaw mission, in said district.

JAS. A. GODFREY, P. E.

GREENSBORO, La., March 9, 1878.

Even so good and so genial a man as Archbishop Leighton was compelled once to exclaim: "Oh, what a weariness it is to live among men and find so few men, and among Christians and find so few Christians!" Once he prayed: "Deliver me, O Lord, from the errors of wise men, yea, and of good men."

From Brazil.

PROVINCE OF SAN PAULO, BRAZIL,
February 15, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: I suppose an occasional letter from this empire will be acceptable to you, and hence I write this.

The political situation in Brazil is becoming quite interesting, and the whole population are turning their attention to political questions with unwonted interest.

When the Emperor returned home, after his long absence, he found the general condition of the country such that it was necessary to call around him a new cabinet. The members of this cabinet all belong to the Liberal party. This new ministry are pledged to reform the civil service, and to promote a more economical administration of the government in all departments; and all this is necessary, as the government has become almost bankrupt through the waste and bad management of the Conservative ministry. But it is generally understood that the new ministry intend in good faith to propose, as the two most important measures of their administration: First, the complete separation of Church and State; and, second, to make marriage a civil contract. The discussion of these two great measures will stir society to its foundations. These two measures, if carried, will take away the two most fruitful sources of wealth to the Roman Catholic priests.

The bishops, by the laws of Brazil, are recognized as princes of the empire, and their salaries, with the perquisites of office, give them a princely income. Again, according to the laws of the Established Church and of the empire, marriage is now recognized as a sacrament of the church, and as such none but Roman priests can celebrate the rites of matrimony between Roman Catholic citizens; and the laws of the Romish Church forbid the marriage of near blood kindred; yet Brazilians will almost always marry the nearest of kin, if possible. Double cousins, an uncle or an aunt, as a general rule, is preferred. I suppose that two-thirds of all the marriages among Brazilians are within the prohibited degrees; but a dispensation or indulgence can always be purchased if the money can be raised. The price of those dispensations varies according to the nearness of kin, and the wealth of the parties. The annual sales of those dispensations are a very fruitful source of wealth to the bishops and clergy of the Established Church; and, of course, if marriage becomes by law a civil contract, instead of a church sacrament, this source of revenue will soon cease.

From the foregoing you will see that, as a matter of course, not only the Jesuits, and the Ultramontane party generally, but well-nigh all the clergy of the Established Church, will oppose those great measures of reform with all the zeal and bitterness of men contending for what they consider their sacred and vested rights.

At present Brazil is the paradise of priests. I presume there is no country on the globe where their condition is more pleasant. But if those two great measures of reform are successful Roman Catholic priests will become as other men.

But it will be extremely difficult for the ministry to carry those measures with such formidable odds against them. True, they will be supported by a large proportion of the wealth and intelligence of the country. The earnest friends of progress and of freedom will support them in all parts of the empire; and besides, the Romish Church, by her warfare against Free Masonry, has alienated many thousands who would otherwise have been her friends.

SOJOURNER.

Moody and Sankey, says the Christian Union, have lifted the interest in the meetings at the Boston Tabernacle to its old height of last winter. The audiences never were larger than they have been this past week, and both the preacher and the singer seem to be in their best working order. Even the afternoon attendance has risen to several thousands, and in the evening the immense building has been packed, standing-room and all. The neighboring Clarendon and Berkeley Street churches have been called into requisition for after meetings. The community at large does not seem to be as deeply moved as it was last year, but it is too soon to forecast results.

A nose which gets red after walking, or drinking hot tea, denotes something wrong with the digestive organs, for the cure of which medical advice should be taken.

From California.

MR. EDITOR: As requested by some of the brethren of the Mississippi Conference, I will now write, from my new field of labor, a few lines to the ADVOCATE. I arrived here on the fourteenth of January, and have been laboring since as best I could under the circumstances. It began to rain the day before my arrival, and has been raining about half of the time ever since. Hence the rain has filled about half of my appointments, and the mud has seriously interfered with the people's attendance upon the other half. However, we hope for better things soon. My circuit is situated in the Sacramento valley, about one hundred miles above Sacramento city, estimating from its center; and includes seven rail stations, with as much territory in the country as I may be able to supply. These railroad towns contain from forty to seven hundred inhabitants each, and are surrounded by a tolerably thickly-settled country, which is considered to be as beautiful and fertile as any part of California. Add to this the fact that this is a new country, now in process of rapid development, and you will readily see that this work ought to be manned by two or three preachers, instead of one. And this is no isolated case. Many circuits are in a similar condition. Such is the scarcity of men in this Conference that much important territory, in which, with proper attention, strong circuits and stations would soon be established, must be either partially or totally neglected. I think that if the young preachers of the Mississippi and other Conferences could properly appreciate the necessities of this Conference—if they could only realize the momentous importance of ministerial labor in this luxuriant field, now white unto the harvest—some of them would surely come over and help us.

Wishing my Mississippi brethren abundant success, and asking an interest in their prayers, I will close this letter.

M. B. SHARRARD.

Allen.

MR. EDITOR: Allen is in Natchitoches parish, sixteen miles from the town of the same name; the same distance from Pleasant Hill, and in the Pleasant Hill circuit. The village is situated on the hills contiguous to the alluvial lands of Bayou Pierre. Six miles distant is the largest Red river landing. The village contains about one hundred and fifty souls—whites, Mexicans and negroes. The whites exceed in number. The circuit-rider found his way to this "waste place in the wilderness," and sowed the seed of gospel truth. In 1877 a teaching was made, and Bro. J. M. Franklin organized a society of seven members. Last year a neat Methodist church was erected and paid for, and the assessment ($60) was paid our preacher. The wake of the circuit rider was followed closely by our Baptist brethren. They worship in the Methodist church. Sabbath-school, prayer-meeting and class meeting are held weekly. A temperance council of nearly fifty members is full of life. Our church now numbers twenty members. In the faith two have died, but they are not dead.

The stars go down
To rise upon some fairer shore,
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown
They shine for evermore.

LAYMAN.

MARCH 16, 1878.

The International Sunday School Convention will meet at Atlanta, Ga., April 17-21. Information as to routes of travel, rates of fare, etc., will be furnished by addressing W. G. Whidby, Esq., Atlanta, Ga. We give the following extracts from the circular of the sub-committee on delegations:

The convention will be strictly a delegated body.

Where State organizations exist, it is confidently expected that they will secure full representation at the convention. Where no such organizations exist, applications for appointment, or nominations of suitable parties, should be made as follows:

For Canada, the New England States and New York, to the Rev. Henry M. Parsons, 51 Chippewa street, Buffalo, N. Y.

For the Middle, Western and Pacific States, to the Rev. George A. Pelz, Jamestown, N. Y.

For the Southern and Southwestern States, to the Rev. T. C. Boykin, Atlanta, Ga.

Evil ministers of good things are as torches, a light to others, a waste to none but themselves only.—Hooker.

THURSDAY, MARCH 28, 1878.

A HYMN.

Hear the tingle smile the mountains,
Call from vers to the sea:
Voice of God and prayer of nations
This the choral song shall be

CHORUS.

All the world for Jesus,
All the world for Jesus,
All the world for Jesus,
Forevermore shall be.

Christian, up, the Master calls thee
In the dark world's weary grooms,
In the cry of sin-bound nations,
Pleading in pathetic tones.

Chorus.—All the world for Jesus etc.

Haste, thy sun's slope to its setting;
Haste, the shadows longer fall;
Up the King his chariot taketh,
Hear his ringing trumpet call.

Chorus.—All the world for Jesus etc.

Church of God, gird on the armor,
Saints and angels hem it to share
In the note of triumph rising,
Through the throne transformed air.

Chorus.—All the world for Jesus, etc.

Sketch of Rev. B. M. Drake.

NUMBER III.

Boldly all waits now
The bike way throws stock,
Drop it where thorns and thistles grow,
Sending it on the rock.

Mr. Drake was returned to Washington in 1852, where he gave his influence to colonization, and still more earnestly to the cause of missions. Being a manager of an auxiliary missionary society, he gave special attention to the Chahta Indians, to evangelize whom an effort had been making for several years. He conducted also a successful camp meeting. In October he was married to the only daughter of Capt. J. T. and Mrs. E. A. Magruder, of Jefferson county, Miss. At the close of the year he was appointed to Natchez station and by the spontaneous suffrage of his brethren was elected a delegate to the General Conference. He started for Pittsburg in time to turn aside for a visit to his parents, from whence he traveled toward Louisville, preaching as he went, at places where he exercised his early ministry. Arriving at the city, he found a number of preachers, who, with himself, took a boat. They added others on the way till they numbered 28, delegates on a crowded steamer. They spent their time in religious exercises, conversation, and debate on the topics they expected to come before them. "Never," he writes, "have I seen more good feeling among brethren." The last day, which was the Sabbath, was the best day. Bishop McKendree preached in the morning, and Bro. Akers concluded. In the afternoon Dr. Light preached, and the venerable Father Gwinn concluded by exhorting the preachers to increased holiness under the storm which threatened our church. His talk was overwhelming." "Our stay at Louisville and Cincinnati was short. Both are beautiful towns, but for some time past the hand of pretended reform in our church government has well-nigh spoiled the fair face of our Zion." He alludes to late religious influences which were healing dissensions, and says: "In Louisville few could be found to petition for a change; and in Cincinnati, out of 1,100 members, only ten range with the radicals." On arriving at Pittsburg he was appointed on two committees, which occupied him till the close of Conference. He said the stationed preachers there had been reformers for several years, and had, by neglecting the discipline of the church, brought it into disrepute, and the reform had brought desolation and soul-destruction in its train. The secession amounted to about 1,000—much less than had been feared.

During the summer Mr. Drake was elected to take the place of Rev. J. C. Burruss as president and steward of the E. F. Academy in Washington; and believing it would open as great a field of usefulness as elsewhere, and for secondary reasons, he entered in the fall with almost unparalleled energy on its various duties, first in connection with Mrs. C. M. Thayer, and then with Miss S. Brewer. Mrs. Thomas.* The school was soon after favored with a powerful revival. Many "were born there" who continued to adorn their profession. A large proportion have crossed the flood giving their dying testimony to the reality of the change. Some who were pupils then yet live, and doubtless remember the affectionate solicitude evinced for their personal comfort and their eternal salvation. May they all be found at the right hand " when God writeth up the people." In August, 1830, his eldest brother-in-law, being ill at Augusta College, and the health of Capt. Magruder not permitting either parent to go to him, he offered himself as a substitute, and, though just recovering from a severe fever, he started, late in August; on horseback the river being very low, arranging his route so as to accomplish several objects. After passing Clinton, having gained strength, he traveled rapidly toward the Chahta nation. Crossing the line, he saw clean dressed Indians, and followed them along a trace, over hills and through canebrakes, till they joined the missionaries, Smith and Sims, who proceeded with them a short distance to an arbor and rude seats, where they found a large number of Chahtas assembled for a cry or funeral (formerly a pole pulling, at which, during their drunken revels, there were often several killed.). At the roots of 60 or 70 trees, in 2 lines, 100 feet apart, they had deposited their baggage, having the arbor in the midst. The missionaries, also choosing their tree, were immediately surrounded by the Indians, shaking hands, and greeting them with the words, Bohashela Mah! Then, all commencing to sing, they marched toward the arbor for service. "I, then," Mr. Drake says, "for the first time addressed a congregation through an interpreter. I was greatly affected by the singing." "They then formed into groups, addressed by native preachers, after which supper was served (consisting of hominy and venison) in large bowls. One bowl was sent to us. We had one spoon." "Overcome with fatigue, I fell asleep. I was waked by the most melodious music I think I ever heard. The first thought that struck me was the loud acclamation that John heard from the multitude out of every nation," etc. He preached again in the morning, and rode 32 miles to Col. F.'s. In the evening he visited a Presbyterian mission. Traveling on from 30 to 43 miles a day, he continued by Columbus, Miss., Pikeville, Ala., and intermediate stations, to Tuscumbia for the Sabbath, hoping to hear Bro. Paine. Spent an evening with Bro. Paine and his wife, and was invited to preach instead. Then on by Franklin, Tenn., preaching or hearing as he went, and at night writing beautiful accounts of his journey. He says: "God only knows whether all the seed fell by the wayside." Crossing the spurs of the Cumberland, he called at Father G.'s, in Nashville; stopped two days at his sister's, in Wilson county, and, hearing of a camp meeting on the way to his father's stopped for the Sabbath; preached in the afternoon, and reached home the next day. He says: "I will not attempt to describe the meeting with my parents. * * *. How pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." Leaving there in a few days, he rode on toward Bardstown, where Bro. Lindsay was to hold a quarterly meeting, and preached both days; thence to Frankfort. Arriving about sunset, he went to view the town and capital. Hearing church-bells, he followed one to a Presbyterian church and heard a good lecture.

From Augusta he writes, September 30: "I arrived here yesterday evening. I felt intense anxiety to hear from Leonard. I found him sitting up. He is now at Dr. Davis'." Returning with him in safety by the river, he was in time to resume his duties in the academy. This account is given as a specimen of the zeal and activity which continued forty years. In December he attended the dying bed of his father-in-law. For three years of his presidency he received work from the Conference near his residence. Finding his own and his wife's health failing under the duties and responsibilities resting on them, and an effort being made by the trustees to limit his ministerial labors, he handed them his resignation in the spring of 1832 to take effect in December. In May he attended the General Conference in Philadelphia, and was appointed on two laborious committees.

Dr. Thomas, who took his place the next year as president of the academy, also supplied it in his absence. At the Conference in Vicksburg, at the close of the year, he introduced a favorite plan for a manual labor school. A committee was appointed to prepare an address, which they submitted the next year. Commissioners were appointed in 1833 to take measures for locating the school, and the presiding elders to act as agents. Mr. Drake was appointed to New Orleans. Transferring his furniture, etc.; to Dr. Thomas, he was soon ready to leave with his family, accompanied by his mother-in-law for a few weeks. December 31 he writes to his wife's youngest brother: "We arrived in health yesterday morning at 11. I preached three times." Having the assistance of Bro. Curtiss, he made an appointment at Lafayette, and organized a church of seven members. He also collected a considerable amount for building another church, and commenced a history of Methodism. It was a year of trial. In May and June the city was scourged by cholera, and in July yellow fever commenced, from both which his family suffered. After a fatiguing day of labor in September, he was again prostrated by the latter disease. As soon as able to be up he took his family to Mississippi. Allowing himself only a few days of rest, and still weak, he returned, partly for the example, and because most of the Protestant ministers had left the city. October 21 he writes: "I am getting quite strong. Yesterday I preached three times, met two classes, married a couple, baptized adults and infants, and am pretty well today." Nevertheless, his health and that of his family were so far from being restored that Bishop Emory appointed him to Cole's Creek circuit. This year he answered an article in the Christian Advocate which favored theological schools. In 1835 he was appointed presiding elder of the Natchez district, and continued four years. Not being able to suit himself with a residence, he built a small house near the old homestead (without intending a permanent location.) Various circumstances, which seemed providential, from time to time continued him there.

* A good shoot on a root. You like the name of the craft.

Note.—In No. 2 there were two errors. Rev. Miles Harper preceded L. Hibbs in New Orleans, and the city was made a station in 1829, during the pastorate of Rev. W. M. Curtiss.

Out in the World.

A visit to Fort Worth, Waco and San Antonio was intended, but circumstances were too pressing to gratify so coveted a privilege.

Galveston bears about the same relation to New Orleans that Kansas City does to St. Louis. It has about the same number of inhabitants, is about the same distance, and has about the same amount of business, except the shipping. It is the key to Texas, and is regarded as a shipping point of considerable importance. Texans talk of it much as Louisianians do of New Orleans, or Missourians do of St. Louis. Situated on an island, and so near the level of the sea, it must be more or less exposed to the dangers of the equinoctial gales. Two days' observations were sufficient to disclose a good degree of activity in trade, both local and foreign. In the business part of the city the houses are substantial, but the private residences are mostly framed; indeed it has too little of brick, and most too much of plank and scantling, to insure it against the ravages of fire. The Tremont House is the only first-class hotel where travelers can find all the accommodations they wish.

On Sunday morning we visited St. John's Sunday school, and remained until after the public services at eleven o'clock. The choir discoursed the songs of Zion as a choir can only do. For such a day, such an occasion and such appropriate surroundings the communicants were not numerous. We attended St. James' at night. Rev. Mr Briggs, of the Alabama Conference, a transfer to supply this station, had just arrived, and for the first time preached to his new parishioners. The impression upon the people was very encouraging to him, and a good omen of the interest and activity of the membership for this Conference year. The choir did well, so far as we could judge. The conviction is growing on me more and more that there is something radically wrong in choirs, and that if we could dispense with them, and substitute congregational singing instead, we should have more vitality in the church, and the word of the minister would take deeper hold upon the people. Rev. N. A. Cravens, a superannuated preacher of the Texas Conference, lives here. He is looking well, being the embodiment of a noble old man at the ripe age of seventy-five. Dr. John gets up a good paper for our Texas brethren. We had the pleasure of an introduction to him, and a good opportunity of visiting his editorial sanctum."

How to get from Galveston to Lake Charles was an important inquiry. Our friend, Rev. W. B. Norris, a lumber merchant, had a schooner at the wharf unloading, and it would soon be ready to sail for our destination. We were aboard the Phœnix in due time; but, from unavoidable hinderances, must remain aboard a night before we can loose our cable and spread our sails to the breeze. We could see no special connection between the name of the vessel and the fabled bird whose name it bears; but we could imagine there was a resemblance between it and the old ship of Zion. Galveston fades away in the distance; on our left the coast of Texas and Louisiana was visible to the eye; on our right the broad sea, the wide waste of waters, seemed to kiss the blue and lowering sky. For the first time we are out on the ocean sailing. It is a type of our voyage to a home beyond the tide. A voyage is not always smooth, as I learned before the sun had set in the west. We ran into a rough sea—a sea which had the courage to attack us in front and side. We plunged, we rolled, we struggled amid the waves. The contest was waged until midnight, when we entered the Calcasieu Pass. From this point up the winds were too strong, yet we made good time to our destination.

The habit of swearing with women is exceedingly strong; so when we went aboard that had to be ruled and conquered in some way. How could it be done without offending? We met it in the spirit of our Master—we confronted it boldly. We had the satisfaction of seeing them respect the minister and reverence his mission, at least for the time being. The captain sat and heard us expound the doctrine of the atonement, and the reason why men should be punished for their sins in a future state. Great kindness was shown us by all aboard, for which they have sincere thanks.

Our travels are over for the present. The appointment by the Bishop is reached, and we are kindly received. The pastoral work is entered with hope of doing good.

The Revival Basis.

There is much infidelity in the civilized world—in the church and in the pulpit. Many ministers are unconsciously affected by it. There is, as a natural result, a lack of power in the services of the sanctuary, in the word preached. Sinners are not now convicted and converted as at various times in the history of the church.

Churches and ministers, forgetful of the true source of power, resort to sensationalism to influence men, to draw them to the church, and into the church. But what does all this, in the end, amount to? The result can be only evil.

A genuine revival of religion is always based upon the cardinal doctrines of the gospel, and always follows the faithful proclamation of them. Every preacher who studies these doctrines, and believes them—yes, believes them himself, believes them so as to make them a part of his being and life, and preaches them plainly, pointedly, lovingly, freshly, perseveringly—finds the gospel still "the power of God." I do not speak of cold, dead presentations of truth. Such preaching only shows that the preacher does not believe his own preaching, and that he cares not for the honor of his Master or the safety of his hearers. There is nothing which so animates the mind as a clear apprehension of the truths of the gospel. A man cannot believe them and preach coldly.

If ministers of the gospel would now begin to preach these doctrines—the necessity of regeneration, the witness of the Spirit, the atonement, justification, the resurrection, eternal punishment, eternal life—and continue to preach them earnestly, relying upon the Holy Ghost, in less than twelve months thousands would be converted, and new life would be infused into the church.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as, 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

DIED, in the city of Jackson, Miss., on the morning of January 14, 1878, MRS. MARTHA B., widow of the late J. G. Andrews, of Madison county, Miss., in the sixty-sixth year of her age. She had given forty years of godly living to the Methodist Church.

Sister Andrews' death was not unexpected. A slow but constant giving way of vital force had been apparent to her friends for years; and although it had never occasioned serious alarm, it was not unheeded by her family or by herself. Her cheerful, even playful, humor made her face sunny when the deep sorrow lay upon her heart; for she had known sorrow. Widowed when the bloom was still upon her cheek, she had felt with all its weight the crushing blow, and then, after years of anxious, motherly care, her oldest son was brought to her door a mangled corpse, crushed to death beneath the wheels of a railroad car. From this terrible stroke she never recovered. Her whole nervous system seemed to respond to the shock, and the gradual letting down followed.

One of her controlling characteristics was maternal devotion. It never abated or grew weary. At the death of her husband she was young, wealthy, beautiful, intelligent and accomplished. Occupying high social position, it was natural that she should court society, and equally that she should be attractive. But God had given her four children, and to their culture she resolved to devote her life; and well and successfully was the work done. Her children "rise up and call her blessed." With bowed heads and satisfied hearts they stood round her lifeless form, thankful that a patient, thoughtful, gentle, prayerful mother had, under God, brought them so far along the path to heaven. And he whose name even caused a tear of joy to flow, bent over the prostrate form, enshrined, but submissive and trustful.

Sister Andrews had been forty years a member of the church. To her, religion was a power in life; and that life was in God. She had let his royal white life's cup of pleasure was full to its brim, and had not been satisfied until the Spirit witnessed her adoption. Through all the years of struggle and sorrow she cast her care on him who cared for her. Her home was the resting place of the weary, the asylum of the afflicted, while charity and hospitality welcomed the coming guest, and dispensed their bounty with a liberal hand.

When the reverses of fortune came, and she learned what it was to be in need, she was still contented and thankful. For some weeks before her death her disease seemed to have undermined her whole constitution, and the mind felt the bodily decay; but she was even then cheerfully resigned to the will of God. In my last interview with her—it was my first pastoral visit—I specially remarked her meek, gentle, joyous submission. There were no parting words; but the Christ-like in her life makes her memory precious to all who knew her. Sorrow has come to her household, but it is not the sorrow of such as have no hope.

PASTOR.

JOSIAH SIRMON was born in Barnwell district, S. C., September 20, 1802, and died in Calcasieu parish, La., January 8, 1878. Bro. Sirmon was a very gifted man in the Scriptures. He had made the word of God the man of his counsel for many years. He had great influence in this country. Every one trusted and looked upon him as an honest and good man—just such a man as we needed; yet he that doeth all things well called him from the field of labor. He had been suffering for five months before the Master called him home to receive the reward of his labors, and during all that time he never murmured. He was happy amidst all his pains, ever praising and thanking God for all his goodness to so unworthy a sinner. When told that he must soon die he answered: "I fear it not." He was a faithful member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for nearly forty years—one who was an ornament and example to all of the household of faith, never changing from the faith that was handed down to him from his fathers. He loved the Methodist Church, and was ever obedient to her laws. He told the writer that he loved the church and the servants of Jesus, and he proved it by the best of all proofs: even a holy life among men. He was one of the salts that never lost its savor, for he loved to talk of Jesus: a light that was never dimmed, for even the most wicked spoke well of him. He was a good husband, and an example for fathers, ever trying to lead his children in the way of life. Four of them are members of Zion; and, if the prayers of a sainted father have any power, we expect soon to see the other two brought to the feet of Jesus. A few days before he died he called his wife and children around him and charged them to ever press onward, and never turn back from that road that would lead them to God and eternal life. He warned them of a judgment to come, and implored all who had not found Jesus precious to their souls to work while it was day. His mind remained firm till the moment of death. About twenty-five minutes before he departed he again called his family and bade them good-by. He then closed his eyes, murmured a prayer, and without a struggle fell asleep in Jesus.

P. GALVIN.

THE following preamble and resolutions were adopted by the quarterly Conference of Uniontown station, Alabama Conference, at its first regular meeting, A. D. 1878:

Whereas, Almighty God has seen proper to take from our midst by death our beloved brother, Col. CHARLES WALKER, who was a prominent and useful citizen of this community, and, until overtaken by bodily infirmities, one of the most active and influential members of the Methodist Church at this place, filling, as he did, from time to time, with great efficiency and satisfaction its most important official stations, and at all times contributing to its moral support the treasures of a ripe Christian experience, and to the advancement of its interests and enterprises the genius of a superior judgment and the liberality of a generous heart; and whereas, This sad occurrence has awakened but one voice throughout the entire community—that of sorrow and regret; and whereas, We, the members of this quarterly Conference, are keenly sensible of the loss of this warm-hearted Christian friend and brother, whose venerable presence and wise counsels we so much enjoyed and appreciated; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Walker the church has lost a faithful, generous and devoted member, the community an influential, kind and useful citizen, and his family a true, loving and affectionate husband and father; that while we are laden with sorrow on account of this heavy bereavement, we recognize the hand of God in our affliction, and bow in humble submission to the will of him "who doeth all things well;" for, having many assurances of his readiness to meet God, we are persuaded to indulge the hope that our loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved, That we deeply and earnestly sympathize with the family and relatives of our sister, his wife, in their sad bereavement, and commend them in our prayers to him who has promised to be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless.

MRS. SARAH F. WEBB was born August 19, 1830, in Troup county, Ga.; was married to Reuben Webb October 6, 1851; died December 28, 1877, in Lee county, Ala., and was buried at Rock Springs church, her funeral being preached at that time by Rev. William H. Neal, of the Alabama Conference. She was a daughter of Rev. James H. and Phebe Starr. Sister Webb professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Rock Springs camp-ground, in Tallapoosa county, Ala., in the tenth year of her age. She leaves a devoted husband and eight children, all of whom are acceptable members of the church except her oldest son, and her youngest daughter, a mere child. Her children identified themselves with the church while young in imitation of the commendable example of their honored mother. Sister Webb was a lady of many excellencies of character. While she was a subject of long and sore bodily affliction she never complained, but seemed willing to suffer as well as do the will of her heavenly Father. Being seldom able to attend public worship, she still lived in the constant enjoyment of peace and communion with God. Her house was the weary itinerant's home, and often did they leave her refreshed spiritually and materially. She loved the church and the writer has often been encouraged by her words of cheer, and kindly suggestions as to the best plans for its prosperity and growth. Though a subject of long affliction, she died very expectedly—thought to have been congestion of the brain. She often spoke of death and seemed to have a premonition of near approach, and made mention of her mother, but said that she did not fear to meet it. Though she left no direct testimony in her last moments—being speechless some time before her death—yet all who knew her have every reason to trust she is now at rest in heaven.

R. H. REYNOLDS.

DIED, at her happy home in Baton Rouge parish, near Blackwater, on February 20, 1878, of apoplexy, our beloved sister, KATE BROWN, aged twenty-six. Her maiden name was Phelps. She was married to Bro. Wiley Brown four years ago, and joined the Methodist Church after her marriage. She was of a cheerful disposition, a regular attendant church, and loved our weekly prayer meetings. A very short time ago the writer talked with Sister Kate at prayer meeting, and asked her if she was converted. She answered that she was—that she was happy then. She was sick only a few hours. The summons was sudden and unexpected; but her lamp was trimmed and burning, and shining. As a candle goeth out, so her breath left her body, and her pure spirit took its flight to God. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors." She left a lovely little girl three years old, and stepchildren, who knew her only as a dear mother. To know Sister Kate was to love her. She has entwined around the hearts of all who knew her in church and our prayer meeting as a consistent member; but, thanks to God, heaven has gained a precious one.

A. H. REYNOLDS.

IN THE dispensation of providence we have lost from our midst Sister MARY E. RUSS, wife of Bro. Russ, who fell asleep in Jesus on the 5th of the present month. We sorrow not without hope, and how to the Lord in heaven; for God did it. It was well. She was our neighbor, friend, kind, an exemplary member of our church, loving wife, a devoted mother. Known was to be loved. Sister Russ was for some time one of the principal teachers in our Sunday school, taking great delight in directing young and tender minds under her care to the Star of Bethlehem.

Resolved, That in behalf of the Sunday school we give to Bro. Russ our deepest sympathy in his deep affliction, our prayers to sustain him, and a vacancy from us, as one of our stewards, our school teachers and co-workers, that his good providence guide him and his little boys in safety until they meet with her, who said on her dying bed, "Jasper, meet me in heaven, and bring the children up right."

By order of the quarterly Conference of Pearlington circuit, Seashore district, Mississippi Conference.

GEO. W. BROWN, S.

PEARLINGTON, MISS., Feb. 27, 1878.

A BRIEF LIFE, but full of love, only three and a half years did LEY AUSTIN spend on earth; yet the little flower gave abundant promise of lovely unfolding; but God came and plucked the sweet little flower up into heaven to bloom in all its beauty and fragrance never to wither. How bright and fair! Nothing in the register of heaven can be. Little Dad. was the light and joy of the household, the very picture of innocence and purity. Her little heart was ever sending forth love and cheerfulness like a gushing stream, that made every one happy about her. She loved the Sunday school and how beautifully she would sing her family favorite: "Happy day, happy day, when Jesus washed my sins away." You could hear her sweet, shrill voice above all others when this was sung. She evidently felt as much as though she understood fully its meaning. While sick she said, "Ma, if I die I'll go right up to heaven and be with my little sister." This was the little Dad. she was to call her mother on the day that she died, to whom he gave some money that her father had given her, saying: "Frankie will be the preacher." To-day little Dad. is a ministering spirit in heaven, and is watching for others to come.

DIED, on the twenty-sixth of December, in Kemper county, Miss., CATHERINE WOODALL, aged about eight years. The deceased was born in Henry county, Va., from which she moved in early life to Clarke county, Ala., where she was married to Thomas Woodall, who died many years ago, leaving her a widow with seven children, two only of whom survive her. Sister Woodall joined the Methodist Church forty years ago, and was ever active in her fidelity to the church of her choice. Though poor in this world's goods she was generous to the extent of her means, and willing to minister to the wants of the needy and suffering. Though from the beginning of her disease, she was never free from the attack, yet from her uniform christian life we believe she rests with the saints of God who have gone before. Her many friends in Alabama, as well as in Mississippi, will recognize the familiar name of "Aunt Kitty." May we all meet her on the other and brighter shore.

J. B. [illegible]

NETTIE B. HARRIS, only child of Britton D. and Mary E. Harris, was born the twenty-third of July, 1874, and died the twenty-second of January, 1878, aged three years and six months, lacking one day.

At the time of her death her mother was quite sick. Her grandmother Harris was there to assist in the household duties, and her father had stepped out to shop some. Nettie went into the dining-room for something to eat, and attempted to climb into the safe, when it fell on her, killing her almost instantly. A few hours before her death she kissed her mother and father and told them how much she loved them. Little Nettie was a sweet and spiritual child, and fondly precious to her parents because she was the only child. Two years ago she was baptized by the writer.

THE LAST HYMN.

BY MARIONNE FARNINGHAM.

[illegible] day was ending, in a village by the [illegible] sacred benediction touched the people [illegible] darkly, [illegible] they rose to face the sunset in the glowing [illegible] wards, [illegible] then hastened to their dwellings for God's [illegible] sire of rest.

[illegible] across the waters, and a storm [illegible] raging there;

[illegible] spirit moved above them—the wild [illegible] heart—

[illegible] and shook, and tore them, till [illegible] thundered, groaned and hopped, [illegible] my vessel in their yawning gulfs [illegible].

[illegible] were the people on that rocky [illegible] of Wales,

[illegible] dangers of coming morrows should be [illegible] of tales.

[illegible] sea had spent its passion, and should [illegible] the shore.

[illegible] and swollen victims, as it had [illegible] heretofore.

[illegible] winds blowing round her, a [illegible] Scotch student dried her eyes,

[illegible] along the billows a large vessel full [illegible] needs prophet to tell what the end [illegible] could ride in safety, near the shore [illegible] sea.

[illegible] people hurried from their [illegible] and thronged the beach,

[illegible] to cross the waters and the per- [illegible] reach;

[illegible] were wrung with sorrow, tender [illegible] and whitedread,

[illegible] angered by the tempest, to the fatal [illegible] tossed.

[illegible] in the middle of the bay of [illegible] town,

[illegible] Is the heaven-fur to seek for [illegible] drawn

[illegible] the white-shocked faces looked [illegible] on the sea,

[illegible] singing figure on the spar was [illegible].

[illegible] trembling watchers came the [illegible] passed by the wave;

[illegible] yet clung and floated, though no [illegible] could save.

[illegible] a short message: there's a [illegible] Shout away."

[illegible] heard that took it, and he- [illegible] what to say.

[illegible] of this sermon? Firstly? Sec- [illegible] Why?

[illegible] one thing to utter to the awful [illegible] through the trumpet "Look to [illegible] you hear?"

[illegible] sir," rang the answer o'er the [illegible] and clear.

[illegible] school. "He is singing 'Jesus [illegible] sinned."

[illegible] brought back the echo. While [illegible] waters roll,

[illegible] it was to hear him. "All the [illegible] to the waters of the restless [illegible].

[illegible] see no other refuge." Hangs my [illegible] on them;

[illegible] me not." The sleeper dropped [illegible].

[illegible] eyes looking homeward through [illegible] tears soon shone.

[illegible] to be with Jesus in the skies [illegible].

Unchallenged Speakers.

[illegible] is sometimes stated as an advan- [illegible] peculiar to clergymen that they [illegible] the whip ground to themselves, [illegible] can deliver their addresses with- [illegible] standing in any fear of a chal- [illegible]. Sometimes their brethren of [illegible] bar speak of this to preachers as [illegible] favorable to them.

[illegible] is this a mistake? Is it a serious disadvantage to a mod- [illegible] preacher that there is no one to [illegible] him in the course of talk that [illegible] be disorderly, or sit watching [illegible] preparation of reply? Is it [illegible] the best thing he is to speak with [illegible] what his hearers are to [illegible] give with submission, edeulated [illegible] him a positive injury?

[illegible] preacher ought to speak with [illegible] ority. He is an embassador from [illegible]. But, just because he is such [illegible] embassador, he ought to take the [illegible] care in preparing himself to [illegible] his message so that there [illegible] no mistake as to the intent [illegible] suggest Sovereign. Do we not, [illegible] ever, sometimes see that just the [illegible] effect is produced? A man [illegible] is utterly careless just because [illegible] is come to call him to account, [illegible] would be considered a strange [illegible] a metropolitan church to [illegible] an intelligent hearer rise at the [illegible] of the sermon and traverse the [illegible] aisle and tap the shoulder of the [illegible] who had just taken his [illegible]. But would sermons be just as [illegible] are now if the preacher knew [illegible] such thing were likely to [illegible]? Would he not be careful [illegible] the preparation of his sermons, to [illegible] they were cool arguments [illegible] calm deductions? Would he not be [illegible] to prepare himself with proofs [illegible] which he stated as facts? [illegible] not study to make his ap- [illegible] to the passions such as they [illegible]?

[illegible] state of affairs has existed [illegible] years ago, among the churches [illegible] the editor of this magazine [illegible] in North Carolina, was one [illegible] Sunday in Chapel Hill. It would [illegible] two hundred white and [illegible] colored people. But in- [illegible] a large part of the year, [illegible] desirable portion of the congre- [illegible] outside. The nearest house [illegible] the chapel was the dwelling [illegible] gentleman who was one of the [illegible] Sunday school teachers in his [illegible] State. He was the college- [illegible] friend of James K. Polk, and the first [illegible] we ever saw him was when he [illegible] had completed a walk of fifty [illegible] to meet his old college friend [illegible] the university.

[illegible] John C. Elliot got his middle [illegible] from his resemblance to a [illegible]. He was usually known as [illegible] Elliot." Small, thin, [illegible] and cut by innumerable wrin- [illegible] built of the archetypical de- [illegible] of an interrogation mark, with [illegible] disproportionately large head the [illegible] hair on which was cropped to [illegible] length, measured exactly by the [illegible] of the comb he was accustomed [illegible] to use. His appearance attracted attention [illegible] wherever he went. In some departments [illegible] was very learned, and his solid [illegible] doubtless dominated his congre- [illegible] tricities, and won for him the respect of a large class of citizens. He was what colored people would call "a powerful hearer of de word." Upon warm days he would walk into the meeting-house, throw his coat, if he had one, over the back of his seat, pull off his shoes to cool his understanding, and propping his head against his left hand, and supporting his left elbow with his right hand, he set himself to penetrate the speaker with anger eyes. The thing his soul most hated was nonsense. He had no kind of reverence. He would take up a slave or the Archbishop of Canterbury with equal patience, and, by Socratic methods, exhibit to him the ridiculousness of his errors.

If within the reach of practicability, Mr. Ghost Elliot was always at any service this editor held within his range. There are readers of this magazine in North Carolina who, when they peruse this article, will recollect how sometimes, when an assertion had been roundly made by the preacher, Mr. Elliot would rise in his place and say: "Doctor, what is supposed among theologians to be the proof of that?" Or: "Doctor, I have heard that circumstance stated quite differently." Or: "Doctor, that statement of yours has been publicly denied in the papers."

There was no laughing. Mr. Elliot was the oracle of that neighborhood. There were boys about there whom his skeptical ideas had infected. There were people in that audience not to be surpassed in what is called "a Boston audience," and Joseph Cook never ran a severer gauntlet in the Athens of America than the young professor from the university ran in that chapel in the pine woods. No one laughed; every one listened, and if Mr. Elliot had frequently got the better of the preacher, the preacher's occupation would have been gone.

To this day we feel the healthy influence of that instantaneous criticism. To this day, in preaching every now and then, it occurs to us that, somewhere in the church, there may be a "Ghost Elliot," who does not "speak out in meeting," but carries the objection away in his soul. Would it not be better that men should speak out?

Would it not sometimes be better that preachers should have at least once a month a sermon open to question and open to reply? Would it not puncture the gas bags? Would it not lead ecclesiastical engineers to know the weak spots in their fortifications? Would it not really be better that a man of learning and ability should have an opportunity to meet and answer the objection on the spot, than that the hearer, creating an objection in his own heart or mind, should go away feeling that no one could answer it?

We are not prepared to say, as the state of society is in this city, that that would be a practicable thing; but we do know that unchallenged speaking is not advantageous to the pulpit.

We learn what preaching is needed by the drawing from our people, in private, their objections, their difficulties and their doubts. Now and then a real good, honest doubter—a man quite as ready to doubt doubts as to doubt doctrine—frankly expressing his opinion, might be of considerable service to the cause of preaching.—Rev. Dr. Deems, in Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

Respect for the Truth.

There appeared one day in Judea—before the tribunal of justice—a man charged with wishing to make himself King. Interrogated by the magistrate, he confessed the crime but with an explanation. His kingdom was not of this world. It depended not on the spears of soldiers, but on the testimony of the truth. "Thou sayest it, I am a king. To this end I was born; for this cause came I into the world; that I should bear witness of the truth."

Then Pilate asked: "What is truth?" and without awaiting the answer which he deemed impossible to his skeptic question, he withdrew to quiet the mob. Thenceforth the strange personage before him seemed to him no longer worthy of serious consideration. He costumed him like a tragedy king, and gave him up to the honors of the guard room—a crown of thorns for his head; for scepter a reed trembling in his hand, and his crimson blood mingling on his shoulders, under the soldiers' scourge, with the crimson of the cast-off rags of royalty.

From the hands of a magistrate, without conscience, the man who called himself King of the Truth fell into the hands of a people without reason. He was dragged to a hill-top and nailed to a slave's gibbet, but with a last surviving scruple of justice Pilate wrote above his head his royal title "Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews."

And there he died and there he reigns.

And I, in fellowship with all Christians—complete in faith and knowledge, do worship him because of bearing witness to the truth. He feared not to make himself one with the truth, saying that wonderful word: "I am the truth." I worship him; but if you have not attained to this, you may at least admire—recognizing in him what is no slight thing to do, but much graver, perhaps, than you think, the model for mankind. Let him, then, whoever we may be, of whatever rank or condition, of whatever religious or philosophic creed if we hold fast to our integrity, if we keep the respect of our own conscience, if we maintain the truth dear to honor and righteousness, it is our right and our duty to say: "To this end was I born; for this am I come into the world; that I should witness the truth." At cost of our repose at cost of our interest, at cost of our life, at cost of what is dearer than life, honor and affection—through good or bad report—in all matters not forbidden by the conscience, for this cause we were born, for this cause we have come into the world. And when the truth shall have come into the hearts of men not only in the period we live in but in future ages, in times and on the earth where the reign of reason [illegible] shall be ushered in the reign of righteousness and peace.

Religious Intelligence.

—A missionary writes of a revival at Pekin, during which about a hundred Chinese have professed to believe in Jesus as their Savior.

—The General Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church in New York city has sixty-nine students on its roll. Of this number fifty-two are graduates of colleges.

—A Chinese native preacher, Lough Ah Fook by name, is working among the Chinese natives of British Guiana. He reports that eighty-one are now in Christian fellowship, twenty-five of whom were added during the past year.

—The receipts of the Foreign Mission Board of the Reformed (Dutch) Church from May 1, 1877, to December 31, 1877, were $29,682, an increase of $795 on the same period of the year preceding. The present debt of the board is $30,000.

—Signor Bonghi, formerly one of Victor Emanuel's ministers, has written a reply to Father Curci's book on the "Temporal Power." He scouts the idea of a compromise between the church and Italy, and says that the clerical party must obey the laws.

REVISING THE STANDARDS.—The United Presbyterian Synod's Committee on Revising the Confession of Faith have been holding meetings of late. The committee have decided upon a full and free conversation on all the points submitted for consideration before coming to a finding. Says the London Christian World: "Very few people now feel that the Confession of Faith can be long retained as it at present stands."

SCOTLAND.—Re-Establishment.—The movement to re-establish the Free Church in the Highlands has taken some tangible shape. The agitator, Dr. Begg, with twenty clergymen, has stated to the Lord Advocate the terms on which he and his associates will enter the Establishment. What these are is not known. Meanwhile there is no little excitement among loyal Free Churchmen, and a special meeting of the commission of the Free Church Assembly has been proposed as a means of dealing with the recalcitrants.

—The receipts of the Roman Catholic missionary society, called "De Propaganda Fide," amounted in 1876 to $1,186,000, an increase of $26,967 over the year before. France's gift was $807,715, and an increase over her previous year's portion was $3,000 more than this net increase of the whole. Ireland gave $17,951, Belgium $79,587, Germany $61,875 and all the United States only $21,553. The Roman Catholics in the United States are not enthusiastic in this direction. The officials propose now to collect a cent apiece, weekly, from as many as may be instructed each given to say "Our Father" and "Hail Mary," and "St. Francis Xavier pray for us," in order to gain the great and frequent indulgences which belong to the contributors to this good work."

ENGLAND.—Prince Leopold, it is said, lately expressed a strong desire, which the Queen discouraged, to take holy orders. His persistence, however, has overcome her scruples and as his health permits he will take the necessary preliminary steps. The Prince is supposed to hold extreme High Church notions, and a report is current that when in Scotland he incurred his royal mother's displeasure by refusing to attend the Established Presbyterian Kirk. The Ritualistic Church Times does not regard his ordination as an unmixed blessing. "There is so strong an element of snobbishness," it says, "in the British character that, supposing the Prince were to become a clergyman, and thus be brought prominently before the public it would do much to make High Churchmanship popular which all sensible men would regard as a most deplorable misfortune."—Christian Union.

NEW TRINITY BOSTON.—The new Trinity church in Boston, which has been several years in building, is now nearly completed. It has cost, with the land, about $750,000. The stone tracing of the French Romanesque order is in the shape of a Latin cross, with a semi-circular chancel. It is built of Hallowgrande white brown freestone dressings, and is a massive and imposing structure. The large central tower has been made the central point of attractiveness in the interior, and the rest is arranged to lead to and be tributary thereto. The porch of the church is 20 feet wide, and from the inside doors to the chancel wall the distance is 130 feet, the nave being 80 feet long and 81 wide, and the width across the transepts 120 feet. The nave and transept ceiling are 61 feet from the floor, and that of the tower, which is 15 feet square, rises to more than 100 feet from the floor.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, 1877.—We gave, some weeks since, a published summary of the Methodist Episcopal Church before the returns were all in. The following is more accurate and is made up from the General Minutes for 1877: Members, 1,174,777; decrease, 1,783; probationers, 190,831; decrease, 20,587; total members and probationers, 1,365,608; increase, 21,096; deaths, 19,816; increase, 800; children baptized, 55,831; decrease, 531; adults baptized, 50,218; decrease, 386; traveling preachers, 11,269; increase, 197 (of these 137 located and 118 died); local preachers, 12,537; decrease, 120; local preachers, 23,809; increase, 77; Sunday schools, 19,808; increase, 177; officers and teachers, 210,092; increase, 7,036; scholars, 1,193,758; increase, 10,635; churches, 41,201; increase, 383; total value, $70,239,111; decrease, $1,521,330; parsonages, 5,355; increase, 133; total value, $3,176,180; decrease, $128,480. The increase in the number of full members of churches and parsonages, and of Sunday schools in all departments is very encouraging. The decrease in the value of church property is less than might have been anticipated when we consider the shrinkage of real estate during the last year. Take it all in all, these figures are full of encouragement.—Western Christian Advocate.

Our Young People.

THE LIGHT OF HOME.

BY SARAH J. HALE.

My boy, thou will dream the world is fair,
And thy spirit will sigh to roam,
And thou must go; but never, when there,
Forget the light of home.

Though pleasure may smile with a ray more bright,
To dazzle to lead astray;
Like the meteor's flash it will darken the night,
When thou greatest the lonely way.

The sea of temptation is tempest toss'd,
And thy hopes may vanish like foam;
But when sails are shivered, and pilot lost,
Then look to the light of home.

And there, like a star through the midnight cloud,
Though shall see the beacon bright,
For never, till shining on thy shroud,
Can be quenched its holy light.

The son of fame, will gild the name,
But the heart ne'er feels its ray;
And destiny's smiles, that rich crowns claim,
Are like bears on a wintry day.

And how cold and dim those beams would be
Should the wretched wanderer come;
But, my boy, when the world is dark to thee,
Then turn to the light of home.

Note from the Editor.

We have a great many letters on hand from our little friends—many more than we can publish. We scarcely know how to select. We shall continue to publish such as inclose a subscription to the ADVOCATE; some others may appear occasionally. But in order to find room for selected articles the most of the little letters will necessarily be delayed, and, perhaps, not published at all. The editor is always gratified to hear from his little friends, and only regrets that their letters cannot all be published.

From Our Little Friends.

MADISON STATION, MISS., March 16, 1878.

DEAR MR EDITOR: I am a little girl eight years old. I live with my grandpa. He takes the ADVOCATE. I love to read the letters in the little folks' corner. I go to a Baptist Sunday school, two Sundays in the month. I have a hen and eight chickens, which I call my missionary hen. When the chicks get large enough I intend to sell them and give the money to the missionary cause. I sent fifty cents to China to buy a little Chinese girl a book, and Bro. Lambuth said it would buy six. He sent me a Chinese book, with little pictures in it; but he will have to send me a Chinese girl to read it for me, as I cannot read their hieroglyphics. But the funniest of it is that we have to begin on the right side of their book and read toward the left side, and to begin at the bottom of a column or page and read upward.

Your little friend,
JENNIE ELIZA BAXTER.

ATLANTA, HINDS CO., MISS., Feb. 17, 1878.

DEAR MR EDITOR: I like to read your interesting paper very much; and seeing many letters from the little folks, I have concluded to write one. We will all be going to Sabbath school again as soon as we can get books and papers. Where is "raisins" found in the Bible? Who sat in the window of the third loft asleep and fell to the ground while Paul was preaching? What did David do with the head of Goliath, the giant, whom he slew with a sling? I have a nice Bible—a present from my teacher. Your friend,
ANNIE O. MCKENZIE.

COLUMBIA, LA., Feb. 2, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: I am nine years old, and have belonged to the church nearly three years. I have a little brother and two little sisters. I will answer Lucrza A. Graves' question: Christ performed his first miracle in Cana of Galilee, by turning water into wine. I will also ask a few questions: Who was it Saul tried to kill with a javelin? Who led the Israelites into Canaan? Who put Daniel in the lion's den?

Your little friend,
ALICE WYNN.

The Giant and the Missing Children.

Did our young readers ever hear the German story of the Giant and the Missing Children? It tells what happened a long time ago in a village among the mountains. One summer there the children began to disappear one by one. It was certain that they were not kidnapped, and it was just as sure that they did not run away. The first that vanished was little Hans Stohlheit.

"Has anybody seen my Hans?" cried his granny, standing outside the door of her cottage. "I had just told him I wanted him to go to the miller's, and he has disappeared, somehow, all at once, without knowing what the errand is. Hans! where are you?" she shouted. "Why, he was here not half a minute ago!"

But none of the neighbors could tell anything of Hans. What is more, Hans did not reappear. The night passed, and he did not come; the next morning nothing was to be seen of him. All the villagers were much excited for, though Hans had not been a good boy, everybody was sorry at this having happened to him. While a group of them round about the grandmother were pitying her, a cry arose in one of the other cottages. Those who hurried there found Frau Hickell standing near the hearth with her hands raised, gazing vacantly before her.

"My Gretchen is gone!" she said in a frightened voice. "I just bid her clean the hearth, and when I looked again she was not there. Where is she gone?" she asked, turning from one to another of them. They could only shake their heads. In fact they thought Frau Hickell had gone mad. But it was quite true that Gretchen was not to be found, though they looked everywhere for her, both in-doors and out.

That day three other children vanished. On the next day five went. All the village was in alarm—that is, the elders were, for they tried to keep it from the children themselves. There was no certainty about any boy or girl in the place. The grown-up people had but to turn their backs, and he or she was gone in an instant.

At last a strange clew was got to the mystery. Little Augusta Hirsch vanished when her aunt as well as her mother was in the kitchen.

The aunt said: "I saw her go! At her mother's bidding, she had just taken the broom to sweep behind the stove, when all at once she disappeared, just as she was speaking the words: 'I wish—' But she hadn't time to finish. I heard nothing more. She was gone like a flash!"

"That is very strange!" exclaimed Granny Stohlheit, who was one of the listeners. "Now you speak of it, the last words I heard my Hans say behind my back were: 'I wish—'"

"Those very words my Gretchen said!" cried Frau Hickell.

Indeed nearly every body who lost a child came forward, and each and all were able to confirm this. Two things could be made out; first, that the children only went when their elders had set them to do some task; second, that in the act of vanishing they all uttered the words: "I wish—" But in about a week's time the thing was carried yet a step farther.

"My Gustave is gone!" cried William Neumark, appearing excitedly at the gate of his little garden. "My ears are quick," he added, as the neighbors gathered around; "and I clearly heard all the words he said. I had bid him dig faster, and he answered: 'I wish there was no digging!'"

"Why, our Hans did not want to go to the miller's," Granny Stohlheit hastened to say.

"Nor," cried Frau Hickell, "did my Gretchen like to dust up the hearth?"

"It is so!" solemnly said William Neumark. "They are taken away for being discontented at there being any work to do in life. They want it all play."

All the hearers grew more afraid on hearing this, and looked one at another. Scarcely a minute passed before a woman in the group said:

"What great shape is that I see upon the mountain yonder?"

Every head turned toward the Eagle Cliff, as it was called. It was a lofty rock some distance from the village but looking right down the valley toward it. The distance was too great for things on the rock to be clearly made out, but the woman declared that she could see the figure of a giant sitting there. She said he was clothed in a mantle, half blown back by the wind, and that he wore a hood on his head. No sooner did she say this than several others saw it all. Then two or three voices cried out together:

"See, he is lifting his right arm and beckoning!"

At that instant a cry sounded from one of the houses. They knew it meant that a child had vanished. While they were looking in amazement the giant again raised his arm beckoningly. As he did so there came a fresh cry—another child had been taken. The whole thing now was plain—the children disappeared whenever the giant, on hearing their complaining wishes, signaled for them.

The next morning his huge shape could be seen more distinctly sitting on the rock, and whenever he beckoned a child went. The white-haired Lutheran minister, just as the sun was setting, came in front of the crowd and said:

"Let us each to-night, by our bedside, pray that the children may be forgiven and restored to us."

This prayer was answered. Early the next morning, some who were watching, raised a cry, saying that the children were coming back. In a long procession the little people were seen winding down the valley. Their sisters and mothers, and all the inhabitants, ran to meet them. They were astonished to see how much the returning children were.

"Oh, let us get back to our work in helping you," yelled out a dubious of boys' and girls' voices.

No sooner had they neared the houses than the boys rushed into the gardens, and, snatching up spades, began to dig; while the girls, darting into the dwellings, instantly were busy sweeping, dusting and polishing.

The exclamation they all gave was this: "While we were kept inside the mountain we were not allowed to do anything at all; and, oh! it was so hard! The good giant said that we could not have play without work also."

All looked toward the rock, but the figure of the giant was no longer to be seen. The boys and girls were much the better for his visit.—Churchman.

A poor lame boy, who became converted, whose home surroundings were very unfriendly, said: "Once everything went wrong at our house; Father was wrong, mother was wrong, and sister was wrong; but now that Jesus is mine, it is all right. I know why everything went wrong before; it was because I was all wrong myself." Everything will go wrong with us if we are not right in Christ. Every heart has enough within it to make disquiet, unrest and unhappiness until the love of Christ dwells there, turning out all enemies to happiness and peace.

The Vice of Drunkenness.

The recent disgraceful exhibition of drunkenness in Congress by a member of the House of Representatives is calculated to call public attention to this prevailing vice. Things quite as indecent were witnessed at the night session of the Senate during the debate on the silver bill. It is not a thing unheard of for judges on the bench and otherwise to be reported as under the influence of liquor.

We are heartily in favor of total abstinence as a preventive of intemperance, and of all wise legislation to repress the sale of intoxicating beverages. Apart, however, from the causes of drunkenness, there is need of a stronger and sounder public opinion against it as a vice, and as a crime against society. This is evident from the fact that so many drunkards are elected to office, to seats in the national and State Legislatures, and to judicial positions by popular suffrage, and that executive patronage is often abused by the appointment of intemperate men. It is certain that none but sober men are fit to make laws or to administer them, and that none other should be permitted to wear the judicial ermine. Public opinion, however, tolerates intemperance in these positions, and, while it may not approve, it does not effectually and clearly condemn. A prominent candidate does not often lose the nomination, or fail of election, on the ground that he is known to be occasionally or habitually intemperate.

A drunkard at large in society is usually a dangerous man, nearly as much so as a lunatic, and the murders committed by men while intoxicated are alarmingly numerous. If one half the evils charged upon drunkenness be true—the poverty and suffering of families, the disturbance of the peace, the riot and bloodshed, and all the various crimes which are to be traced to this source—then it ought to be regarded and treated as the supreme crime, and the drunkard as the chiefest of all criminals. Notwithstanding the fact that liquor is in the world, and license is given for its sale, men must be personally held to a moral and legal account for their use of it. It may be said that the State is to blame, because it permits the manufacture and sale, and that society is itself at fault, because it countenances the indulgence in intoxicating drinks. All this may be true, and it is also true in reference to other crimes that bad legislation and defects in the social system have much to do in their growth and propagation. Crime, however, is crime, and the well-being of the community demands that it shall be punished. If there were no poisons, no gunpowder, and no knives and pistols, there would be fewer assassinations and homicides; but we must hold men responsible for the abuse of these instruments of death. If there were no fire, or if houses were not made of combustible materials, there would be no arson; but the man who burns his neighbor's house is guilty of a capital offense nevertheless. Men must be regarded as responsible for the use they make of alcohol. If, by its use, they make beasts of themselves, neglect their public duties, endanger the peace of society, abuse their families, endanger the lives of citizens, and slaughter innocent people, they become criminals of the worst sort, and should be esteemed, restrained and punished accordingly.

The State is guilty to a degree in permitting the sale of liquor, and those engaged in the traffic are guilty of promoting vice, but the drunkard himself is accountable before God and man. He has brought this vice upon himself, and he is a criminal who should be held directly amenable to public opinion and to the laws of the country. In Scripture drunkenness is mentioned as a vice that excludes from the kingdom of heaven. Those who have helped him to his ruin will get their dues, no doubt, but the drunkard himself is held by the divine law to a strict account. God's pity is toward all sinners, and his love for them passes comprehension, but he does not love the drunkard more than other sinners. He would reform and save them all, but, failing in this, all alike must perish in their sin.

We might give the names of men eminent in literature, law, eloquence and statesmanship to show that drunkenness is often associated with the most splendid gifts; and it is also true that the victims of it possess often the most shining qualities and the most estimable traits of character. It may be the one vice that a man has, and yet it is such a vice as dims the luster of the brightest names, and degrades and ruins the otherwise virtuous soul. We cannot consider it a merely physical disease or a social indiscretion. It is a form of unrighteousness that God has stamped with his utmost abhorrence and condemnation: "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God." This is a dark catalogue, and the drunkard is put in sad company. Whatever may be the enticements, God holds the drunkard responsible for his drunkenness, and it is characterized as a sin that excludes from heaven. He could be a sober man, and he ought to be. If reformation were impossible, he is responsible for the chains that bind him; but the grace of God, and this alone, can save him.

Public opinion needs to be toned up on this conception of drunkenness as a sin which God denounces, and as one of the most pernicious and wicked of the vices. Lunacy is a disease for which the victim falls into no disgrace, and incurs no penalty, but intemperance is a serious breach of good morals, and a crime against society. Drunkards at large are a public nuisance and a constant menace to the peace and safety of the people, and whether in private life, or in the places of legislators and other official positions, they should be treated accordingly. While we would not abate one jot of the condemnation meted out to the whisky-sellers, and the corrupt legislation that fosters the vile business, we would point to the drunkard himself as the chief of sinners, and as guilty of a vice that more than any other calls for legal restraint and public reprobation. Nothing can excuse it, nothing can palliate it.

That drunken men should stagger and rave in the halls of Congress is indeed a national disgrace, but it is so chiefly because it too truly reflects the lax moral feeling that prevails. Drunkenness in society is more or less tolerated, or, at best, is very mildly condemned. It is something for the secular paragraphist to point a jest with, and is more the property of the humorist than of the moralist. The censure rarely rises to good-natured satire. The inebriate is a good fellow—his own greatest enemy—and his sin is regarded as the unfortunate infirmity which has clouded many noble and generous souls. Temperance reform, to amount to much, must begin by making drunkenness what it is—the most hideous, the most baneful, the most degrading of vices. We must have a moral sentiment that holds the drunkard to a responsibility for his crime against society, and that ranks his offense as one that sullies the character and brings reproach upon all who are guilty of it.

From Within.

The betrayal is always from within. The dangerous enemy is in the camp. "The hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table." It was not the number or skill of the men of Ai, but the sin of Achan that caused the disaster. The old lesson holds good to-day. The foe without is strong and raging; but our blessed religion is not in danger from this point. Jesus was shut in with his disciples. The solemn, sacred occasion protected him. He was in the house of another. The spirit of hospitality shielded him. The indifference of the Romans and the cruel cowardice of the Jews was his defense. The utterance—the fact—gathers here peculiar significance: "The hand that betrayeth is with me on the table." The betrayal is always from within, never from without. It assumes a thousand forms. It has a thousand shapes.

A young man, reared in the Methodist Church, strongly informed on the polity, doctrines and spirit of Methodism, at one time deeply spiritual and faithful in attendance upon all the means of grace, changes his home from the country to the city. His social worth and position in the business world throws him much into the society of the worldly-minded and fleshly. A desire, through evil example and the pleading smiles of beauty, to join in the modern dance is created within him. He consults with his pastor. "I desire to dance. I don't want to quit the church, much less to be turned out. If I dance, will you turn me out?" The reply was: "No, sir;" virtually: "Go and dance." He danced. He has continued to dance. He has lost, naturally, his spirituality. He has become a formal member of the church. To the extent of his influence he has dragged the church down in the mud and filthy slush of the world. He has lost his power to save others. He betrayed the blessed Master, and drove the nails afresh into his tender hands. "Behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table." The young man, guided by his pastor, we suppose, will either go back to the world entirely, or join an easier church. He will, without repentance and reformation, be lost in the end.

Another: A young lady is convicted of sin. She is distressed. She desires to flee the wrath to come. She wants to join the church. She wants to get to heaven, but desires to have a little of the world as she goes. Her young friends say: "How can you give up dancing—such a harmless amusement, and one you love so much." The Methodist Church won't allow dancing, and you will, at least, have to join some other." But she is a Methodist. She does not want to join any other church. She advised with her pastor—a Methodist preacher—"If I join the church, can I dance?" "Yes, as much as you please, if your conscience don't condemn you." She joined the church. She dances. She goes to theaters. She can know but little of Christ. She cannot have much of his Spirit. She cannot be his and love the world. She will, without repentance and reformation, be lost finally. She will be lost under the horrible delusion that she is saved.

Once more and finally: A brother—a prominent member of the church, an official member of the church, a rich and therefore influential member of the church—is in delicate health. If the Sabbath morning is a little cloudy or threatening it is not safe to go out—to risk attendance upon church. He can never attend at night. The night air is ruinous to health. And yet it fatally happens that on such a Sunday morning he is seen by the wicked men of the world, on the street, and on chilly nights in the godless theater. "Behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table." "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father." All the lies in the world, though strong as giants and raging fierce as tigers—all combined—cannot drive the nail, the cruel spear, so deep into his hands and side as one such member.

STAR.

On Monday night, March 25, the Carondelet Street church, Methodist Episcopal Church South, of New Orleans, was filled to overflowing to hear Rev. George Muller. He took a text that occupied the hour in giving a succinct history of himself and his work. It was a very interesting and profitable address, and was attentively listened to by the vast audience. It was his "Life of Trust" condensed, giving substantially the same narrative. Our statement, last week, concerning Mr. Muller's work fell considerably short of the actual figures. "The Scriptural Knowledge Institution," of which he is the head, has seventy-five day schools under its care in various parts of the world, and thirty-nine Sunday schools, making altogether one hundred and fourteen schools. It also assists in the support of one hundred and fifty missionaries. Mr. Muller stated that although the orphan houses were the most expensive, they did not constitute the most important work of the institution. The circulation of Bibles, tract and religious literature amounts to millions of copies, and many millions of pages. The money received and disbursed in all departments since 1831 amounts to more than four millions of dollars. Mr. Muller presented his experience and work as an illustration of the power of prayer, and of faith in the living God. While he guarded his hearers against the idea that his peculiar methods could be generally imitated by others, he insisted that they were calculated to comfort Christian people, and to strengthen their faith in the divine promises. He strongly opposed the somewhat prevalent notion that the donations received were secured through published reports of his work, or the novelty of the principle adopted. The novelty had long since worn off, and the most surprising and signal instances of relief came when no reports were published. His hearers on this occasion came away pondering on what they had heard, and wondering. If we heard correctly, the current expenses of his orphan houses are two hundred thousand dollars annually. Add to this the support of the schools and missions, and we have some conception of the financial and administrative capacity of the man who controls and directs this immense system of beneficence. If Mr. Muller is not to be altogether imitated, we have probably something to learn from him. One inexorable rule with him is never to go in debt, not even to the extent of a penny, however trying the circumstances may be. The daily demands must be met in cash, and they always have been, although the trial of faith at times has been very great. When his orphans were in hired houses, and he had undertaken to buy ground and build, he would not borrow of the building fund to meet current expenses, though he had forty thousand dollars in bank, and there was nothing in the house for the next meal. God had sent the building fund to build with, and he must not divert it, even as a temporary loan. The orphans, however, were always fed, although on one occasion only their dinner was thirty minutes later than usual. He avers that had he drawn on his building fund merely as a loan to be soon returned, he should have lost his faith and dishonored God. We are impressed with the fact that Mr. Muller is a completely consecrated man, and that this largely accounts for his faith—his habitual and unshaken trust. He said almost nothing on the subject of giving—only a slight allusion in connection with his support as a pastor. Early in his ministry he declined to be supported by pew-rents and appeals to his congregation; fearing that the money thus raised was not given cheerfully, without restraint, and from love. We can only conjecture what he may think of the prevalent high-pressure efforts to raise money for religious and benevolent objects. We imagine that church debts, and many of the financial expedients now so common, meet with no favor with him. We may not closely imitate Mr. Muller, but may we not allow him to teach us something?

How They Did.

Rev. Dr. Trafton, writing in Zion's Herald on "How Did the Fathers Preach?" says:

Are we not losing faith in the "preaching of the word?" Do we not rely too much upon our "extraordinary means," upon our auxiliaries? We are expected (Heaven pity us!) to fill the empty slips, to raise the current expenses, to pay off a crushing debt, to popularize "our pulpit;" and to do this we must be sensational, and select and advertise all sorts of taking and trite subjects. The poor preacher, almost ashamed of the course he feels forced to pursue, says to himself: "A necessity is upon me; if I do not draw and fill the house, the few who represent and rule this church will not ask for my return, and the authorities dare not send me back against their remonstrance; or, should they do it, I shall be opposed by men whom I wouldn't set with the dogs of my flock, if I had one."

Poor fellow! I pity him. But what can he do except to float on the popular current until there is no current, and then call in a praying band, who ought to be at home and at work, or an evangelist who takes the reins into his own hands, and cries out with his progenitor: "Come and see my zeal for the Lord!"

And how commences a great effort to bring back the expiring vital spark to the chilled body. Like the efforts made upon the body of a drowned person, some chafe the hands, and some the feet; while others, with a pair of bellows, strive to put in motion the collapsed lungs and the heart that has ceased to beat.

But some one will ask: "Do you, then, disapprove of revival measures?" By no means; nor did the fathers, long before these modern methods were devised and put in operation. But they believed that the plain, earnest, affectionate preaching of the gospel would save "them that believe;" and it was so.

They preached on a growth in grace, and urged the flock up to it. They had no idea of a necessity for special camp meetings for holiness, where none were permitted to preach unless of "the elect;" where the church were called forward for prayers, while the outsiders looked on amused, saying: "When your good people are converted, it will be time enough for us." This subject was kept prominently before the people, and they labored to bring men to repentance by a fearless denunciation of sin, looking for direct and immediate results; and according to their faith they reaped the harvest of their sowing. It is a fixed law that one reaps what he sows; and when one comes to expect nothing without some extra means or agencies, he will put forth no effort, and the result harmonizes with his expectations.

I greatly fear that the church has fallen into that condition where no present fruit is looked for through ordinary means and God-ordained agencies. Forty years ago, when the church had assembled in one place and with one accord, they expected to be moved by the preaching of the word, and it was so. How is it now? It is only lately that the strange remark is heard: "The clergy must go to the rear; the laymen and women can preach the gospel better." And the minister, judged by the church to be called of God to preach the gospel, is used only as a sort of ornament to the pulpit, and is expected to amuse the audience, and keep them in some sort of coherence, until some erratic women, and men who have failed to secure a living in business, come along to fire the heart of the church, and show how the gospel ought to be preached; and, when leaving, bear away with them the hearts of what proselytes are made, who ever after despise "this manna," and long for the "leeks, onions and cucumbers" by which their vitiated taste was gratified.

I indignantly repudiate and reject this entire modern machinery. God is not in it all. With all their ignorance, and unseemliness of manner, and roughness of speech, the old Methodist preachers kept the people up to the working point, and gathered large numbers into the church, who by their lives proved that they "were saved."

The Reasons.

Dr. Haygood, in the Southern Christian Advocate, explains why the sale of our books and periodicals are so small:

1. Is there not among the people of our charges but little interest in buying books, because there is no great interest in reading books?

2. There is among us preachers no great interest in selling books—for several reasons: (1.) Many of us do not sufficiently appreciate the importance of good books, either to ourselves or to our people. (2.) Some of us consider it undignified to "peddle books." N. B.—We twice heard Bishop Marvin say he "had sold books since he was made a Bishop". (3.) Some of us, in one way and another, have lost money in trying to sell books.

3. We have printed many books that the people do not want. We blame nobody; we are not criticising—only stating historical facts. Everybody knows that we speak truly—even those who might be reluctant to have the fact mentioned.

4. For a long time we did a loose credit business until it broke down credit.

5. Preachers never have any "capital," and when we had to adopt the "cash on delivery" plan very few of the preachers could buy that they might sell.

6. We mention now one of the chief causes of our small sales of books: We have never used successfully the regular book trade. Either because we relied so exclusively on the preachers that we made little effort to launch our books on the current of "the trade," or because our principle of "discounts" has ruled the book merchants out. Perhaps both.

7. We have trusted too much to the Advocate to do our advertising. Half of our people never read an Advocate. Perhaps three-fourths of our trade constituency do not know anything about the books named on our catalogue. But enough on this line.

The question comes up: Can we rely on ourselves—we mean the preachers—to sell and circulate our books? Before answering in the affirmative, one fact—a very striking one—should be considered: Preachers in cities hardly sell books at all. Precisely where we have the greatest need of selling books, that we may meet error with truth, there we sell the least number of books. We are not guessing here; we collected Publishing House accounts six winters, at many Conferences, and we found out what we here tell—city preachers do not sell books. We do not say that they can, only they do, not. But do the book merchants in these cities sell our books? They do not. Let any doubter try to find one of our books in the book stores. They are not there—never were there, since 1851, to any extent. Somehow the book merchants do not know our books—the hymn-book, perhaps, excepted.

One reason why there are so many loose views of Methodism in the cities is because our books are neither sold nor read in the cities.

The London Spectator speaks of the late Dr. Duff as by far the greatest and most successful missionary of our day. After praising his system of evangelization by means of education, and his system of vast schools, which have educated tens of thousands of Hindoos, the Spectator says: "He was a born diplomatist in the highest sense, and for years he mediated between the religious world and the government of India, until he acquired the perfect confidence of both, and was able to exercise a most beneficent influence over all moral, educational and philanthropic legislation. He never surrendered a principle, but official objections seemed to vanish before his arguments and his persuasiveness. For many years he held a kind of popedom in Calcutta, using his powers, however, with great mildness and judgment, until at length his broken health forced him to return. Whether his system was a wise one time must show. We doubt it, if the end is the Christianization of India; but no man ever gave himself up for others more unreservedly, or exerted a nobler influence, or displayed more splendid powers with a more complete suppression of himself."—Methodist.

Rev. J. S. Harris, of the Memphis Conference, died March 10.

Note from Dr. Abbey.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2[illegible]

DEAR DOCTOR: I see it in the papers, and so likely to be so stated yours, that the Senate Committee Claims, by a majority of one, agreed to report a bill to pay Publishing House $150,000. This the report of a street newsmonger garbled from a little evening paper. The report of the committee shows vote of six to three. Those voting the affirmative were Morgan, of Alabama; who was sub-committee made the report; Harris, of Tennessee; Hereford, of West Virginia; Cockrell, of Missouri; Hoar, of Massachusetts, and Mitchell, of Oregon. Negative—McMillan, of Minnesota; Cameron, of Wisconsin, and Teller of Colorado. We hope to get the bill acted on by the Senate in a week or so. Yours, etc., R. Abbey.

We remind our friends again that this is an opportune time to secure new subscribers for the Advocate. The paper needs the increased circulation, and the people need the paper. We shall give the proceedings of the General Conference, and notes and items of editorial correspondence. From all appearances this is to be the hardest year of all within the memory of most of us. If pastors and friends will work diligently, our church papers will pass the crisis and no one will be any poorer for taking a religious journal.

Whether it shall be peace or war is still uncertain. England and Russia have not yet come to an agreement about a congress of the powers. Two weeks ago peace seemed almost assured; now the portents are ominous of war. England insists that this Turkish question, in all of its parts and bearings, shall be settled by the European governments, as if Russia had waged no long, expensive and successful war. Russia naturally wishes to secure at least some of the fruits of her victorious struggle. Our news columns furnish the latest telegrams from Europe.

Some inquiries come to us as to the collections to meet expenses of delegates to the General Conference. We have heard of no collections yet. It is time they were taken. We have seen no notice from the Advocate folks concerning reduction of fare. We presume they will soon publish such arrangements as they may decide to make. The public should be put in possession of all needed information within the next two or three weeks.

Mrs. Ottilia Krauter, wife of the Rev. J. G. Krauter, pastor of the Bayades Street German Methodist Episcopal Church South, of this city, died March 20, 1878. Sister Krauter was only twenty-three years of age, a devoted Christian, and a helpmeet for her husband in his ministry. Requiescat in pace. She died of pneumonia, after one week's illness.

We would direct special attention to the notice, on the eighth page of this week's paper, in reference to the meeting of the trustees of the Gulf shore camp ground. The trustees and all interested in procuring it should be in attendance at the time appointed.

Bishop Wiley, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, writes to the missionary secretaries, February 7, from the steamer Oceanic, China Sea, in which he says: "I leave China with a sad heart, rejoicing that everything there is doing so well, but that my long-intended visit is over. I find my heart intensely interested in the China work. The Foochow Conference passed a vote of thanks to the Church and Missionary Society, and appointed Sia Sek Ong to put it into writing. We left Foochow on the nineteenth of January and visited Hong Kong and Canton. I did not feel strongly impressed in favor of our opening a mission there. Canton is pretty well occupied, and is not a promising field. It has been too much and too long under foreign influence. What a sad fact that foreign influence is, on the whole, against the work of evangelization."

The New York Advocate says that Dr. Abel Stevens is still in Geneva, Switzerland. He suffered severely for three or four weeks recently from gastric fever, but is now improving. The manuscript for Dr. Stevens' new book on "The Life and Times of Madame de Stael" is now about completed, and will soon be placed in the hands of some publisher for early issue. It is sure to meet with a hearty welcome.

President R. M. Moore, of the Somerville (Tenn.) Female Institute, says the Western Methodist, died, after a brief illness, March 5. He was a fine scholar and a superior educator, and besides, he was a gentleman of great moral worth and deeply religious character. His death is a public loss, a family, as well as an irreparable loss to his family, to whom we extend most cordial sympathy in the midst of their bereavement.

Bishop Merrill has had an interview with President Diaz, of Mexico, and reports him to be fully committed to the principle of religious toleration. President Diaz expressed the belief that freedom of worship is essential to the progress of religion.

CONFESSIONS OF LIBERALISTS TO ORTHODOXY. By Daniel Dorchester, D. D. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

The volume contains, besides an introduction, three lectures recently delivered before the School of Theology of Boston University. The topics are: The Deity of Christ; The Atonement; Endless Punishment. The author states and vindicates the orthodox position on these doctrines, and refutes the opposing errors most prevalent at the present time. The confessions of Liberalists to orthodoxy are culled from various authors, and used with great skill and grace. From a necessarily hurried examination we are much pleased with the work. It is a 12 mo of 343 pages, tinted paper, and handsomely bound.

—St. Nicholas for April, is splendidly illustrated. The articles are such as will entertain the young immensely. There are: How Polly Was Lost in a Turkish Bazar; Easter in Germany; Dick Hardin's Day at School; The Wild Mustangs; Old Nicolai; Wise Catherine; the Kaboltermannteken; How Stone-Age Children Played; A Visit to a London Dog Show; Behind Hand—Talk with Girls, and other articles.

—Heavenly Carols is the title of a book by Rev. Isaiah Baldwell and Prof. S. Lorenz assisted by Prof. H. Kurzenknabe and Rev. A. A. Shoney. Published by W. J. Shoney, Fostoria, Ohio. It is designed for Sunday-schools and prayer-meetings, and contains some excellent hymns and music.

—Scribner's Monthly for April has: Hunting on the Au Sable, Wood; King David; How Lead Pencils are Made; The Mosaic Creation and Modern Science; Among the Thousand Islands, illustrated; Telephone and the Phonograph; Boys at School, and other articles.

—The National Repository for April has: The Royal Road of Norway, illustrated; Pottery, illustrated; Mary Queen of Scots, Essayist; Holy Week Lenten Lore; Post-Christian Judaism; Among the Thorns, and other articles. Editorial Miscellany is very valuable, as usual.

—Lippincott's Magazine for April has: The Italian Lakes, illustrated; Norway, illustrated; Hephzibah Guinness; The Harlequin of Venice; The Home of the Jaguar; Recollections of Edward L. Davenport; Alexander Dumas, the Younger, and other articles.

—The Nursery for April will please little folks with delight. The print is large, and the pictures nearly all beautiful. Published by John L. Shorey, Boston. $1 a year.

—Golden Hours for April is beautifully illustrated, and abounds in excellent and entertaining matter for the young. A safe and instructive magazine for the children.

—We have received a copy of the eighteenth annual report of the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

—The Southern Musical Journal for March has several fine songs, and a good supply of musical literature.

—We have received a copy of the Minutes of the Memphis Conference, twenty-eighth session.

—Wide Awake for March is as bright and entertaining as ever.

Congress.

Mr. Morgan, from the Committee on Claims, March 13, submitted a report (No. 116) accompanied by the following bill, which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to pay to the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, a corporation chartered under the laws of Tennessee, one hundred and seventy thousand dollars, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, as full compensation for the property of said corporation, including the buildings and ground, all machinery, and all materials of every kind, used, taken away, injured, consumed or destroyed, by the United States, or its army, or for its use, in any way connected with the Publishing House of said corporation in Nashville, Tennessee, during the years eighteen hundred and sixty-four and eighteen hundred and sixty-five, or at any other time; said sum to be in full discharge of all claims of said corporation against the United States, such payment to be made to the duly authorized agent or attorney-in-fact of said corporation.

The following meetings are announced for Round Lake during the coming summer: Sunday School Congress, from July 9 to 19, the Normal Department under direction of J. H. Vincent; Chautauqua Evangelical meeting, July 23 to 31, under the direction of Rev. A. B. Earle, M. P., Dr. Simmons and Dr. C. C. McCabe; the National Christian Temperance Union, August 6 to 11, under the leadership of Francis Murphy.

American Bible Society.

The stated meeting of the board of managers was held at the Bible House, Astor Place, on Tuesday, March 7, at half-past three o'clock P. M., William H. Allen, E-q., LL. D., president, in the chair.

Secretary McLean read the sixty-seventh psalm and offered prayer.

Two new auxiliary Bible societies were recognized—one in Iowa and one in Wisconsin.

A portrait of the late James Snydam, Esq., for many years a manager and vice-president of the society, was received as the gift of the Rev. J. A. H. Cornell, D. D., and ordered to be placed on the walls of the managers' room, with the portraits of other distinguished benefactors to the society.

The resignation of the Rev. Dr. Holdich as corresponding secretary was accepted, and a committee was appointed to draft a minute expressing the feelings of the managers at parting with one so long associated with them in this society. The Rev. Albert S. Hunt, D. D., of Brooklyn, was elected to fill the vacancy.

A communication was received from Richmond, Va., announcing that great satisfaction was felt at the decision of the board to hold the next anniversary of the society in that city; and that St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church had been secured for the occasion.

Letters were also presented from George H. Prince, Esq., of St. Petersburg, announcing the completion of the Revised Esthonian Bible, and sending a specimen copy for the library; from Rev. D. C. Greene, of Japan, reporting his editorial labors, and speaking of a proposed convention of missionaries to arrange for the translation of the Old Testament into Japanese; from the Rev. H. N. Barnum, of Harpoot, expressing the thanks of his church for all that the Bible society has done for the Armenian nation; from the Rev. E. M. Wherry, of Lodiana, Rev. M. N. Hutchinson, of Mexico, Rev. J. R. McDougall, of Florence, Rev. P. Vermeil, of Paris, Rev. Thomas F. Curtis, of Zuingossa giving reports of the last year's work of Bible distribution; also from the society's foreign agents, Mr. Blackford being at Petropolis on the fifth of January, H. Cobek at Nanking on the eleventh of January and at Kuleon the 18th of February, Dr. Bass at Constantinople on the fifteenth of February, and Mr. Milne at Monte Video, December 21.

In answer to various applications from auxiliary societies, churches, individuals and foreign missions, appropriations of money were made to the amount of $1,180, and grants of Scriptures amounting to about 3,000 copies, including nine volumes in raised letter for the blind.

The receipts for February were $27,532; copies of Scriptures issued, 11,849.

—The Rev. Dr. Wilson, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, writes us, St. Louis, Mo., March 11: "We are rejoicing at St. John's over our unexpected success in raising, despite the hard times, the sum of fourteen thousand dollars, necessary to free the church from debt. We expect soon to hold a jubilee meeting in commemoration of the consummation of an achievement so much to be desired and rejoiced over. We had Bishop Kavanaugh in our pulpit on the third instant. He gave us a good sermon."

A sunbeam passes through pollution unpolluted.

PIANOS.—Mr. Philip Werlein, 135 Canal Street, is now selling pianos that he had rented out during the Winter some of which he will sell for $250 to make room. These pianos are just seven octaves, and guaranteed as good as new in every section. Any one needing a piano will do very well to embrace this opportunity.

Publisher's Department.

J. A. LUM & CO. have been advertising with us for a good many years. We have had occasion in that time to make many purchases from them, and to recommend others to a good carriage-house, and have yet to hear of any complaints from their patrons. To those wishing to buy vehicles of any kind we would say that it is the best place we know of in this city.

THE card of Wheeler & Pierson, the well-known clothiers, is on this page. These gentlemen sell good articles, and have heretofore been very popular with all the better class of our readers. To those who have not dealt with them, we would say that there is no better place in New Orleans to purchase clothing, and the firm is in every way reliable.

SERISMAN.—Persons in need of good, fresh and reliable seeds are referred to the card of S. Baker, No. 7 Camp street. This gentleman is well and favorably known as possessing a thorough knowledge of the business and the wants of all parties in the market, and is connected with the leading horticultural establishments of this country.

BATHS.—A card of P. Kbek, in reference to baths, will be seen in this issue of the paper. Mr. Kbek has reduced the prices of the winter bath to twenty-five cents, which will place it in the power of every one to enjoy this luxury. Those wishing to try the Russian Rose or vapor bath can depend upon getting a good article.

MILLINERY GOODS.—Madam Reisz, Royal street, has just returned from the Eastern cities with an immense and select stock of spring millinery and fancy goods, which she will sell at low prices. Ladies in need of anything in her line should call and examine her stock before purchasing elsewhere.

DRY GOODS.—At 167 Canal street the Messrs. Danziger's are now receiving the spring stock of imported and American dry goods, including all the novelties for spring and summer wear. Read their advertisement and go to their store.

COMPOUND OXYGEN TREATMENT.—Dr. Starkey & Palen, 1109 Girard street, Philadelphia, Pa. Their treatment is described in their pamphlet, which is sent free to any address. Send for it.

PLUMBER.—Read the advertisement of Mr. Charles Bergen, No. 11 Camp street, Cypress street, and also shop of your orders. Business promptly attended to. Country orders solicited.

GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANT.—A. P. Prunty, 31 Union street, will attend to the sale of cotton, sugar and molasses, as well as all kinds of country produce. See advertisement.

CARPETS.—Eskin & Co. are receiving large invoices of carpeting, to which they call the attention of purchasers. This house stands high in the trade.

DENTIST.—That eminent dentist, Dr. Wakefield, has removed from Bourbon street to 141 Canal street, where he will be happy to see his old friends.

H. W. MONTGOMERY wishes us to call attention to the change in his advertisement.

SWEETER, CLEANER, PURER.

Refined and intelligent ladies use the Pozzoni Medicated Complexion, Also a Bouquet for Rose. Sold by druggists. Beware of base imitations. Ask for Pozzoni's, and take no other. Sent by mail for orders, all complexions are alike. It is the sweeter, cleaner, purer, finer. 50 cts. Procured by druggists.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

THE Crescent City Sleet Sprinkling Company progresses. Operations on Canal street on and after April 1, provided the subscriptions in that section are sufficient to warrant the putting out two additional sprinkling carts in operation.

Subscriptions can be received at the office, 52 Carondelet street, and at 167 Canal street.

WILBOR'S COMPOUND OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND LIME.—The advantage this preparation has over the plain oil is that the nauseating taste is entirely removed, and it can be taken by the most delicate stomach. It is used by physicians in preference to the oil, as it is more efficacious. Sold by druggists generally. Prepared only by A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, Mass.

CHARMING PICTURES.—To introduce their goods L. Bamberger & Co., William street, New York, will send a package of beautiful chromo pictures, with a piece of music, to every family who will cut out this notice and send it to them with their address. They do not want cash, but inclose 25 cents to pay postage, packing, etc. This is a liberal offer, and should be accepted by all. They are responsible, and their goods stand high in the trade.

A VALUABLE DISCOVERY.—Dr. C. W. Benson, a practicing physician, with office at 145 Chatham street, Baltimore, Md., has discovered a certain preparation of which the active principle is extracted from the Indian hemp plant, and so combined as to entirely destroy the craving for alcoholic stimulants and opium, leaving the system in a healthy condition. He has given to this preparation the name of "Dr. Benson's Celery and Chamomile Pills." They are purely vegetable, and contain no mineral substance whatever. They are a sure cure for headache, neuralgia, nervousness, sleeplessness, dyspepsia, biliousness, and all diseases arising from a disordered liver or stomach, such as constipation, inward piles, fullness of blood to the head, acidity of the stomach, nausea, heartburn, disgust for food, fullness or weight in the stomach, sour eructations, sinking or fluttering at the heart, choking or suffocating sensations when in a lying posture, dimness of vision, dots or webs before the sight, fever and dull pain in the head, deficiency of perspiration, yellowness of the skin and eyes, pain in the side, chest, limbs, and sudden flushes of heat, burning in the flesh, constant imaginings of evil, and great depression of spirits. Any one of the above symptoms is liable to exist in a disordered stomach. These Pills are the only medicine before the public that will cure Dyspepsia. Sold by druggists, or sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box. Prepared only by C. W. BENSON, M. D., 145 Chatham street, Baltimore, Md.

BEET SUGAR.

This industry has uniformly proved a failure here whenever started, except in California, where it is reported to be doing tolerably well. There they have Chinese cheap labor. The real difficulty, we think, is first, the cost of the cultivation of the crop; and, second—and this is the principal reason—the lack of expert labor in the manufacture of sugar, from the time the beets are delivered from the pits to the factory. So far as we know, having watched the industry in Illinois from its inception to its close, this skilled labor seemed difficult to get. If this can be had, and the beets can be delivered at the factory, of a weight of from one-half to one and a half pounds each, and of good saccharine quality, the industry should be a success. If six per cent. of sugar can be obtained, it will pay, and seven per cent. of sugar will give a good profit. If European experts can be obtained who are willing to put in their own capital to a considerable amount, the industry should be successful. This we believe has not been done in the United States, except in the instance where a Wisconsin firm went to California to undertake the management of one of the factories there.

Good sugar was made at Chatsworth, Ill., for the last two working years—sugar which sold on its merits, in Chicago, within one-eighth to one-fourth of a cent per pound of the best New York granulated sugar. The ultimate cause of failure there was, first, that the beets would not yield over five per cent. of sugar, owing to the excess of nitrogen in the soil. This was gradually being worked out—an improvement was manifest year by year. The second and final cause was owing to the lack of water for working the beets in the factory.

What is wanted is, first a good soil Continued tests, not only through the season, but for more than one year, with liberal deductions for waste in the manufacture, are necessary. Second, plenty of water is required—at least fifteen cubic feet per minute—to enable a factory with capacity of fifty to eighty tons o beets per day to work properly. Third, critical business tact and management are essential. The fourth and most important factor is an exact knowledge of the manufacture by the superintendent, foreman and the other skilled labor employed.—Prairie Farmer.

An Experiment in Feeding Horses.—The London Omnibus Co. uses six thousand horses. To economize in feed is an important matter, and has led to several tests, the result of which is recorded as follows:

To each of three thousand of their horses they gave a daily allowance of ground oats sixteen pounds, good hay seven and one half pounds, and cut straw one and one eighth pounds; the hay and straw being cut into pieces about half an inch long, to well mixed up with the oats in a tub the water thus making twenty-six pounds of food for each horse. And to each of the other three thousand horses they gave a daily allowance of whole or unbruised oats nineteen pounds, and uncut or whole hay or straw thirteen pounds, without any water, in our old fashioned way, making thirty-two pounds of the food for each horse. And what was the result? Why, it was soon discovered that the horse which was fed on the twenty six pounds of ground oats remained in as good a condition, and could perform just as much work and do it just as well too, as the horse did which consumed thirty-two pounds of food thus showing a saving of six pounds of food per day in favor of bruised oats fed cut hay.

Keep Up With Your Work.—Some farmers drive their work—are always up with it or ahead of it. They anticipate the work of the farm in its order, and are always prepared to meet it both way or more. Other farmers are always behind their work—there is always something suffering from neglect or delay. They are heavy losers thereby. The crops don't get the attention they need at the right time; the horses are not repaired till the stock have done much damage from the repairing would have cost; the seed is not planted in time to get a good crop. The wheat is not hoed till the weed pitch is Xmas-ed, and that may be in summer time, when the crops are suffering their heaviest and the work drags, drags all the time. Such farmers are not happy. They have not the lively spirits of those who are always up with and a little ahead of their work. Reader, to which class do you belong? Much work can be done in winter to advantage if the work—Why will do it?—Colorado Rural World.

Stilling Egg Roast Pork.—Take the meat as soon as cold, and to each pound allow a teaspoonful of salt, a little pepper and sage, and a little powdered thyme. Mix these well together, and rub the meat with it. Put it in a pan, and bake it in a moderate oven, allowing a quarter of an hour to the pound. Baste frequently with butter and water. Make a gravy with the fat in the pan, and serve hot.—Boston Herald.

Cod's Liver Pills.—Four teaspoonfuls of strong tea, one cup of sugar, one cup of molasses, one half cup of cold water, one teaspoonful of lemon juice, one teaspoonful of ginger, one teaspoonful of cream tartar, one teaspoonful of saleratus mixed in the flour.

A correspondent says that all the cooks of the Sandwich Islands, in the good old times, used the everlasting and unfailing dish of a wife discovered the door.—Courier.

SCIENTIFIC.

A white whale (Beluga borealis) was lately carried to England from America for the Westminster Aquarium. It was very thin when it arrived, not having eaten anything for twelve days, and the spinous processes protruded two or three inches along its back. It was fed on eels, and seemed to improve rapidly, but died in a few days. Dissection proved that it died of inflammation of the lungs, which has surprised people, as occurring in an aquatic species for a whale's fat is its clothing, and it is not strange that it should catch cold when its clothing is used up.

WAS THE MOON ALWAYS DEAD? Now that astronomers have almost unanimously accepted the doctrine of the development of our system, which involves the belief that the whole mass of each member of the system was formerly gaseous with intensity of heat, they can no longer doubt that the moon once had seas and an atmosphere of considerable density. The moon has, in fact, passed through the same changes as our own earth, though not necessarily in the same exact way. She was once vaporous as was our earth, though not at the same time nor for as long a time. She was once glowing with intensity of heat, though her age also must have continued for much shorter time than the corresponding stage of our earth's history. Must we not conclude that after passing through that stage the moon, as for the time a habitable world, is not earth is now? The great masses of cool rock and mud of the moon's whole globe, even as in the south of our earth her seas enwrapped her in cloud-form, must at length have taken their place as seas upon her surface. The atmosphere which had supported those waters must at first have been dense by comparison with the present lunar atmosphere, perhaps even by comparison with the present atmosphere of earth. Then the glowing surface of the moon gradually cooled, until finally the moon must have been a habitable for life. But whether, when swept and garnished into habitation, the moon actually became an inhabited world is a question which will be variously answered according to our views respecting the economy of nature in this respect. Those who hold that she makes nothing in vain will certainly think whether the support of life is the one sole purpose which she can subserve; if that should, as probable they would at once, decide that the moon must during habitable stage have been inhabited. Others who, looking around at the workings of nature as known to us, perceive, or think they perceive, that there is much which resembles waste in nature, will be less confident on this point. They may reason that of many seeds which fall upon the ground scarce one subserves the purpose for which seeds can be supposed to have been primarily intended as many younglings among animals perish untimely, as even many races and types fail of their present primary purpose, so our moon and possibly many such orbs may never have subserved and never come to subserve that one chief purpose for which the orbs peopling space can be supposed to have been formed, if purpose indeed reigns throughout the universe.—Scientific Monthly.

RATE TRANSIT.—Dover is twenty miles from London "as the crow flies," and seventy-six and a half miles by railroad; and a few days ago there was an exciting race between the two cities. The French office wished to forward to London a very important document as quickly as possible; and the question was whether a carrier pigeon or the Continental mail express" could take it the sooner. It was determined to try in a competitive manner the means of conveyance. The railroad company selected its strongest and fastest engine; and the French office hired the services of a "Belgian voyageur," which is of the best breed of homing pigeons. At the moment that the train started the little passenger, with the document fastened to him, was tossed out of a window of a car. Flying about half a mile high, for a minute or two, he circled about as if in search of bearings, and then took a straight course for London. His apparent hesitation led the railroad officers to feel confident in their own success. They made their iron horse stretch every nerve, and they scored a mile for every minute. But in the busy, smoky atmosphere, and horse along by the west wind, the bird beat the train by twenty minutes—a time allowance representing eighteen miles. He accomplished in fifty-six minutes what the engine was seventy six minutes in accomplishing.

A good story is told of a deacon in Tennessee, who was in the habit of riding a balking mule—that is, a mule that can make a camel's back of its straight one, and, by a spasmodic movement of its four legs and jump, discharge its rider like a cannon ball. Recently he came to the edge of the worst mud-hole in the State, and the mule gave strong signs of balking. The good deacon knew that he was about to be thrown, and mind hurried about for a prayer. His table grace came easiest: "Lord, for what we are about to receive make us humbly thankful," he exclaimed, and the mule had bucked and he was in.

During the long French war two old ladies in Stranraer, Scotland, were going to the kirk. The one said to the other: "Is it no a wonderful thing that the Breetish are aye victorious in battle?" "Na," said the other; "for ye ken they aye say their prayers afore the fechtin' begins." The other replied: "But the French ran say their prayers as well's the Breetish." "Hoot!" said the other; "jaberin' bodies—wha could understand them?"

Covetousness never lodged in the heart alone. If it find not it will breed wickedness.

BREECH-LOADERS.
WE take this opportunity of informing customers and friends that the first installment of our stock of these goods anticipated by the late season has arrived, and is ready for inspection. In Breech Loading Shot Guns alone our assortment in stock comprises upward of 15 different styles and patterns, ranging through prices to suit every grade of purse. These facts in connection with the well known character of our goods for quality, workmanship and finish, afforded in every part during over a quarter of a century, will be a sufficient guarantee to our friends that the selections made for the present season will be found unsurpassed in every respect. Our prices, as usual, will be found as low as the lowest for reliable goods, and in view of the recent decline in gold and sterling exchange, while a large stock has been marked down to meet the shrinkage in value from decline in gold. Don't take our word for it, but call and see for yourselves, and then you will be sure to buy now or not.

COMMERCIAL.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
NEW ORLEANS, Tuesday, March 26, 1878.

In the provision market the prices are unchanged, except in one or two articles, which will be noted in the next column. In stocks we note a slight rise, while in bonds there has been an unusual fall in the last week. Consols have been as low as 76. Some of the city papers think that this is due to the probability of the interest not being met promptly, and to unsettled confidence in the financial policy of the State. It is evident, however, that it is mainly the result of speculators bearing the market, and that the bonds will speedily go up when their purpose is accomplished. From all we have been able to learn, there is little reason for uneasiness on the part of holders of these bonds. Premium bonds are lower, but have not declined in the same proportion as consols.

Money is easy for good paper, with not much doing in the way of discounts.

COTTON.

The Times reports the cotton market of yesterday as follows:

The feeling to-day was more bearish, and holders would willingly have met the demand at Saturday's figures, but buyers were demanding further concessions, and, being unsuccessful in forcing a decline, they withdrew from the market, and the day's operations were confined to 2,000 bales.

The official closing report of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange to-day was as follows:

Tone of market—to-day, easy; yesterday, quiet and steady.

Two country lads were dining together. After their potations had become considerably advanced, a neighboring clergyman happened to call. Both the land-owners were in a paroxysm of tears. "What are you greeting for, gentlemen?" anxiously inquired the divine. "We're greeting," was the answer, "about the national debt."

Those whom God anoints he will accompany; he will himself be with those to whom he has given his Spirit.

ROUND THE YEAR.

BY MARY AINGE DE VERE.

The daisies blossom here and there,
The clover-heads nod ever where,
And everywhere brown swallows fly—
Swift dipping low, swift soaring high.
Ah sweet the world, but time runs by!

Now leaves whirl earthward crisp and brown;
Now wandering balls of thistle down
Move on, like ghosts that cannot lie;
The fields are bare, the roads are dry,
Ah, sweet the world, but time runs by!

Sweet, sweet, the world clothed round in white,
The snow-drifts shine on peak and height;
The children shout, the sledges fly;
Hark, how the echoes ring and die!
Ah, sweet the world, but time runs by!

The snow-drifts melt in April rain;
All lovely things come back again;
Warm budding woods, and tender sky,
Song, nest and blossom. * * * (Alabama.)
That God has made the time run by!

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

PHILADELPHIA, March 26, Midnight.—A fire is raging on Fourth street, above Arch. A high wind is spreading it in all directions.

Later.—The fire is under control. Damage immense.

PHILADELPHIA, March 26, 2.05 A. M.—The fire is under control. The last building burned was 109 Fourth street. Loss on St. Elmo Hotel, $100,000. About thirty houses, more or less, were damaged by fire or water. Total loss is thought to be about $1,000,000.

CHICAGO, March 27.—Unofficial but trustworthy information from Fort Walsh confirms the recent story of a large confederation of hostile Indians in that vicinity. Sitting Bull and Spotted Eagle have been reinforced by lodges from the Missouri River agencies, including Red Cloud's, and it is estimated that there are now from 5,000 to 7,000 warriors within a hundred miles of Fort Walsh. Some of these bands have been seen by Gen. Miles' scouts. The Indians are very restless, and are under constant surveillance of a too limited force of Canadian mounted police, who evidently anticipate trouble.

At a council the last week in February the Indians resolved to resist the buffalo law, and Sitting Bull counseled moderation toward the Canadians, but breathed defiance against the Americans. His force is well armed and splendidly equipped, and could probably be augmented to 8,000 men, in which case a vigorous summer campaign would be probable.

NEW YORK, March 27.—Letters from India show great excitement over the Eastern question. It is estimated that 200,000 volunteers (Mussulmans) could be raised in four months to fight against Russia.

ANNAPOLIS, MD., April 1.—The joint resolution of Montgomery Blair, instructing the attorney general of this State to exhibit a bill in the Supreme Court of the United States, on behalf of the State of Maryland, praying a judicial review of the electoral count, and which passed the House of Delegates March 28, was passed by the Senate, to-night, four Senators voting yea.

FOREIGN.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 26.—The Grand Duke Nicholas, accompanied by twelve Russian generals, proceeded to-day, in the Imperial yacht Livadia, to the Dolma Baghtche palace, where he was received by the Sultan, surrounded by his ministers and Osman Pasha and other generals.

The Grand Duke conversed with the Sultan twenty minutes. He then went to the Beltylerbey palace, where he was visited by the Sultan twenty-five minutes later. The Grand Duke and suite next proceeded to the former Russian embassy, in front of which the Russian eagles were displayed.

The Grand Duke will sleep on board the Livadia to night and take luncheon with the Sultan to morrow. It is said that the Grand Duke, referring to the Porte's apprehensions of possible Anglo-Russian conflict, expressed the hope that the Congress would effect an arrangement.

ROME, March 26.—Premier Cairoli, in the Chambers to-day, set forth the programme of the new ministry. He said, among other things, that it was their intention to maintain Italy's loyalty in the present foreign complications, and reduce some taxes, levying heaviest on the poor. His speech was much cheered.

LONDON, March 28.—Lord Derby, Secretary of State for the Foreign Department, announced his resignation in the House of Lords.

Lord Derby stated that his resignation was not on account of the dispatch for the submission of the whole treaty to the Congress.

Lord Beaconsfield explained that Lord Derby resigned on account of the calling out of the reserve.

HAVANA, March 28.—A proclamation, dated Santiago de Cuba, March 25, and signed by Gen. Martinez Campos, has been made public here. The proclamation declares that peace has been substantially established in the greater part of the district lately in rebellion, and that it is now necessary to heal the wounds occasioned by ten years of strife. Therefore, in accordance with article 2 of the peace conditions, and by authority of the home government, the general decrees:

1. The authorities of the pacified territory are to observe the most complete oblivion for past events, and strive to prevent the resuscitation of dangerous passions.

2. All persons now imprisoned for treason, rebellion and sedition, or for being accessory thereto, are to be liberated, and returned to their homes if desired, and those who have escaped punishment are not to be proceeded against.

3. All cases now pending before the tribunals of the Island for such crimes are to be abandoned immediately.

4. All persons banished or departed for such causes are to be permitted to return home, and are to be exempt from molestation or persecution for their previous conduct.

5. All persons included in the foregoing articles, and those residing in foreign countries, are to regain their rights of citizenship.

6. All deserters from the Spanish army who are still in arms are to be pardoned if they surrender by the fifteenth of April.

ROME, March 29.—In consequence of the establishment of the Catholic hierarchy of Scotland, the Pope desires entering upon diplomatic relations with the British government and has instructed Cardinal Franchi, the pontifical secretary of State, to take steps with that object.

MONTREAL, CANADA, March 29.—The greatest excitement has been created here by the news of war between England and Russia being imminent. Canada's first contingent of men will be ten thousand. This city has already two thousand enrolled.

The wheat and pork markets have appreciated in value and the local money market has a stiffening tendency.

LONDON, March 30.—The Times' Rome correspondent telegraphs that Pope Leo's allocution was delivered at the consistory on Thursday, and gives the Italians general satisfaction. The allusion to the clericals' captivity is very mild. His holiness expresses no intention to struggle for the recovery of his temporalities. The main stress of the allocution is laid on the relations which it is intended should exist between the Pope and the cardinals. The Sacred College typifies the council of seventy, called by Moses to be his assistants and advisers in the government of the people of Israel. He wishes the cardinals to be his bystanders and fellow-laborers; and lest it should be thought these were merely unmeaning words from his lips, he expresses all the reliance he puts on their wise counsel trusting and begging that it may never fail him. It was the dearest wish of the Council of Trent that the administration of the universal church should rest on the Council of Cardinals.

This, says the Times correspondent, is a clear hint of a return to the old constitution of the church, and the reference to the Council of Trent seems plainly intended as a repeal of the act of the Vatican Council, which, by declaring Pope Pius the Ninth infallible, repelled him to dispense with the advice of either the college or council or the Vatican synod itself. To the proclamation of the dogma of infallibility, or of that of the Immaculate conception and to all the acts of Pius the Ninth except the reconstitution of the Scottish hierarchy, no allusion whatever occurs in the allocution.

The bets of the deceased Pope have been sanctioned by the church and must stand, but Pope Leo seems to think that the least said about them will be the soonest mended. By the choice of Cardinal Di Pietro one of the youngest and decidedly most liberal of the cardinals, as camerlengo, the Pope confirms the hope of those conciliatory views which were always thought to animate him, and which were expected to actuate his policy in his dealings with the civil power.

ROME, March 30.—The Pope received ex President Grant, his wife and son to-day. M. Chatard, rector of the American College, awaited Gen. Grant in the hall of the Swiss Guard, and accompanied him to the Pope's department, where Cardinal McCloskey presented him to the Pope who received him with every mark of distinction.

LONDON, April 1.—The Times prints a Pera dispatch, dated March 29, saying: Although the Turkish policy may a short time ago have been philo English, just now it is philo Russian. The Russians have acquired over the Sultan and his advisers what in Turkey is the strongest kind of influence—direct and personal influence.

Some military men of high rank, as Osman Pasha and Reouf Pasha have become more Russian than English. The Turkish and Russian soldiers fraternize, the latter going about Constantinople in uniforms freely without evoking any animosity such as usually exists between invaders and the invaded. If war comes England must contemplate the possibility of having to fight Turkey and Russia and the best she would get from Turkey would be one-sided neutrality of little or no substantial use.

The Rome correspondent of the Times says that a faction hostile to the Pope is said to exist among the cardinals; headed by Cardinals Berardi, Bilio and Martinelli. They are displeased with the temperate tenor of his allocution, the appointment of Cardinal Di Pietro as camerlengo, and the fact that the Pope has not announced his accession to the deposed sovereign.

A special from Rome to the Pall Mall Gazette says: The commission of cardinals appointed to consider the position of Catholics in reference to Parliamentary elections have reported that it is contrary to Catholics to participate in elections, and accept seats in Parliament if elected, taking the usual oaths to the King and Parliament but pledging themselves not to offend against the laws of the church.

A Vienna dispatch to the Daily Telegraph says: Count Andrassy is making fresh efforts to bring about a meeting of the Congress, and thinks Russia will eventually yield to England's demands. Count Andrassy informed Gen. Ignatieff that the whole tendency of the treaty was in opposition to the interests of Europe, and that no lasting peace could be concluded without the sanction of the powers. Gen. Ignatieff rejoined that Russia had altogether abandoned the idea of a congress, in consequence of the difficulties raised by England. He urged Count Andrassy to state Austria's demands. The Count declined, as he still hoped for the Congress, but declared if he had to consider the treaty solely from an Austrian point of view he would demand far greater concessions than if he had considered it in relation to the general interests of Europe. Gortschakoff also failed to convince the Count.

The correspondent of the Telegraph says he has the foregoing on the highest official authority. He adds that Germany has approved the refusal of Prince Charles of Roumania to surrender Bessarabia, unless invited to do so by the powers.

A special to the Daily News from St. Petersburg says: Despite the general excitement, a few men in high position advocate a final attempt at conciliation by the simultaneous withdrawal of the British fleet and the Russian army from the neighborhood of Constantinople, pending arbitration by neutral sovereigns.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The first State convention of the Louisiana association will be held at Baton Rouge, April 26-30. A circular recently issued from the rooms of the association in Baton Rouge, and signed by H. N. Sherburne president, and A. E. Reed chairman of the Executive Committee says:

It is proposed to hold a State convention of the Louisiana associations and all evangelical Christians interested in the work at the earliest practicable time (April 26-30) where the most practicable knowledge of association work may be acquired in the shortest time at which experienced and prominent workers from other localities will be present to engage with the delegates in the discussion of the important questions of work and where plans of State work can be matured.

There is no limit to the number of delegates that any one association may send; and all pastors of evangelical churches and delegates of one or more of their most active members attend. Delegates must be members in good standing of evangelical churches. All pastors of evangelical churches and persons whom they may delegate, will be received as duly accredited delegates, and will be entitled to entertainment, etc.

Please notify us if you can come.

In concluding these few lines we would request your sympathy and co-operation in the work and invite you to a correspondence with the writer or with any one of their number. Please interest yourself and endeavor to enlist other Christian workers of your church in the matter, and may the Lord bless you to your effort.

Remember the committee and their work in your prayers—by so doing you will be one who blessings will once fall short of no avail.

Communications should be addressed to A. E. Reed, chairman Executive Committee, Baton Rouge, La.

A sentence from the upward
Through the rain with bow of fire
Which is prophesied to be sign
Of no flood at all in this century
Bring it to me in this evening
Without leaves, all rain-washed
Though the softness of the trades
In the wings of March does blow
And the blue birds in the meadow
Their spirits feel once more
Comes a warning with the blue bees
Wear your winter flannels yet.

A Card

We have received, says the Southern Christian Advocate, the following card, which we assign to this prominent place, as it is very desirable that it should be generally read. Our brethren of the church press will, by publishing it, confer a favor upon the Atlanta brethren, and perhaps benefit some of their readers:

In view of the fact that we are receiving from many brethren, not members of the General Conference, letters requesting us to secure homes for them, if possible, for a few days during the session, we are constrained by the necessities of the case to make this general announcement: that it is wholly impossible for us to provide homes for any except members of the General Conference, fraternal delegates and distinguished visitors. The homes of Atlanta are out of compass and we have limited hotel accommodations. We sincerely hope that brethren will consider the situation, appreciate our embarrassments, and do us the justice to believe that we would gladly comply with their requests if it were at all practicable.

By order of the Ministers' Meeting.

H. H. PARKS.

ATLANTA, GA., March 27, 1878.

Presiding Elders' Districts.

MR. EDITOR: The subject of the presiding eldership is now under discussion by many of our church papers. The subject is one of great importance to the church, and if any change is made it should be done with great care. I feel that our ensuing General Conference will do nothing rash in this matter. Most articles that I have noticed seem to advocate the enlargement of the presiding elders' districts to from twenty-eight to thirty appointments. This plan, in my own judgment, would be impracticable. My reasons are these: Many of these appointments the elder would visit and hold quarterly meetings on week-days, and in order for him to get his salary he would of necessity give the Sabbaths to the stronger appointments. Hence we see that envy and strife would arise among the people and the preachers. When the district stewards would hold the meeting to assess the salary of the presiding elder, and apportion the Bishops' claim and Conference fund, the brethren from the various circuits and stations would be offering certain prices if the elder could visit them on Sabbath, or in case he could not they would only pay a smaller sum. Hence you see the plan would give rise to envy, strife and divisions, and the elder would be no better paid than with the present plan. But, notwithstanding all this Mr. Editor, I believe a change is necessary. Our circuits have been made too small. Many of our brethren are inexperienced as pastors, and would make much better preachers and pastors if they were associated with and were under some more experienced minister in the itinerant work for a time. And I think it will be acknowledged by all that some are never very well calculated to take charge of circuits and stations.

The Mississippi Conference could easily be put into four presiding elders' districts, and no elder have more than fourteen appointments. The way to do that is to put three or four of these small circuits into one, and add one or two small circuits to be small stations, or make circuits out of these stations. Now place two or three, or if necessary, four preachers on each of these works so formed, and in so doing we will revive the old spirit of Methodist itineracy, which has been so much localized. The first benefit that I see in this plan would be the leadership of an experienced minister of God. This leader will organize his preachers and arrange his work; and then the people will have a variety of preaching, which is so much needed at present.

In holding protracted meetings they are organized and have help enough of themselves. With this plan we would not hear of so many sad failures as when we hear of preachers abandoning protracted efforts because they could get no help. Our Bishops would not be so annoyed by persons saying: "Who will we have?" or "Who is our preacher?" But where they have three or four the people would make no complaint, if one should be a little unpopular or inexperienced. It is very evident to any thoughtful mind that the more we divide or cut up or single out, the weaker we grow. "In union there is strength."

F. M. FEATHERSTUN.

Alabama Conference Minutes.

A CORRECTION.

MR. EDITOR: Bro. Williamson has kindly called my attention to the financial report of the Livingston station, as published, in which injustice has been done both to himself and to that work. The published report shows that nothing was received on the pastor's salary; while the fact is that the entire assessment was paid, and Bro. Williamson so reported it. The fault does not rest with the statistical secretary, but with the proof-reader. I take pleasure in bearing testimony to the fact that while Livingston is the smallest of our stations numerically, and not financially strong, it has for years ranked all others, ability considered, in contributions for benevolent purposes. The grace of liberality has been developed in them to such a degree that I have no idea they will be deterred from doing as well, or better, this year, notwithstanding the failure to give credit for past performances.

R. B. CRAWFORD, Sec.

OKOLONA, Alabama.

Canton, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: You sometimes express a desire for news from the churches, and as I do not often trouble you, perhaps you will find space for a short report from Canton church, Mississippi Conference. I arrived here from my old home (Yazoo City) on December 20 of last year. We were sad indeed to part with many who had endeared themselves to us in that church and community. But duty called, and though it was in sadness and tears, yet we left that place at five o'clock on the morning of the above mentioned date, and at half-past twelve of the same day we were in the parsonage here, surrounded by kind friends again. Soon after my arrival it was thought best by our board of trustees to take the old church down and build a new frame building in its stead. The old building was brick, and its foundation had so given away that its walls were badly cracked and the house considered dangerous. We now have a new church edifice almost finished, and the money in hand to pay the workmen at once, when completed.

Our first quarterly meeting has just closed. The presiding elder, Rev. F. M. Featherstun, has done us good, and has left a fine impression behind. Every dollar of quarterage was reported to date, and nearly half the Bishops' collection taken at the first quarterly meeting.

I would like to say, while I am speaking on this subject, that since the twentieth of January we have been using the Presbyterian pulpit, which was kindly offered to us by said church, and for which we are sincerely thankful.

Not only are our finances up to date, but the good ladies, with a view to the substantial comfort of the pastor and his family, sent us, on the eve of our quarterly meeting, a nice box of such good things as were needed and thankfully received. Mr. Editor, if you will come to our District Conference this year we will treat you well, and show you our new church. Can't you come? We will post you as to time.

Yours fraternally,

R. D. NORSWORTHY.

Riceville Mission.

To the Ministers and Members of the Seashore District, Mississippi Conference:

Our presiding elder, Bro. Price, has given Bro. L. Carley charge of a part of Marion and Hancock counties, to establish Methodism therein. At our last District Conference we discussed the propriety of establishing such a mission. All said we need one, and must have one. The last Annual Conference did not furnish a preacher. The mission is now in its formative state. What shall we do? I told Bro. Carley he should be supported. Bro. Price has appointed me agent to collect $100. I believe I will collect every cent. The amount I ask of the other circuits and stations is $80. This is not to interfere with your missionary assessment, but is an extra effort. It is assessed as follows: Bro. Smith, $15; Bro. Nicholson $15; Bro. Thompson, $10; Bro. Hopper, $10; Bro. Howard, $10; Bro. Brown, $5; Bro. Gillespie, $5; Bro. Raynor, $5; Bro. C. W. Calhoun, $3; Bro. Gwin, $2. I would gladly receive aid from any one interested in this blessed work. Man is not happy if not employed—a preacher is dead, his people are dead, unless engaged in the missionary work. Send your mite to me at Columbia, Marion county, Miss., or bring it to the District Conference.

Your brother,

I. W. COOPER.

Collection for Delegates.

Will the brethren of the Alabama Conference pardon me for calling their attention to the following resolution adopted at our late session?

"Resolved, That a collection be taken up in all our congregations to defray the expenses of the delegates to the General Conference, in the month of March; the amounts raised to be paid over to the nearest delegate, to be reported at the session of the General Conference."

This resolution is mandatory, and should be obeyed by all. I would suggest that if there should be a surplus it could be added to the Conference fund at our next session.

R. B. CRAWFORD.

A plain man said: "Before my conversion, when I prayed in the presence of others, I prayed to them; when I prayed in secret, I prayed to myself; but now I pray to God."

Hints and Queries.

MR. EDITOR: The Discipline makes it the duty of the board of circuit stewards, in the beginning of the year, to estimate what amount is necessary for the salary of their preacher, and to apportion the same to the various appointments and members on the work. But, instead of doing this, it is very common, when the presiding elder asks the question: "What amount have the stewards estimated for the support of the preacher?" for them to inquire: "What can or will the work pay?" then apportion that amount to the membership. Just as though a preacher could live on whatever a circuit or station could or would pay, however little that might be. On the other hand, just as though it required all that any circuit or station could or would pay to support the preacher, however much that might be.

Now the Discipline is right. Let the stewards say what the preacher's salary shall be, then apportion said amount to the respective appointments and members, and in case the circuit or station fails to pay it the preacher has to make it up. He can do this either by such a rigid course of economy as will deprive himself and family not only of many of the comforts of life, but of many of its real necessities; or by so economizing his time as to give a portion of it to secular employments, and thereby supplement his salary. Now would it not be just and equal, as the preacher pays a portion of his salary, to give him credit for it? And let the books show that so much of it was paid by the circuit and so much by the preacher. Perhaps there is not a preacher who has traveled twenty consecutive years in the Louisiana Annual Conference who has not paid, in this way, an average of $100 a year. Why not give him credit for having paid the $2,000? It is some comfort to a preacher to feel that he is supporting the gospel as well as preaching it.

We do not wish to be understood as complaining—not by any means; for we believe our system of finance is about as good as we will ever get it. At any rate, it is good enough if properly worked. We cannot even hope to have a system or financial plan which can be worked without more or less friction. The prophets and apostles had their trouble in getting a support, and the other Conferences have their trying times of a first and fourth Quarterly Conference as well as we. The Lord ordained that the gospel should be transported, in the main, upon the wings of faith. True, they that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel; but that does not signify that it is not by faith. The gospel is an institution which will not bear to be endowed. Whenever a church undertakes to endow the gospel it comes in collision with the Lord's plan; and when it does this, sooner or later, "Ichabod" will be written upon her altars. The sooner we become reconciled in what seems to be a haphazard way of supporting the ministry, perhaps, the better it will be for us. After all, take the average men of the world, who have devoted all their energies to business pursuits, and the faithful minister, who has devoted his life and energies to preaching the gospel, has come out ahead of them, even in all that pertains to this life, to say nothing of that life which is to come.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE DAILY ADVOCATE.—Price $1.—The General Conference Daily Advocate will be published during the session at Atlanta, Ga. It will contain the proceedings of the body, including the reports of committees, speeches of members, and the plans that may be adopted for the extension of the kingdom of Christ.

We have published the price at $1.25; but, after making our contract for its publication, find that we can furnish subscribers at $1. Persons who have already sent us $1.25 will be credited with twenty-five cents.

We request all persons who expect to subscribe for it to do so at once.

THE ARMIES OF THE EVE.

Not in the golden morning
Shall ladsl forms return,
For languidly and dimly then
The lights of memory burn.

Nor when the noon unfoldeth
Its sunny light and smile,
Do these unto their bright repose
The wanlerlings fill while.

But when the stars are wending
Their radiant way on high,
And gentle winds are whispering back
The music of the sky:

Oh, then these starry millions
Their streaming banners weave,
To marshal on their wildering way
The armies of the eve.

The dim and shadowy armies
Of pin-inipplet dreams,
Those footsteps brush the feathery fern
And print the sleeping streams.

We meet them in the calmness
Of high and holier climes;
We greet them with the blessed names
Of old and happier times.

And marching in the starlight
Above the sleeping dust,
They freshen all the fountain springs
Of our undying trust.

Around our every pathway
The beauty-ministers they train
To circle us to God from every rest
Of our creating thought.

My First Visit to An Annual Conference

MR. EDITOR: I only wish to give a few incidents of our Alabama Conference, which convened in Montgomery last December. It was the first I ever attended and there was much there of interest to me that attracted no attention from the old members. For instance, a Bishop was a novel sight to me. Yes, I joined the Methodist Church South at fourteen years of age, and have been a member just twenty years and never saw a Bishop before. Are there not many much older men who have never yet seen one? Or do I bring up the rear in Conference going? Be this as it may, I am sure nobody enjoyed "seeing the Bishop" and "being at Conference" more than myself. Bishop Keener's serene dignity, and the ease and grace with which he presided over the deliberations of the body, impressed me forcibly. He impressed me, too, as being a man of extraordinary piety. His prayer at opening was so plain, but yet so touching, that I shall not soon forget it. While our hearts were wrung with grief at the loss of our loved Marvin, yet we thanked our Father that he had spared to the church Bishop Keener, and perhaps many others like him. By the side of Bishop Keener sits Dr. Thomas O. Summers. In appearance he comes up to my full conception of an eminent divine. On the other side of the Bishop, and a little in the rear, sits Dr. Redford. I should not have picked him out as our Dr. Redford. He impresses us as a man of great executive ability. But of all the rest, we were the worst disappointed in the appearance of Dr. McFerrin. His figure, his general appearance and his style of address were all contrary to our long established mental picture. He is rather homely, and did not impress us as a cultivated orator. He impressed us as a man of the most distinctive individuality and decided character of any one in the Conference room. It seemed all Dr. McFerrin. I fancied that I read in his face the love of truth as the predominant trait of his character. Turning from these famous men on the stand to the one hundred and thirty or forty members upon the floor, what a grand array is presented. I gazed long upon the picture, in contemplation deep. I never before witnessed so large and intelligent a body. I have frequently visited both branches of our Legislature at Montgomery, and have seen many other assemblies noted for intelligence, but I am free to say that nothing I have ever seen is to be compared with the "rank and file" of this Alabama Conference. That such a body of men possessing in such an eminent degree all the resources of acquiring wealth and worldly renown, should turn their backs squarely upon all temptations in that direction, and with unalterable purpose pursue a calling that is certain to bring them nothing but poverty, hardships and suffering during life, contains a lesson that every skeptic would do well to ponder. What a burning shame upon the church of God that it does not, at some places and times, give even a scanty subsistence to the pastor who serves them so faithfully.

After viewing the body as a whole, we next direct attention to particular members. Dr. M. S. Andrews, Dr. A. St. Andrews, Dr. Mitchell, Revs. T. L. Maugum, Mathison, Briggs, Jones, Col. Dent, Col. Hardaway, and perhaps several others, are men of fine physiques. You would also notice in the assembly many too, bent with age, loved fathers in Israel, who were doubtless the giants of other years. Among them I see Rev. J. W. Shores, my loved pastor for one year, and presiding elder for four years, not, perhaps, worried so much from age as from that fall from the buggy. To me there was no pleasure of the Conference greater than that of meeting my "old preachers." They were a kind of diary that revived in my memory all the events of my Christian life in days that have passed and gone. How thankful we were to meet again! How blessed of Heaven to enjoy the glorious privilege! But we did not all meet. Oh! no. Many have been transferred to other Conferences, and many, too, have gone to their reward on high.

Another noticeable feature of the Conference was the great brotherly love manifested in all the discussions. What a wide difference just here between the church and the world! See what wrangling is all the time going on in our legislative assemblies! See what friction in all other bodies! Then turn here, and behold a picture of brotherly love—a "sight worthy to behold." Happy the nation that could have such harmony in its councils!

The business of the Conference was continually varied with religious exercises. This was another source of great enjoyment. Many fine sermons were preached and apparently with "telling" effect.

After a week's session the Conference drew to a close. All interest then centered in the appointments. Laymen were intent to know "who"—ministers to know "where." When these were read the Conference was adjourned, and then came the sad farewell. "Good-by! good-by!" greeted our ears on every side. We will not all meet in Conference again. One—Bro. Ross, and a shining light in our church—has already "passed over the river." The next morning after Conference came to me the saddest parting of all. I must bid my host, Bro. Richard Williams and family, and also my room mate, Bro. D. B. Gayle, good-by. How sad to sever these pleasant relations!

The Preacher and His Family.

MR. EDITOR: Many things have been written in order to teach and influence the people to provide at least a comfortable living for their preacher and his family; and yet in some places there are church members who have no regard for their welfare or rights. We wish to offer a few more considerations for the people.

Protestants do not question the right or propriety of a preacher's having a family. In fact many people would prefer such. Neither is it questioned but that they possess the rights common to all families. It is their right to expect a comfortable supply of food and raiment, and contingent expenses, at least, if no more. It would be an unrighteous demand to ask them to put up with less than he could provide for his own family were he engaged in any secular business. In many instances the preacher's usefulness absolutely demands more. But, however varied may be the circumstances of a preacher and his family, the great question to consider is: To whom does a preacher's family look for the necessaries and comforts of life—to him or to the people whom he serves? Although the means of support come from the people alone, they (his family) expect him to respect and grant them their rights; and in so far as he fails to supply their rightful wants he becomes immoral, and is degraded in his own eyes. There is no necessity for such a failure. It will not be contended that such a necessity attaches to the ministerial life. Must a man neglect his family and reduce them to absolute suffering for the sake of preaching the gospel to others? May not worldly-minded people, and even his family, question, justly too, the preacher's religion?

It is well known that if a preacher does his full duty to the people he must be free from active secular business. Even if he had a capital at interest, it might absorb his mind and prevent his attendance to the winning of souls for Christ and the edifying of the believers. Jesus said to his ministers: "Provide neither gold nor silver nor brass, in your purse, nor scrip for your journey," etc., "for the workman is worthy of his meat." This is his right, not a charity. And unless he insists on his rights being granted he in a measure forsakes his family, and paves the way to be immoral to his family and before the people by neglecting them. It will not do to plead the condition of the people to modify the matter. The rights of his wife and children must be respected. Such appeals will avail nothing. They make him appear not only immoral, but fanatical. Must they bear such deprivation and suffering as submitting to Divine Providence, because the people neglect to provide for them? We inquire not here whether such people are worthy of the gospel or whether they need it. The latter is very evident. But the question is: What is the preacher to do with his condition? His family justly complain of him for neglecting them. It would be unmanly to say his calling caused him to neglect them. It would be untrue to say his calling demanded such; "for the workman is worthy of his meat." He is worthy of it. It is a divine right. God has promised it with a view to the obligations of a preacher to his wife and children. God expects his ministers to be models in morality, as well as in martyrdom.

Some one will say: "He ought not to trust in the people alone, but work as other men, and provide for his family." "Yes," says one, "I would be willing to help him if he would help himself. He ought to have a corn-patch, and raise his bread, anyhow, or he might teach school." When these friends of the preacher first succeed in following these instructions we will be willing to attempt the new way. We ask: Why should any one man be required to give, as a charity, as much as a preacher has to give? What man would be willing to give his corn crop or the tuition of his school in order to have the gospel preached to the poor? Many feel unable to give four or five bushels, and some none, and yet they suggest that a preacher do it! It is well they are not preachers, else they would have to advise their congregation "to do as they say, and not as they do." God has not required his ministers to do without their "meat;" neither may a Conference demand it. It is the opinion of the writer that no minister is under any obligations to serve a people when they fail to provide a comfortable support for him and his family. Why should a preacher's family be required to go for weeks and months without needed clothing, sugar, coffee, meal, meat, or money to pay incidental expenses? Christ says he is worthy of these things. Who will say otherwise? If a preacher was rich, who can say that his dues to God would be so much as the support of himself and family? Would not this be best given to foreign missions?

Who has released the church members from the apostle's injunction, Galatians vi, 6: "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." Let church members consider their duty. Think of the next verse: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked," etc.

AN OBSERVER.

Let Us Patronize Our Own Schools.

MR. EDITOR: I am somewhat surprised, after so much has been written by preachers and laymen for the good of the church, that so little is said in regard to a matter of vital importance to her interest, growth and future prosperity. I refer to our Methodist schools and colleges; and while I do not intend to be sectional, yet this is intended especially for the benefit of those of our church who refuse to patronize our Southern University at Greensboro, Ala. We have seen this college in its prime, and thought: What a fortunate people to be able to build such a commodious house and locate it in such a favorable spot! But, alas! how soon do we see this building, reared with so much pride, and at the expense of money and talent, languishing for want of support.

It is because they who should have supported her have failed to do their duty that she is in such a state. Such persons may offer to excuse their conduct on the ground that other schools are superior, and for this reason they send their sons to them. I answer: It is their fault if the Southern University has a superior anywhere in the South; for the words of the Master are applicable here: "He that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad." The common excuse for sending to Tuscaloosa and other colleges is that these colleges have a military department, and their sons must be brought up under military discipline.

I would not for one moment attempt to detract anything from the University of Alabama, and am willing she should retain all honor due her; but I do not think that her military department is so all-important as to cause patrons to be disloyal to their own schools. Can men of influence in the church expect a college to prosper when they send their sons to other colleges? How can they be astonished if she languishes, or how can they bespeak the patronage of others when they withhold their own?

As I said in the beginning, this communication is intended chiefly for our church members. Of course we want the patronage of all in this section; but of these we claim it by right. We have an agent (Bro. Powers) who will lay the claims of the college before the public, and I trust successfully.

In conclusion I will say that if we expect to build up our church, if we expect our children to grow up in the right faith, we must sustain our schools. We have but to look around us to see how other denominations are acting in this matter; and this is the true way of strengthening and building up a church.

We cannot, under the pressure of the hard times, expect a great deal in the way of money to help us, for we know that few feel able; but which, by simply patronizing the college, a mutual benefit will accrue to all parties, besides the consciousness of duty performed, all true, zealous Methodists must feel it their duty to respond.

LANMAN.

FORKLAND, March 13, 1878.

ONLY.

BY M. ALLIE DAVIS.

Only a rosy, dimpled cheek
To my cheek pressed;
Only a tiny sunlit face
Against my breast;
Only a dear little baby's smile,
A tender kiss;
But, oh, it filled my mother-heart
With untold bliss.

Only a little suffering face
Pinched with pain;
Only a slender thread of life
Snapp'd in twain;
Only two fair, sightless hands
Crossed in sleep;
But, oh, it filled my mother heart
With pain so deep.

Only an empty crib beside
A vacant chair;
Only two little worn-out shoes,
A lock of hair;
Only an old and ragged hat
He used to wear;
But, oh, I cannot look on them
Without a tear.

Only a little mound of earth—
A cradle-tomb;
Only a crushed and broken flower
With lost perfume;
Only a sad, a longing pain
Within my breast;
Only the memory of baby lips
To my lips pressed.

Only a little while and I
The dear one meet,
Far o'er the way where well I know
His tiny feet
Have trod the path that ends but at
The mercy-seat.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names. Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MARIA TOUN, wife of Thomas Raynham, died in Bayou Sara, March 6, 1878, aged fifty-four years. Sister Raynham was the daughter of a pious member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, England. She was converted early in life, and became a faithful laborer for the Master; was regular and prompt in attendance upon the class meeting and other means of grace peculiar to the above church. She and her husband landed in New Orleans in January, 1850. Since then she has been identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, being located the greater part of the time in Bayou Sara.

During her last illness her mind was much disquieted by reason of doubts and fears as to her full acceptance with God. She was painfully conscious of the sin of omission which detracted greatly from her joy. We prayed earnestly for many days for the removal of the cloud. In the midst of a paroxysm of intense suffering the blessing came, the cloud of unbelief was dissipated, and the love of God was richly shed abroad in her heart by the Holy Ghost. Standing on the verge of time, with eternity in full view, she shouted the praise of the world's Redeemer, and exhorted all around her to consecrate their lives to the service of the blessed Savior.

Her sufferings were intense. She was afflicted with dropsy of the heart, upon which maladies is accompanied with more painful symptoms. But, notwithstanding her great suffering, she never murmured or complained. Her patience and resignation to the will of Heaven was the subject of remark by all. She was a woman of good mind, endowed with many Christian virtues, and beloved and esteemed most by those who knew her best. She has gone. The family are heart-broken; but they sorrow not as those without hope, for they have the happy assurance that she is with the Savior. She is brighter, fairer, happier with him, and they may soon rejoin her in our Father's house, a reunited family, to part no more forever. Heaven should be very near our hearts, for the wife and mother is there.

PASTOR.

MRS. REBECCA JANE DAWSON, wife of F. M. Dawson, died in Delta, La., December 27, 1877, aged thirty-nine years, seven months and twenty-five days.

Pious parents had instructed her in the way of salvation, and in early life she had sought and found the Savior precious. She had the true light, and it was shining, that others might glorify her Father in heaven. The heart was purified by faith, and the temple was God's, for his Spirit dwelt in it. She loved Christ, and obeyed him. She was in the church, and in it served him. Hers was a worship which God honored, for in the courts of the Lord's house song, prayer and praise ascended from the heart, conscious of his presence. Every interest of the church was precious to her; and though scarcely able to leave her home, yet she came to sit with us in heavenly places, in the name of Jesus, until failing strength debarred her of this privilege, and then she would say to the pastor, departing: "Remember me to day."

For several months she suffered intensely, but no murmur escaped her lips. The will of God was her will, and upon him she leaned for sustaining grace. His rod and staff supported her. I was with her several times during her sickness, and was always greeted with a cheerful smile. Prayer was offered, and in it she heartily joined; and those holy associations rendered us better prepared for life's duties. She affirmed, with tears of joy, that God's presence continued, and without it she would be unable to bear her suffering.

But she is gone. The silver thread, of which we caught a glimpse here and there amidst the darkness of earth, has been drawn heavenward. The home which was made so bright and pleasant to her husband, children and friends is now dark and dreary. Hearts are bruised, but not broken. They loved her, and her virtues cannot die. Gentleness, patience, meekness—manifested in health and sickness—with perfect trust and firm reliance upon Jesus in death, is an inheritance more precious than gold, more lasting than time.

P. H. MOSS.

DIED, at her home in the city of New Orleans, on the tenth of February, Sister SARAH CROSSON, in the fifty-ninth year of her age. She was a native of Scotland, and moved to this country in 1818. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1855, at Moreau Street church, New Orleans, of which she has been a faithful member.

Some time prior to the year 1868 she moved to Texas, where she resided until the death of her daughter, Mrs. Koffsky, when she returned to New Orleans. Since that time (1868) she has had charge of the domestic duties of the household of her deceased daughter. She took the place and acted the part of a mother to the bereaved children, one of whom was left a little infant.

She was a lady of more than ordinary energy and thoroughness in domestic affairs, sometimes overtaxing herself, such was her industry. She will be greatly missed in the family.

As a Christian professor she was consistent and exemplary in her deportment. Retiring in disposition, and being of necessity confined much at home, her influence was confined to the family and the immediate circle of her friends. To these alone were her real virtues and worth known. Before her departure she gave her grandchildren pious and affectionate counsel, told them to love and trust in Jesus, and to be religious. She has left behind her in the household a savory influence, which to them is as the fragrance of some sweet flower.

She died in peace and triumph, trusting in Jesus, her Savior. "So he giveth his beloved sleep."

T. F.

MARY ELLEN WILLIAMS was born September 11, 1860, and died at the residence of her father, Wiley J. Williams, in Santa Rosa county, Fla., September 27, 1877, aged seventeen years. She was baptized in infancy, and joined the Methodist Church January 10, 1875. In her daily life she exemplified the religion which she professed, and by the gentleness of her disposition was daily occupying a larger place in the affections of those who knew her. Standing upon the threshold of life, with all its bright hopes before her, she was attacked with typhoid fever, and, after lingering for weeks, gently passed away. It was my privilege to know her from her father's fireside, where her affectionate obedience was a constant joy to her parents. Her character was marked by an unobtrusive modesty, an unselfish consideration for the comfort of others, native good sense and amiability of temper that made her youth attractive and gave promise of a noble womanhood. So far as we can see, she could ill be spared from the present or the future. But God knows best, and when the mysteries of his providence shall be read in the light of eternity, the stricken hearts that now quiver with anguish while they say, "Thy will be done," will be enabled to rejoice even in this sad bereavement. Till then may God's grace comfort and sustain them.

J. O. A.

DIED, at Bryan, Miss., December 12, 1877, Mrs. EMMA LEWIS, born Catching, wife of Mr. James Lewis, aged twenty-seven years.

Another of earth's brightest jewels has gone to her eternal rest. A character so bright, so pure and lovely around it every Christian grace seemed to have clustered. Her religion was not demonstrative; and yet such was her life that the world took knowledge of her that she had been with Jesus. In all the trials of life she said: "I have ever found a precious friend in Jesus." Her last illness was protracted, and her sufferings intense, yet she was patient, never murmuring, but perfectly resigned to the dispensations of Providence. A short while before her death the Holy Spirit came down in power, and she had sweet communion with Jesus. She rejoiced aloud. Taking her husband by the hand, she entreated him to give his heart and consecrate his life to God, and meet her in heaven. She then called her sweet little children around her, caressed them, exhorted them to pray and be good, commended them to Jesus, and said: "Come, Father, and take me home." The sunset of life with Sister Lewis was bright, beautiful and blessed. As it went out the sweet and mellow tints of these precious words were heard: "All is well."

W. D. HOUSTON.

WILLIAM BENJAMIN BRYAN died at his residence in Webster parish, La., on the twelfth of December, 1877, in the fifty-first year of his age. He was a native of Stewart county, Ga., but emigrated to Louisiana some time before the civil war, where he resided till his death. Most of his life he was a member of the church, and his humble and straightforward walk ever gave him the confidence and esteem of those who knew him. Bro. Bryan was not one of those men whom society or the church has to carry. He lived to a purpose. He felt that he had a part in this life to perform. While he had health he made a respectable living, but it was not so fully employed. He felt that the Lord had claims upon his purse, and he was not slow to answer the calls of duty in this respect. His deep-toned faith, his conscientiousness, and his willingness to discharge the obligations of religion, gave him an influence in the community as a neighbor, citizen and Christian that will long be felt. I could easily write more of this good man, and not say too much; but these few lines must suffice even for one for whom I will ever cherish a very sacred memory.

J. W. MCDUCK.

SISTER ELIZABETH M. WARREN was born in Coosa county, Ala., December 3, 1839, and died in Elmore county, Ala., February 20, 1878. Sister Warren left a husband and eight children, besides a large circle of friends, to mourn her loss, though we mourn not as those who have no hope. She was happily converted to God about the year 1856, and connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which she lived a consistent member till her death. The writer has been acquainted with her from early childhood, and lived near her all the time, except one or two years immediately after she was married to Bro. Warren. She was a woman of an amiable disposition, an affectionate wife and mother, and an exemplary Christian. She loved to attend the public worship of God. Her illness was of short duration, and her sufferings very intense; but, notwithstanding, she was enabled to leave to her surviving friends the blessed testimony that the Lord whom she served during life did not forsake her in the ordeal of death. Thus she fell asleep in the arms of Jesus. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

G. M. PEARSON.

MRS. SUSAN GILMORE, whose maiden name was Slack, was born in Clarke county, Ala., December 27, A. D. 1822; was married to the Rev. Stephen M. Gilmore, a local minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, February 25, 1850, and united with the church at Choctaw Corner, in said county, in the early part of the year of marriage, of which she lived a consistent member until her death at the residence of her husband, in said county, September A. D. 1877.

Her life after uniting with the church was that of an humble, faithful Christian. With a strong Christian faith she united the practice of an enlarged charity, and was actuated by that Christian hope which found an anchor to her soul, both sure and steadfast. Doing what she could in the charge of her duties in all the relations she lived respected and loved, and died regretted by all who knew her. To her husband, now in very advanced old age, the loss is irreparable; but he is sustained by the faith and hope which he has so long preached.

A FRIEND.

DIED, of pneumonia, at his home in Ocean Springs, Miss., December 17, 1877, ROBERT L. KENDALL, aged twenty-three years. From his earliest boyhood he lived a moral life, and one of pure devotion to his widowed mother, whom he loved dearly. At a protracted meeting here in August, 1877, he joined the Methodist Church, earnestly seeking salvation, and continued to seek pardon of sins up to the time of his sickness; and while suffering under a torturing disease, and after spending a prayerful night, he called his youngest sister to him, saying: "Mamie, I saw my Savior, and he told me: 'Cheer up, my brave boy—there is light before you;' and now there is not a cloud before me. I am so happy." Thus passed away to rest a loving brother and an affectionate son, to meet his youngest brother, who preceded him more than a year to that good land, and to await the coming of his mother, who followed him in the same way less than a month afterward. Mourn not, brothers and sisters. Your loss is his eternal gain."

His pastor, W. W. HORTS.

MRS. MARTHA A. WATTS was born in the State of Georgia, March 4, 1824, and died at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. Carson, in Brookhaven, Miss., October, 1877. In early life she became the wife of John Watts, one of Mississippi's most honored sons, so long distinguished at the bar and afterward on the bench. He was a devout Christian and zealous worker in the church. In him she found a true helper in all spiritual things so long as he lived. Mr. Watts' last illness was of long continuance. During this period nothing afforded her much pleasure as the reading of the Scriptures, the songs of Zion, and the conversation of her sick room. She was regular in her attendance at monthly communion when in health, and desired, during her sickness, to receive it in her chamber. She died surrounded by her children and grandchildren. It was meet that she should die who had suffered long and much. She has gone where the wicked cease to trouble and the weary are at rest."

J. T. HEAD.

THE following resolutions were adopted by the Amite Quarterly Conference, Woodville district, Mississippi Conference, at a quarterly Conference assembled, February 23, 1878:

Resolved, That in the death of Sister TAYLOR, which event took place at the residence of her parents, in Lincoln county, on the second day of February, 1878, the church has lost a consistent and good member, the country a good citizen, and the family a noble boy.

Resolved, That these resolutions be engrossed upon the minutes of the Quarterly Conference, that a copy be furnished the Liberty Herald, NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and Summit News for publication, and that a copy be furnished the parents of the deceased.

W. H. GRIFFIN, Sec.

DIED, on the tenth of February, 1878, in Union parish, La., MRS. T. C. THOMPSON, wife of N. V. Thompson, and daughter of T. K. and Frances Smith, aged thirty-eight years. She was hopefully converted when young, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and lived and died in the faith. In all the relations of life she was faithful—as daughter, wife, mother, friend. All miss her. She has four children gone before her, and leaves a bereaved husband, a daughter and two sons, all grown. Her home was always open and welcome to the preachers, and her tent at the camp ground was a place where many knew her and appreciate her memory.

A life full of good works is the only way on thy part to answer the mercy of God extended to thee. God hath had mercy on thee, and hath saved thee from all thy distresses. The heart that is fullest of good works has in it least room for satan's temptation. Every promise in the Bible is thine, to strengthen, quicken and encourage thy heart.—Bunyan.

THE HOUSEWIFE.

What has this woman been doing,
So long since the morning began?
I don't believe she can remember
A single half of the work she has done.

Dressing the dear little baby,
Combing his soft silken hair,
Putting him back in the cradle
To sleep and grow healthy and fair.

Doing the work in the kitchen,
Just what it happens to be,
Covering books for the school-room,
Ready for callers at three.

Mending and making and chatting,
Then or three children to teach,
If not the primer's first lesson,
Methinks no others can preach.

That's what this woman's been doing,
Day after day 'tis the same;
Angels do watch and defend her—
"Mother" for that is her name.

My Ninety-Fourth Birthday—March 24, 1878.

BELOVED FRIENDS: Instead of a common place salutation, I will make to you a communication of broader, brighter and more pleasing contents. I have purposely postponed this communication for this glad day.

About the middle of last November, after the shock of my severe attack had passed off, it left me full of reflections on church interests, and in the midst thereof I had a vision. I had never before had one, and was always at a loss to comprehend the true idea of a Scripture vision. As, for instance, Joel, in prophesying the effects that would follow the pouring out of the Spirit upon all flesh, says: "Your young men shall see visions." One would very naturally ask: What is a vision but seeing, and how, then, can it be said, "Shall see visions?" This is a sufficient answer: A vision is imprinted on the mind by some supernatural agency; and it is said to be seen, because the mental consciousness of a vision is most strikingly scenic. But the very consciousness of a vision differs widely from that of a random dream. There is always in a vision prophetic revelation of the approaching fulfillment of some event in the prophetic programme of promised epochal events in the on-coming kingdom of God. My vision was of this order. In the language of the ancient seers, I was rapt and placed in an arched entrance into a very large house, inside of which I did not see. The open space behind me seemed to be a plain vestibule, but cut off from the main building by a cross wall perfectly close. Here I stood at the utmost verge of theirs, perfectly erect, unawed and entranced at the vision.

With a clearness of my great distance below St. Paul, I will quote his words for explanation's sake. He said: "It is not expedient for me, doubtless, to glory; I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord." As both terms are in the plural, I presume it is because they are always in combination; so that, while a vision is not a revelation, so neither is a revelation a vision. But, while a vision is a scene of something substantial about to be developed into a realization—photographed on the mind as the figure of a natural body is by light on the retina—revelation is the intention of its moral teaching.

In my vision the earth became a vast beautiful landscape, freed from every natural annoyance. It was undulating enough to relieve it entirely from the monotony of sameness. There was not a sharp hill in sight, nor a dull plain. The face of the earth was covered closely with a beautiful brown-colored grass, that lay upon it as gracefully as a parlor carpet. As to the trees they were of our common woodland growth, but all full-grown and singularly beautiful. There was not a defect in any one of them—all straight up, with large, waving tops. There was no undergrowth. All the difference was that the appearance was that of a grove, and not of a forest, in that the trees stood in rows, with open avenues between them, which seemed to run interminably on. There was nothing of the promiscuous, or wild, neglectful appearance of common woods; and yet there was not the sign of artistic taste or labor in all this lovely landscape, unless it was in these rows of trees and open avenues between. All looked like the simple development of latent elements from nature's fruitful resources. Its moral must be easily seen.

But now I come to the soul of the vision. About fifty yards in front of me was passing a succession of beautiful little boats in form—in other respects they resembled a paper car, having tops and sides opening without shutters. They were beautifully painted all alike—colors fresh and lively, staple and chaste. They ran upon a straight line, seemingly self-moved, there being no visible force. These boats were full of children, clean and fine looking, ranging from five to ten years of age, boys and girls. There was no noise, but their smiling faces were the simple blooming of inward, innocent pleasure—a species of pleasure too well-bred to become boisterous as its exponent. They said they were all going to the World's Sunday school—by which I understood a Sunday school at which all the children were summoned together on some grand occasion. In some way I found myself at one of the last of the train of boats, engaged in the following conversation with a very pleasant, promising boy of about ten years old. I said to him: "My son, what is the reason we older people cannot be always happy, like you children are?" To this he replied in terms that threw me upon the thinking plane again. He said: "It is because you are not in sympathy with Christ, like we are. If you were to work only for Christ you would be always happy." The inquiry instantly arose in my mind: What does he mean? for I felt fully satisfied from the moment of his first declaration that it was a divine message. And the revelation of the vision was in this wise: You do not work for Christ alone in your Sunday school work, in that while you are working in your way to make Christians of them you are just as truly wishing to make Methodists of them; and you cannot work only for Christ with any divisive motive underlying it. A rush of thoughts on Christ's chosen mode of soul conversion—reducing us to the simplicity of a little child—came upon me.

But I must continue my vision, with its accompanying revelations. I saw during the vision only a few—say a half dozen—adult persons within the vast field of my vision, and they looked old, poor, and passing away. Here the moral intention was that the world was to be saved by the children; and they were to be fitted for this moral conquest through this Sunday school drill; and that ecumenical Sunday school was called to let all know that the time was drawing nigh.

Finding myself back again at my first standing-place, I saw a few young men on my right hand, on the ground, close up to the basement wall, very busy writing like enrolling clerks. I asked them what they were doing, and they said: "We are making out the roll of all Sunday school children." And here the vision itself came to its close, but left me a deeply interested subject, seeing nothing more, but being overwhelmed with the revelations that unfolded to my mind the reason and the import of the vision. It was for the special comfort of the discouraged. And this was the way of it: that in the working out of God's grand design I became discouraged because awakenings and conversions seem to become more difficult and rare; but that the world was to be brought finally to Christ by the children of the church—mind the slogan phrase—by the agency of Sabbath schools; that these were to become nurseries from which would be transplanted into the church in increasing numbers, until, as the prophet Jeremiah has it: I, God, will put my law in their inward parts and write it in their hearts—just the work which can be best done in Sabbath schools and Bible classes, and will bring about that knowledge of God which will at last people the world with a theoretical population of firm believers in the God of the Bible. My belief is that much of what is called the millennium will be the restoration of a true theory—a work that never will be accomplished through mere pulpit exegesis. But three generations, if all nations were Christianized, can, by Sunday school and Bible class instruction, bring on that state of society meant by all knowing God, from the least of them into the greatest of them—most likely from the rulers to their servants.

The very esthetic dress of nature, in its freedom from all noxious growth, was only a prefiguration of what is meant by the digging down of mountains, filling up of valleys, smoothing of rough places, and making crooked ways straight—in a word, filling the earth with his glory. But all wise minds saw the moral forces necessary to bring on these grand results through our Sunday schools must be greatly increased and more efficiently worked. My revelation was that God, through the church, is making ready a people prepared for the Lord. This was not so in my day—the Lord never found a single soul prepared and made ready for him. Made ready for him! Wonderful words! I heard one of our chief pastors say within a month, while looking at some Sunday school children contributing to a missionary collection, that it had been impressed upon his mind for some time that God would convert the world through the children. I rejoiced to hear it. The Lord had shown me this several years ago while I was Sunday school agent, in preaching on its scriptural ground, from Malachi iv. 5, 6; and the reference to these words by the angel while foretelling to Zacharias beforehand the character of the ministry of John. I saw that this reciprocal interest between parents and children was increasing, and understood that considering the tendency in the church to backslide, and that the primitive grew worse as the corners came in, from depraved habits, that there was no way in which the necessity to shake the earth with a curse could be prevented but to raise up a better race.

My own state, Arkansas, is said to be a state in which the soil seems to have passed out of the holy estate of ecstasy. Peter fell into a trance at Joppa, and in that state he beheld his wonderful vision. Whether the mind is simply demoralized or superhumanized is unknown. One thing, however, is certain: the state itself is a reality. When I passed out of it into my common self I had the ecstasy. I was full of divine comfort. The room seemed to be filled with the glory of God. My bliss was that of a seeming bathing in spiritual life; and strange to say, I made no proclamation of it through it remained on air, with slight variations for three days. Nor has it passed entirely away.

So my ninety-third year ends. "Oh, give thanks unto the Lord for he is good; his mercy endureth forever." Allow me to open my ninety-fourth year among you with an earnest exhortation to all concerned to enter heartily into every good work, especially into Sunday school work—heeding nothing else but this one great end: to make ready a people prepared for the Lord (see Luke i. 17) and keep it in mind that this is what is meant by training up children in the way they should go. It is only one way—and in your work remember my Sunday school boy in his message to me: "If you would work only for Christ you would always be happy, like us." So we would.

There are three ways by which I have often been much benefited: 1. When riding alone a long journey. When giving that time to prayer. 2. By giving that time to prayer. 3. By fasting and giving days to God. abstinence; and giving days to God. 3. By praying for others; for by making an errand to God for them I have gotten something for myself.—Rutherford.

Taxation of Churches.

Taxation is, primarily, a sharing of the proceeds of either labor or capital between the State and the individual laborer or capitalist. But in the case of church property there are no proceeds, and therefore nothing to be shared with the State. This condition of fixed and recognized non-productiveness is an important factor in the problem under discussion; and though it might not be accepted as alone sufficient to determine that question, it should never be omitted from its estimates. If we add to that the further element of public utility, we shall have all that may be required for the determination of the case in favor of the prevailing usage.

Under this classification of objects will be found statues and monuments owned by individuals or associations, but set up in public places. Also fountains, parks, free galleries, and libraries, in short, all matters of public utility, convenience or taste, belonging to private parties, but devoted, without profit to the owners, to the pleasure of any one who may choose to use them.

In European cities, and to some extent in this country, there are statues and monuments of untold cost, owned by individuals or private corporations, standing in public places; and it is believed that the public is profited by them. So there are galleries of paintings and statuary, museums and reading-rooms to which the public are admitted either without charge or for only a nominal sum, which goes to pay for the necessary current expenses of the place, the proprietors receiving nothing in return for the original outlay." And yet, so far as we know, all these, whose aggregate costs amount to untold sums, are untaxed, because they are a public benefit, and at the same time they bring no pecuniary compensation to their owners.

The great parks, squares and esplanades owned by our cities are, as to the States in which they are severally situated, private property, and were they to be subjected to the ordinary laws of impost they must all be made to bear their share, according to their estimated values of the State tax; and yet it is not to be suspected that anybody would wish to see them compelled to do this.—Dr Curry in National Repository.

AN ARBITRATION.—Mr. William T. Robinson used to relate an amusing anecdote of one of the early Robinsons, who, it appears, had joined the Quaker meeting. Gov. Brinton had placed him on a farm belonging to him, situated on the south end of the island adjacent to Benton's Point, and stocked the same largely with sheep. In a violent snow-storm, such as used to prevail more frequent than of late in New England (though I have known several in my day nearly equally destructive), these sheep, having been left in an exposed position, were driven by the inclement tempest of wind and sleet off the rocks into the sea, where they perished. When Robinson came into the presence of the sheep's master, Governor Brinton, the latter, being again of hasty temper, broke into a towering rage with his tenant, and upbraided him in unmeasured terms for the loss of the sheep through, as he charged, gross neglect. To all the abuse heaped upon him Robinson answered not a word; which submissiveness seemed only to increase Brenton's ire, who at last, in his frenzy, declared that Robinson should pay him for his lost sheep, and bid him choose a man to arbitrate their value, while he chose another, which Brenton did on the spot instanter. It was now Robinson's turn to choose his man. "Friend Brenton," said he, "I know of no one whom I should prefer to trust my interest with than thyself. I think I will choose thee for my man." This was too much for the governor, who, after bursting into an uproarious fit of laughter, told his unmanageable tenant to go back to the farm and he would venture to trust one more flock of sheep to his care.—Providence Journal.

One Sunday morning, when I was glad I heard an excellent minister offer the prayer that God would grant the congregation during that day "intellectual repose," and I am inclined to think that very many of the people actually said, Amen. It may be different in America; but with us there are many congregations that seem to have lost the habit of caring for solid teaching. Describe a thunder-storm, or a conspiracy or a shipwreck; move them to tears by a touching story of human sorrow; give wings to your fancy and carry the people far away into other places where the bright waters murmur softly over their rocky bed, where the foxglove blossoms where the bee hums among the wild thyme and the gorgeous dragon-fly hovers over the fern, and they think you one of "the finest preachers" in the country, though they are no wiser when the sermon ends than when it began. God forbid that I should deprecate the music of graceful speech, or the beauty and pomp of an imaginative eloquence! But for a nation's life, corn-fields and rich pastures are more precious than the romantic beauty of lonely lakes, or the stern sublimity of the mountains which rise above them; and that preaching is barren and worthless which has no other object than to excite transient emotion, to stimulate the imagination, or to gratify the fancy.—Dr. Dale.

May I be one of the weakest, provided only, in my weakness, that immortal and better vigor be put forth with greater effect; provided only in my darkness, the light of the divine countenance does but the more brightly shine; for then I shall, at once be the weakest and the most mighty, shall be at once filled and of the most pleading sigil.—Milton.

O Lord, who canst do all things, and always lovest the progress of the soul, increase me in thy grace, that I may accomplish thy words, and perfect my salvation.—Thomas a' Kempis.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. James Gibbons was installed as Roman Catholic Archbishop of Baltimore on last Sunday.

—The next session of the Canadian Parliament is to be asked for an act to incorporate the Presbyterian Church of Canada in connection with the Church of Scotland.

—The distinguished French Protestant, Pressense, says there are three Protestants in the present French ministry—M. Leon Say, M. de Freycinet and M. Waddington.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church is making a good beginning in England. Bishop Gregg recently received five Episcopal ministers in London into the new communion.

—The American Colonization Society received during the past year $12,053; disbursements, $12,639; balance in treasury, January 1, 1878, $1,491. Since the war there have been 3,189 colonized, making a total, since the organization of the society, of 15,022.

—The tomb of Pope Pius the Ninth was provided at a cost of $400. It is said that in his will the Pope requests to be buried outside Rome, at San Lorenzo de Capncelni. The marble slab covering his tomb is sculptured with tiara and skull and crossbones.

—The Bible Christians are a Methodist body found in Canada and Great Britain. The Canadian Conference, recently in session, reported the following statistics: 81 itinerant ministers, 197 lay preachers, 183 churches, with 13 other preaching places, 7,793 church members, 1,334 Sabbath school teachers, and 9,310 scholars. The increase in church membership over last year is 850.

—The Methodists have found a man willing to brave the dangers of the Liberia coast climate and take charge of Monrovia Seminary. The Rev. Royal J. Kellogg, of Bethany, Penn., is the man. They have also appointed a superintendent for the projected Boporo mission in the interior, in the person of the Rev. Melville Y. Bayard, of Glenwood, Ind. The Rev. Joel Ogood has already sailed for Africa, to enter upon the service of this mission.—Independent.

—The regular meeting of the board of managers of the New York Bible Society was held at the Bible House, New York, on Thursday evening, February 1, the vice-president, Mr. Theodore Lemon, in the chair. During January, 3,150 families, residing in the Twelfth, Thirteenth and Eighteenth Wards, were visited and 609 Bibles or Testaments distributed among them by gift or sale. 214 vessels lying in the harbor were supplied with 2,529 Bibles or Testaments in different languages, and 6,613 Bibles or Testaments were distributed among 2,593 emigrants landed at Castle Garden.

—The February number of the Missionary Record, of the Church of Scotland, has two letters from its missionary at Blantyre, in the Shire hills, near Livingstonia, Africa. They state that road-making is going on rapidly, and the station begins to present an appearance of civilization. All the members of the party are in robust health. Meetings are held nightly for the benefit of the natives, about eighty of whom usually attend. The Record states that an ordained minister has been found, Mr. Macdonald, of Pulteneytown, who is willing to go out and become the head of the Blantyre mission, which has been without the services of a minister except Dr. Livingstonia.

—Fisk University has made its first contribution to the evangelization of Africa. The American Missionary Association called for two married men to re-enforce the Mendi mission, and two of the students of Fisk University (Andrew E. Jackson and Albert P. Miller) responded, and very interesting were the ceremonies last week, at Nashville, connected with their departure. These ceremonies included ordination, wedding and farewell services. After the ordination the two young men were married to the young women they had selected for their wives, and in the farewell meeting several ministers and other speakers gave them advice and words of cheer. The missionaries are already on their way to the mission field.

—One of the troubles which Protestant missions in the South Pacific have is the interference of Roman Catholic missionaries, who, not content with winning converts from heathenism are constantly making endeavors to pervert Protestant Christians. But it is interesting to know that many of the converts are so secretly grounded in the faith that they repel all overtures from the Papists. In Samoa recently a public discussion took place between the Roman Catholic priest, with his native assistant, on the one side, and three of the native pastors, laboring in connection with the London Missionary Society, on the other. The result was that the latter succeeded in thoroughly satisfying the elders who were present, who said they considered the matter now settled.

—The sales of ecclesiastical property in Rome by the government have brought enormous sums to the Italian treasury. The sales were begun in 1867 and on the first of October, 1876, 118,553 lots had been sold at auction, producing $102,823,600. The estimate made by the government when the sales began put the gross sum at $79,928,500. This sum has already been exceeded by $22,000,000, and there is yet considerable property to be sold. The official journal, in giving these statistics, says: "There is the added advantage in the improvements that are immediately made, as the property passes into private hands, with an increase of the general wealth. The government has reserved many buildings for its own uses, and every commune and considerable city has shared in the division of such structures as could be turned to account. There are many convents still occupied by the monks, by a temporary privilege, or until it can be seen to what use they can be put. Thirty-two or more of such monastic buildings in and about Naples have been handed over to the public within a short time."

LITTLE MISS CROCUS.

BY G. CLARKSON.

Time folks were getting up—
They're so slow!
I've been awake here,
Hours ago!

Reckon I'll peep out—
Who's afraid?
That dark ain't nothin'
Only shade.

Beds here hug enough
In my bed;
Guess I'll push blankets
Off my head.

My stars what a world!
Ain't it white?
I believe the clouds fell
Down in the night.

I smell something.
My! that's good!
Must be Arbutus
Up in the wood.

If there ain't Snowdrop!
Seeming me
Shan't better stay where
She might to be.

Wonder what brought her
Out so soon?
Spose she thought 'twas
Afternoon?

She'll get her nose nipped
Serve her right
Small children like her
Must keep out of sight.

Wind needn't blow so!
Makes such a din.
Good gracious! Guess I'd Better go in.

Where's my blanket gone?
Cold hurts so!
Poor little Crocus is Freezing up—oh!

Believe I'm an orphan now
Gone to die—
And be an angel
Up in the sky.

From Our Little Friends.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, Miss., Feb. 5, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: Seeing so many letters in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE from little boys and girls, I concluded to write one. Our pastor is Mr. Forsyth. He has not been with us very long, and has not preached but five or six times; but those few times has convinced us that he is a splendid preacher, as well as a very good man. We have a very large Sunday school, and I think it will be larger this year than last. I will close by asking a question and answering one: Ahasuerus was the king who began to reign when he was twelve years old, and reigned fifty-five years. It is found in Second Kings xxi. 1. Where is the longest verse in the Bible found? Hoping to see this printed, I remain, as ever,

Your respectful little friend,

CARRIE WILLING.

TALLAHASSEE, MISS., Feb. 8, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: We have a fine Sabbath school here at Tallahassee, and I am a scholar. My pa is our superintendent. Bro. J. R. Peavy is our preacher. We think him a very good one, and we love him very much. I am a member of the church, and am trying to live right and be a good boy. Now I will answer a question asked of Lucinda Jane Long: Zacchens climbed into a sycamore tree. Now I will ask the little boys and girls some questions: Who preached the first sermon on the resurrection? Who was the mighty hunter of the Lord?

Your little friend,

ROBERT F. LACKEY.

Hares and Easter Eggs.

It would be difficult to explain whence came the notion that "the hares lay the Easter eggs." Queer hares they must be. Indeed, but German children believe it as devoutly as they do that the "Christkind" brings their Christmas presents, or as our own little ones do in Santa Claus. No one knows exactly whence came this myth. Many think it a relic of heathen worship; but a writer named Christoph von Schmid in an interesting story for children, suggests this much prettier origin:

Many hundred years ago a good and noble lady, Duchess Hollindi von Lodenburg at a time when a cruel war was devastating the land, was obliged to fly from her beautiful home in Germany, accompanied only by her two children and one old man-servant.

They found refuge in a small mining village in the mountains, where the simple but contented and happy inhabitants did what they could for their comfort, and placed the best of all they had at the disposal of the wanderers. Nevertheless, their fare was miserable; no meat was ever to be found, seldom fish, and not even an egg; this last for the very good reason that there was not a single hen in the village! These useful domestic fowls, now so common everywhere, were originally brought from the East and had not yet found their way to this secluded place. The people had not even heard of such "strange birds." This troubled the kind duchess, who well knew the great help they are in housekeeping and she determined that the women who had been so kind to her should no longer be without them.

Accordingly, the next time she sent forth her faithful old servant to try and gather news of his master and of the progress of the war, she commissioned him to bring back with him a coop full of fowls. This he did, to the great surprise of the simple natives, and the village children were greatly excited a few weeks later at the appearance of a brood of young chickens. They were so pretty and bright, were covered with such a soft down, were so open-eyed, and could run about after their mother to pick up food the very first day, and were altogether such a contrast to the blind, bald, unfledged, helpless, ugly little birds they sometimes saw in nests in the hedges that they could not find words enough to express their admiration.

The good lady now saved up eggs for some time, then invited all the housewives of the village to a feast, when she set before them eggs cooked in a variety of ways. She then taught them how to prepare them for themselves, and, distributing a number of fowls among them, sent the dames home grateful and happy.

When Easter approached she was anxious to arrange some pleasure for the village children, but had nothing to give them, "not even an apple or a nut," only some eggs; but then, she concluded, was, after all, an appropriate offering, "as an egg is the first gift of the reviving spring." And then it occurred to her to boil them with mosses and roots that would give them a variety of brilliant colors, "as the earth," said she, "has just laid aside her white mantle, and decorated herself with many colors; for the dear God makes the fruit and berries not only good to eat, but also pleasant to look upon," and the children's pleasure would be all the greater.

Accordingly, on Easter Sunday after the church service, all the little ones of about the age of her own met together in a garden, and, when their kind hostess had talked to them awhile, she led them into a small neighboring wood. There she told them to make nests of moss, and advised each to mark well his or her own. All then returned to the garden, where a feast of milk soup with eggs and egg-cakes had been prepared. Afterward they went back to the wood, and found to their great joy in each nest five beautiful colored eggs, and on one of these a short rhyme was written.

The surprise and delight of the little ones when they discovered a nest of the gayly-colored treasures was very great, and one of them exclaimed:

"How wonderful the hens must be that can lay such pretty eggs! How I should like to see them!"

"Oh! no hens could lay such beautiful eggs," answered a little girl. "I think I must have been the little hare that sprang out of the juniper bush when I wanted to build my nest there."

Then all the children laughed together, and said: "The hares lay the colored eggs. Yes, yes! the dear little hares lay the beautiful eggs!" And they repeated it till they began to believe it.

Not long afterward the war ended, and Duke Arno von Lindenburg took his wife and children back to their own palace; but, before leaving, the duchess set apart a sum of money to be expended in giving the village children every Easter a feast of eggs. She instituted the custom also in her own duchy, and by degrees it spread over the whole country, the eggs being considered a symbol of redemption or deliverance from sin.

To this day children living in the country go to the woods just before Easter, and return with their aprons full of twigs and moss, out of which they build nests and houses, each child carefully marking his own with his name. They are then hidden behind stones and bushes in the garden, or, if the weather be cold, in corners, or under furniture in the house. And on Easter morning what an excitement there is to see what the good little hare has brought! Not only real eggs boiled and colored, but sugar ones, too, and often wooden ones, that open like boxes, disclosing, perhaps, a pair of new gloves or a bright ribbon. The even sometimes brings hoops and skipping-ropes, and generally his own effigy in dough or candy is found trying to scamper away behind the nest.—E. E. Corné, in St. Nicholas.

No Dead Elephants.

I should like some naturalist to explain to me why it is that a hunter has never been able to find a dead elephant. Of course, after you bring him down, he is there before you; but show me a man who has ever found the skeleton of an elephant in those vast Singhalese forests, or has come upon the carcass of one that has died a natural death. For ten years I hunted unremittingly, tramping over hundreds of miles into all sorts of solitudes, and I never succeeded in discovering such a curiosity.

Sir Emerson Tennent tells of a gentleman who lived for thirty-six continuous years in the jungle, exploring valleys and tracing roads, during his trigonometrical pursuits, who never once came upon the skeleton or decaying body of an elephant that had died a natural death.

The Singhalese believe that there is some mysterious valley into which these animals hasten when they feel the approach of death, and thus the island contains a vast mausoleum, wherein are entombed all the giants of the forests that have gone on before.

There might be some reason to believe this fanciful theory—for there is no mistake about the extraordinary intelligence of the creatures—if this great cemetery was ever discovered; but its precise location is still unknown, and the conundrum as to what becomes of all the dead elephants is interesting and seemingly insoluble.

This would lead one to believe that there was some peculiarity in the Singhalese climate that dissolved or decomposed the bones. Such might be the fact were it not for the grubbers and ants. There is no climate upon the face of the earth that can destroy them; and so, you see, we are brought back to the same point from which we started.

I desire, with all in the world, to go with the gospel steam, though a little one, for it runs into the ocean of eternal life.

Every day will I bless thee.—Psalms cxlv. 2.

Prayer and Success.

Paul, writing of the liberality of the Macedonians, lets us into the secret of their abounding grace in the statement that they "first gave their ownselves to the Lord." After this it was not strange that their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality. When people give themselves to the Lord everything else goes along with the gift. Nothing can be reserved or kept back if the consecration of the person be complete. The shortness in services rendered, in contributions, only exhibits the fact that we have not done the important thing of first giving our ownselves. Success in all work for God depends largely upon the same condition. The efficiency of the instrument is usually in proportion to its consecration.

Prayer and its connection with success would seem to be governed by the same rule. We gathered, from what we heard and saw of Mr. Muller, that entire devotedness was the prime element in the great achievements of his life. He gave himself to God, first of all, and then the way was clear. He asked nothing for himself beyond such things as God saw were needful in order that he might work for his glory, and his lifelong praying has been directed to the furtherance of the gospel, and the rescue of orphans from want and degradation. The trials and triumphs of his life were ever related to his enterprises undertaken for Christ. He asked only that the good might be done, and that so far as it pleased God he might be used as the means of promoting it. His strength was in this complete self renunciation, and in the humble consciousness that there was nothing of self in all that he undertook.

It is, perhaps, difficult for the Christian to be governed by this principle in secular pursuits, and yet in no other way can he exercise availing prayer, and claim the full application of the divine promises. There were doubtless many who heard Mr. Muller who determined to pray more in reference to their business, and were inspired with the hope that thereby they would mend their fortunes and prosper. This was all very well if they were careful to note that self must be eliminated from their plans, and that the supreme and controlling motive must be the glory of God. They would be willing, no doubt, to give somewhat of their gains to benevolence and religion, while mainly intent on the possession of wealth and its attendant gratifications. But to have Mr. Muller's faith they must also have the single motive that governs him. If they wish for money to build asylums, to spread the Scriptures, to support missionaries, and vow to bestow their gains in this way, they may be able to pray somewhat as he does, and, in their measure, to as much purpose. It is a great comfort to poor people to feel that God cares for them, and that it is their privilege to ask of God, and to receive from him what is needful. But have they first given their ownselves to the Lord? Do they ask as the Lord's servants, who are more intent upon glorifying him than they are to be exempt from poverty and suffering? The prosperity of selfish and worldly men does not come by prayer. That which comes by prayer is success in doing good, and in such temporal prosperity as is beforehand devoted to this end.

In strictly religious work, as in the ministry, there are temptations to draw us away from the great condition of unwavering faith. Faith has its conditions, and the main one is conscious devotedness to Christ. Governed by this principle, the preacher would accept poverty and obscurity, and even apparent failure, if these would better promote the Father's glory. He cannot be strong in faith, nor can he prevail with God in prayer, so long as there is any of the leaven of self in him. He may accomplish something, sometimes enough to satisfy, in kind and degree the meagerness and selfishness of his own nature, but he cannot become largely and adequately useful. Prayer will be restrained and faith weakened if the consecration is not complete. It is not too much to say that we have a right to trust if we are wholly the Lord's, and it is certain that trust, up to the full measure of spiritual power and comfort, is impossible if we are not. Those engaged in all departments of church work should not forget that their success depends upon the blessing of God, and that to prevail with him they must be wholly devoted to Christ. There is occasion for self examination at this point. Business and domestic duties may necessarily occupy the larger part of the Christian's time, but to be greatly useful Christ must altogether possess his heart. Without prayer there can be no power, and prevailing prayer is conditioned upon such faith as only the consecrated soul can exercise.

But will the needed money for missions, churches and Sunday schools, and other religious enterprises, come in answer to prayer? How few people have the capital qualification for prayer—having first given their ownselves to the Lord? Their praying is not in accord with their doing. Paul asked the Lord for money, and he also asked the people for it. Mr. Muller asks no one for money except the Lord. This was the more striking and wonderful at first, but he mentions that contribution-boxes were hung up in his orphan-houses, and now the institution speaks for itself, and pleads its own cause before the Christian world. What we would say in this connection is that there is not enough prayer behind our appeals for money. We should at least ask God for it before we ask the people, and realize that our success in raising money for the church depends much upon our faith in God. We should not only pray that the baptism of the Holy Spirit may rest upon our missions, but we should ask God for the funds needed to carry them on. We lay too much stress on the appeals, the talking, writing, advertising, and too little on prayer. Instead of honoring God by asking and trusting him, we too often grieve the Holy Spirit by the motives we present, and by the expedients we adopt. One reason why there is so little faith and prayer connected with our religious finances is that we have accustomed ourselves to depend upon measures rather than upon God. Stewards, agents, reports, anniversaries and addresses are not to be thrown aside, but the churches must learn to look directly to God for what they need.

As to the material part, we may not hope to build colleges, to extend missions, or to support the gospel without prayer. Mr. Muller's rule is a good one: To keep out of debt, and when the last penny is gone, pray as for life. The prayers of the church have not been much directed in this way, and our faith in this sort is yet only in the germ. It is not as a grain of mustard seed. Among the lessons we get out of Mr. Muller are these: Entire devotedness to Christ as the condition of his wonderful faith; and faith and prayer specially directed to God for the means to carry on his work. He is a learned man, a man of fine administrative ability, but, above all, he is a consecrated man, who can and does ask of God what may be for the divine glory. We verily believe that the chief cause of our failure in raising money for religious purposes lies in the fact that we do not enough ask directly of God. Of expedients and appeals and agencies we have more than enough, but we need more prayer and more faith in God.

Lost Opportunities.

This subject is as old as the experience of man, yet is as reproductive of its lessons of wisdom as man of his own race. No one denies the general truth that an opportunity once lost seldom recurs. Esau, who sold his birthright, and "when he would have inherited the blessing found no place for repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears," is not alone in either his character or experience. He thought the birthright a trifling matter, though he estimated the blessing rightly. Many now-a-days have a full appreciation of the value of greatness or glory or happiness, yet they despise the opportunity; so that when they would be great or glorious or happy they cannot, though they seek it carefully with tears.

The Bible presents us with many striking illustrations of the deplorable consequences of lost opportunity. Prominent among these is the hesitation, and then the refusal, of the people of Israel to go up immediately and possess the land of Canaan. In this case we are led to note several very striking facts, which are not generally sufficiently brought out. One of these facts is that the timorous spies, who influenced the people to mutiny, were the first to suffer the consequences of that mutiny. They died of a pestilence before the Lord. A second fact in regard to the rejection of this opportunity is that the people were ready to reject, along with it, all that had previously been gained. They began to nominate a captain to lead them back into bondage. This displayed that anomaly so frequently developed in human character: that, while it seeks to overthrow just and beneficent authority, would commit itself, bound hand and foot, to the odious tyranny of an insatiate despotism. They gratuitously charged that Power which had thus far so wonderfully preserved and blessed them, with the most atrocious of designs, and voluntarily offered to remand themselves to one who had for at least three centuries given evidence of not only no disposition to relent, but, on the contrary, of ever growing cruelty. They would throw away what they had gained, with every reason to believe that the former master would only be the more vindictive in consequence of their revolt, which had well-nigh proved successful. Another fact in this case is the attempt to regain the lost opportunity when it was clearly past. There are questions which we can reconsider, but the reconsideration of a lost opportunity cannot restore it to us. The apple which has fallen from the stem will not grow upon it again. The best we can do is to plant the seed of the apple, and wait till a tree will grow and bear fruit. We cannot make the tree grow out of season. Cut it down in autumn, and you must wait till spring for it to sprout, if even then. This attempt to restore the opportunity was productive of more immediate disaster. An unfortunate battle was fought. Rout, ruin, humiliation and mourning followed. The lamentations of the people, although they assumed that holy garb of widows bewailing husbands, and mothers and fathers weeping for sons, and sisters for brothers, and a nation deploring its departed glory, was not such as to cause God to relent; for it manifested no contrition to him; it gave no evidence of repentance for the atrocious crimes of open rebellion and willful murder. "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself." "Weep not for the slain in battle, but mourn for thy sins."

One opportunity lost involves the repetition of a thousand lessons in affliction and self-denial, which might be averted in our after-life if we would seize the moment ere it flies. The lost opportunity compels us to review the ground passed over and to learn again the principles that are to govern life, with innumerable cordialries and scholia which have been added in consequence of the mistake we made. The people of Israel had to retrace their steps. Horeb and Sinai must thunder again, lightnings must flash athwart the plain, and clouds throw their shadows over a desert where Heaven allowed no rain-drops to fall. Laws must again be enacted and enforced; weary marches made; hunger, heat and thirst endured; fiery serpents must crawl or fly and hiss and sting through the camp; war must rage and pestilence blight; a river of tears and blood, whose turbulent waves should resound in groans, must flow and sink in sands that should not respond with the gratitude of a single flower to relieve the waste.

One opportunity lost opens the way for the loss of others. He who has gone a mile in the wrong direction is more than two miles behind him who has gone a mile in the right direction. The discouragement and the doubts that trouble him are worrying and wasting to his strength. The man who has fallen or taken a false step is the more in danger. With Moses as the chief ruler and Joshua as the general of the armies of Israel, what the possibilities of a reign of thirty-seven years in Canaan might have been can only be conjectured. The leadership of Joshua was glorious; but how much more splendid that of both none can tell. Moses himself seems to have realized these possibilities when he exclaims: "How should one chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight?"

These reflections are specially applicable to the young. Three and a half years might have been the term of the wanderings of Israel had it not been for this lost opportunity. So many a Christian's life has been marred by the neglect of early opportunity. Three years of early life improved are worth any fifteen in later life—perhaps we may say that they will indicate for weal or woe the destinies of forty. Many a boy at school, may be a young man in business, has made his fortune or ruin in three years. He has there reached a point where he must decide boldly, yet calmly; but want of moral nerve, or want of energy and diligence have lost to him forever the golden moment. Life to them afterward is a scene of sloth and wreck that even they cannot look at it when past without a shudder of horror and remorse. How many are saying today: "I let slip the precious season!" How many are the funerals that we attend, where it is sadly spoken in an undertone: "He had splendid opportunities once!" Alas! let us not read the lying epitaph. The heart has written a truer history in the shambling gait, the hollow laugh and hopeless stolidity of faces that in age might have shone like that of Moses descending from the mount. These write a language in our footprints, and wake a spirit of sepulchral voice in the air that echoes the sound of our feeble wandering steps to a deathless wail for the lost opportunity.

Prospect of Missions.

Rev. E. R Hendrix, writing in the St. Louis Christian Advocate under the heading of "Ninety Years Hence" says:

In the Advocate of March 20 occurs this paragraph:

"Thirty seven years ago there were three Protestant Christians in the vast empire of China. Now there are about 13,000. At the present rate of progress the number doubles itself every six years."

At this rate, by the close of this century or the beginning of the next—say, in 1902, A. D.—there will be 208,000 Protestant Christians in China and by 1968 the number will have reached 425,984,000 or about the entire population of the empire.

It is reasonable to suppose that the rate of increase will be yet larger, owing to the enlarged faith and contributions in Christian lands, in which event China may be redeemed by the middle of the next century. Perhaps our children in some instances may live to see China a Christian nation and our grandchildren may witness the conversion of the world.

Figures and facts are the best answer to those who decry foreign missions.

The 13,000 Protestant Christians in China are persons who are recognized as fit for church membership and are admitted to the sacraments. The nominal Christian population is far vaster. In the immediate vicinity of Canton alone, Dr. Hopper, a veteran missionary of much experience, assured us there were not less than 20,000 Chinese convinced of the truth of Christianity, and more or less regular in their attendance at the Christian chapels. China, at the present rate of increase of light, may become a nominally Christian nation like ourselves long before the middle of the next century. But we are concerned for the vitality of the faith of these converts from heathenism and we confine ourselves accordingly to the lower numbers, thus delaying the full consummation.

We venture the belief that the average piety of communicants in heathen lands is as great as that of the Ephesian, Corinthian and Philippian Christians among whom the apostle Paul labored, weaning them from the same vile idolatry to love the living God. When it is remembered that every system of idolatry is thoroughly corrupting to morals (despite the superficial nonsense of some semi-infidels of our day, who, though they are nominally in Christian churches, profess to regard Buddhism as surpassing Christianity in pure morals, and thus outdid their own shame in not immediately becoming Buddhists) it will be seen that there must be quite a process of education now as in Paul's day, to weed out pagan notions and practices. We must remember that most heathens are polygamists, or hold very loose notions about marriage, and are proverbially untruthful. Lust and falsehood are almost universal. Moreover, we have yet to meet a native officer in any heathen land who was supposed incapable of a bribe. A low moral tone prevails everywhere. Conscience itself is debauched, and lust and falsehood are often matters of religion. The Christian religion, wherever it is introduced, at once makes vice less respectable, educates the public conscience and improves the public morals. Its own converts are faithfully taught all the duties of sobriety, purity, truthfulness and honesty, and many of them for conscientiousness will compare with communicants in our best American churches.

We are almost startled as we read the heading of our article: "Ninety Years Hence." But why not? There are no greater difficulties to be overcome than have already been overcome. The success of Christianity from the beginning has always been among the heathen. Not the Jews, but the Gentiles, have ever constituted the great body of its converts since the days of the apostles. Its great inroads in heathen Greece, Rome, Asia Minor, Cyprus and northern Africa are just such as are now being made in Japan, China, India and Turkey.

What the church needs is faith and a pure life. If she had continued to possess both she would have never lost her earlier conquests. Having these, there is no reason why a century may not witness the conversion of the world. We have closely observed for the past ten years the missionary work of the church, and we give it as our experience that men actively concerned for the salvation of their fellow-men at home are invariably in sympathy with our foreign work. Those who give most for home missions always give most for sending the gospel to the heathen. We have yet failed to meet a single exception to this rule.

Affairs in South Africa.

We have received, says the New York Observer, a long and very interesting letter from our correspondent at Natal, South Africa, Rev Josiah Tyler. It relates chiefly to a missionary expedition into the interior, his account of which we are obliged to defer until next week. We insert an extract from his letter relating to political affairs in Natal:

"Affairs on the borders of this colony have for some time looked ominous. The Zulus in Zululand proper, at all times a restless tribe of barbarians, have evidently been contemplating whether it is worth while to risk a collision with the English now occupying the Transvaal, which has lately become a British possession. Cetywayo, the Zulu King, has done much to provoke war, and whether he will submit to the ultimatum in regard to a boundary question, just sent to him by Sir Theophilus Shepstone, the administrator of the Transvaal government, remains to be seen. Had not the English taken that territory from the Dutch farmers just at the time they did, there is no doubt it would now be convulsed in war. The Zulu army is well furnished with firearms, and designed about this time to wreak their vengeance on their old enemies—the Boers. We sincerely hope the sanguinary reign of his sable Zulu majesty will come to an end without a collision with the English, either in the Transvaal or in Natal. There is little hope that the cause of missions or education will advance in Zululand until it possesses a less despotic government.

"At this political juncture a strange movement has come to light, which is provoking almost universal indignation among the Europeans in the colony. It is that of the famous heterodox Bishop Colenso, inducing the Zulu King to appoint two diplomatic agents in Natal (one his own son) with orders that all his dispatches to the Lieutenant Governor go through these agents and pass on to the Queen. The Governor is, of course, indignant at this interference, and refuses to give the messengers from Zululand an audience. This is not the first time Dr. Colenso has incurred the displeasure of his fellow-colonists by meddling with politics. We can hardly believe that Lord Carnarvon, the home secretary for the South African colonies, will approve of what the Bishop is now doing."

Recruits.

At a certain university, where candidates for the ministry received tuition free, the wisest member of the faculty always asked, before voting for the admission of any theologue: "Has he good sense?" That professor had seen the danger of a dunce charged with the doctrines of the church and turned loose to "expound the same." It behooves those who have the instruction and oversight of persons studying for "holy orders" to guard well the door of the ministry. The class-room and daily contact ought to probe the heart and head of every student for the sacred office. If the student is dull when he comes and dull when he leaves, is he the man "rightly dividing the word?" If a little learning is a dangerous thing even in the hands of a man of parts, how much more to be dreaded are these edged tools in the possession of an imbecile. We are but plucking the jackdaw at our own expense for our own undoing. We do not know any Conference in sore need of robust incapacity girt around with a zone of theological shavings.

There is a call for care in another direction. The world is full of smart fellows. The ministry is troubled with its share of them. There is not a department of life so inviting to an ambitious and nimble youth as the modern ministry. It is the quickest and easiest road to notoriety, and is not without compensation. There are too many churches now mortgaged in the cities. They are not half filled; there is a "struggle for existence;" the clamor for "light men" and lively ones is heard in the vestibules of the Conferences. The demand tends to breed a supply.

The Methodist Church cannot change its diet without death. It has fed on manna from heaven—angels' food. Take away from it the "marrow and fatness" of the gospel and serve it with sweetmeats, and the robust giant will dwindle to a lean dyspeptic.

This is enough now. "Think on these things."—Richmond Christian Advocate.

The popular clamor for short sermons, says the Methodist Recorder, is kept up by a restless class of young persons who are smarter than their parents and pastors. They get the fidgets if a sermon reaches beyond fifteen or twenty minutes. And yet these same goslings of both genders, when they come together in a social party or meet in a parlor, will waste solid hours in the stupidest commonplaces. Their talk does not rise to the dignity of conversation. It is twaddle. It is nonsense from first to last; it is worse than waste of time, of life, of everything. But these gigs presume to know how long a minister should preach! And here and there the kind-souled pastors accommodate their sermons to the gosling taste. Let the pulpit have time to discuss the topics it undertakes; and let the discussion be so fresh, vigorous and attractive as to arrest attention from all who have heart and brain to understand; for a goose in the pulpit is worse than a gosling in the pew.

Prayer is the slender nerve that moves Omnipotence.

LESSONS FROM GOD'S BEING OUR FATHER.—We should, upon all exigencies, address ourselves to God not with the fear of slaves, nor the suspicion of strangers, but with the disposition of heart suitable to children, with reverent love and humble confidence. Further, if God be the Father of all things, they are all thence in some sort our brethren, and so may claim from us a fraternal affection and demeanor answerable thereto. Shall we, then, scorn, abuse, trample, or tyrannize over any of them? If we are all branches from one stock, or streams issuing from the same source of divine benevolence, if we are members of one family, we are surely obliged to a universal benevolence—to be kind and compassionate, hopeful and beneficial to all, so far as our capacity reacheth. The meanest of God's creatures is not to be despised or misused by us, since it is the work of his hands and the object of his kindness. But especially toward those who in a more peculiar and excellent sense are entitled the sons of our Father, we learn hence our respective duties of charity and good will toward each other; which if we do not maintain, we thereby are first unduteful and unkind to God, our common Father, and then even to ourselves. We hate and harm both God's relation and our own by hating or harming any man whatever, especially any good man, any Christian brother, who upon so many better and higher accounts standeth related to God and to ourselves.—Barrow.

WHY THE POPES CHANGE THEIR NAMES.—It is a fact generally known that monks and nuns on assuming their vows, and popes on ascending the pontifical throne, usually change their names. The reason of this change in the case of the popes is a superstitious belief that unless this is done the new pontiff will not live long. The custom has prevailed since it was inaugurated in 956 by Octavian Conti, who assumed the name and title of John the Twelfth. Julius Medici would have made a breach had he been permitted, but his friends prevailed upon him to take the name of Clement, he being the seventh Pope to bear that name. Thirty-two years later, in 1555, Marcellus Servius was elected and insisted upon retaining his own name. As Marcellus the Second, therefore, he ascended the throne on the seventh of April. He was a young man and in robust health, and yet he lived but twenty-one days after his elevation. Since that time no Pope has ventured to offend against the tradition. It is a little singular that while the name of John has been a favorite one, no less than twenty-one popes having chosen it, none have chosen it since the death of John the Twenty-second, in 1418. The first Pope bearing the name of Pius took the position in 142 and the name did not reappear after his death till 1458.

Last Sunday, says the Independent of March 28, Messrs. Moody and Sankey began revival meetings in New Haven, in the new tabernacle erected for the purpose. Though the weather was unfavorable, and the tabernacle large enough to hold 5,000 people, crowds were turned away, unable to gain admission. Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins, who have been following Moody's work at Hartford, opened last Sunday a series of meetings in Middletown. Mrs. Maggie Van Cott has closed a three weeks' campaign in Buffalo. She reports 60 converts.

We see from Mr. Talmage's report of his visit to New Orleans that he enjoyed himself hugely while in the Crescent City, and that he carried away with him the most favorable and pleasing impressions of our climate and people. We were away on District duty when he was here, and so missed seeing or hearing him. His preaching, however, proved very attractive and popular in this region, and his lecture on "The Bright Side of Things" was received with a perfect enthusiasm. Talmage and Muller—what a contrast! and, yet both remarkable in their several ways. "Having gifts differing." Such is the order in nature, in mind, in temperament and in the ministry. And it is well. Let every man be himself, so it is his better self, and under the guidance of the Spirit of life and love.

Rev. George Muller preached at the St. Charles Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church South on Wednesday night, March 27. He left New Orleans on Saturday last, March 30, for St. Louis, going by the river. His visit here has been very much enjoyed by Mrs. Muller and himself. Mr. Muller's preaching has been highly appreciated by the churches here, and in leaving he carries with him the esteem and prayers of the Christian people of our city.

The European complications are still in a precarious way. At this writing the hopeful think there is a little light. Evidently England is preparing for war, and Russia is strengthening her hold on Turkey. While the prospects of war between England and Russia are threatening, there are yet some chances for peace.

This is the second week of protracted services at the Carondelet Street church of this city. The pastor, Rev. John Mathews, reports most encouraging meetings—about twenty conversions, and at the service on Tuesday night thirty persons were at the altar as seekers.

He who is not better for his religious knowledge will assuredly be the worse for it.

Women's Missionary Societies.

We heartily indorse the following excellent editorial from the Southern Christian Advocate, and commend it to the thoughtful attention of the churches:

We witnessed with great satisfaction the inauguration of a movement designed to enlist the female members of our church in active missionary efforts, and we hail with devout thankfulness its gradual spread and the measure of success that thus far has attended it. Among the various matters of vital moment that are to claim the consideration of the approaching General Conference the organization of this important movement and its formal incorporation into the organic interest of the church, is entitled to a prominent place. In other churches, notably in the Methodist Episcopal Church, the women are doing a noble work in it is determined of Christian effort, and the fruits of their labors and sacrifices constitute a distinctly appreciable feature in the missionary operations of their denomination. Among us comparatively little has been accomplished as yet; but the work has been inaugurated, hopefully inaugurated, and its growth, since its inception a comparatively recent beginning, gives promise of abundant promise that it is to prove inestimably beneficent to the church at home, and carry untold blessings to the destitute abroad. Let the supreme council of the church vouchsafe its sacred encouragement to this movement among its female members, in its incipiency; let it provide effective organization that shall secure its independent, the imprimatur of its official recognition as an important arm of service in carrying its missionary enterprises, and it will not be long before South Methodism, no longer a laggard, will keep step with her denominational sisters in the forward march of the world's conquest.

We find just this movement, for several reasons: First, the field for Christian effort that it furnishes to the female members of the church has long been a culpable fact throughout our borders. Acting in an inviolable law of spiritual life, within whose domain women, no less than man, works out probation; and in proportion to fidelity with which she fills up the measure of her opportunities for service to the Master does she realize the fruit of religion and fulfill the conditions of spiritual growth. Hitherto the opportunities for organized female effort, in the work of extending the gospel, have not been such as to call forth and utilize the power resident in the women of the church for lengthening the cords and strengthening the stakes of Zion, and wonderfully accelerating the advance of the kingdom of our Lord. In the organization we are commending to the adoption and patronage of our female readers, and to the management and fostering care of the General Conference, provides the opportunities which may be brought within the reach of every one of them, of such self-denial, sacrifice and service as will send a blessing through this portion of our membership to the extreme of a higher, holier, more consecrated life. Let the pioneers of this movement in every Methodist community zealously prosecute the noble work upon which they have entered; with the aim of associating with them, if possible, every available member of the church, old and young and a means of grace will be placed within reach of all, whose inestimable value will speedily be realized by each, while the aggregate development of spirituality and force will promptly register itself, upon the interest and enterprise of the church. When the mothers and sisters have imbibed the enthusiasm which an intelligent appreciation of the importance of missionary work, and personal participation in it are sure to inspire, it will not be long before apathy or opposition of fathers and sons will give place to hearty co-operation, and the church will be free from the blemish and reproach of indifference or antagonism to missions among its members. The result will be enlarged, though unostentatious gifts; but the success of this movement will contribute vastly more directly to the invigoration and growth of our now languishing missions, both in the better support of the present agents of those fields, and the enlargement of the work by calling for sending them reinforcements from time to time. It is impossible to forecast the ultimate results of these societies for sustaining mission work when they shall become thoroughly organized, and cover, like a network, the territory occupied by the home church. Ingeniously and industry of women are adequate to the accomplishment of any possible object that other affections; and when these faculties are taxed by a burning zeal for the success of Christ's cause, Southern Methodist women will find ways and means for circumventing the embarrassments of poverty, and bringing the treasury of the church streams of benificence as it has hitherto known. Items of self-denial, the abandonment of some luxuries indulgences, the consecration of labor, portions of the product of pen or needle, the barn-yard fowl, cast off clothing, and numerous other seemingly insignificant sources of revenue, which without a murmur and worthy object in mind would be wasted as worthless, all these methods of spinning money for the Lord's treasury will add under contribution, and confluent rills from numerous sources, swelling into a stream which will sweep away our reproach, will also widen and glorify many a desert place that now famishes for the water of life. May God send upon the church a baptism of missionary power and zeal, and speed the time when every charge in Southern Methodism shall have as part of its working machinery a Women's Missionary Society, with every female member enlisted in its ranks!

Things as into strains that he bring us to our knees.—Hawthorne.

Books and Periodicals.

THE DANITES AND OTHER CHOICE SELECTIONS FROM THE WRITINGS OF JOAQUIN MILLER. Edited by A. V. D. Honeyman. New York: The American News Company, 1878.

As the title indicates, the work is composed of selections. The admirers of Joaquin Miller will find here probably the best of all he has written. The volume is a 12mo of 160 pages, in ornate binding, and good type and paper. Price, $1 25.

—The new Rocky Mountain Tourist, just from the press, is indeed an artistic gem. There are in this work not less than sixteen of Thomas Moran's exquisite drawings, and among them his famous reproduction of the Mount of the Holy Cross. Of Moran's other matchless drawings are those of Grand, Glen, Marble Knob and Boulder Canons, Twin Lakes, Tennalli Mountain, etc. The engravings are for the most part large, the full quarto pages of the Tourist enabling the showing to the finest advantage of plates seven by ten inches. The book comprises sixty-four pages, exclusive of the cover, and printed as it is, upon superized, calendered paper of the richest finish, the effect throughout is superb. While a very model of typographical beauty, the Tourist is none the less practical in its range of information, time, distances, railroad and stage fares, hotel and livery rates being noted with uniform accuracy. Specimen copy may be had with cost, by writing to W. F. White, Topeka, Kan.

—The American Agriculturist for April embodies its usual fifty engravings illustrating animals, plants, buildings, labor saving contrivances, etc.; Work for the Month Laid Out in Detail, with Practical Suggestions; Exposition Humbug Exposures; A $1 000 House; Livery Stable and Carriage-House Plans; Among the Farmers, by One of Them; Farm-Crop Talks, No. II; Goat-Raising for Profit; Root and Fodder Crops; Gardening, Chapters; Plant One Grape-Vine; Sundry Farm Appliances, illustrated; Boys' and Girls' Columns; Many House Hints; Using the Microscope, with interesting illustrations and a great variety of condensed useful articles and items. Price, 15 cents; $1 60 a year. Orange Judd Company, publishers, New York.

—Sunday Afternoon is a new monthly magazine for the household, published at Springfield, Mass. Price, $3 a year. Judging from the only copy we have received—the April number—it is a periodical of merit, ably conducted, and filled with original articles by some of the most gifted and popular writers of the country. The topics treated are not all suited to Sunday reading, and hence we do not altogether like the title but many of them are moral and religious, and all of them such as to entertain and interest the intelligent reader.

—Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine for March, American edition—Leonard Scott Publishing Company, New York—has the following articles: Mine Ie Thine, part 9; The North American Fisheries and the Halifax Commission; New Books; Lessing—His Life and Writings; Charles Bianconi—A Biography; North Italian Folks; Marmorne, the City of Sunshine, A Novel; French High Life, No. 2; The Influence of Woman; "Daily Bread;" The Storm in the East, No. II; Retrospective; England and Russia.

—Wide Awake for April is a marvel of beauty in its numerous and elegant illustrations, and in the number of its very instructive and entertaining articles. Wide Awake is not excelled by any magazine for the young that we are acquainted with.

—The Political Economy of Higher and Technical Education is the title of an address delivered at Bowling Green Ky., August 7, 1876, by Howard A. M. Henderson, D. D. It is a thoughtful and instructive address.

The Sanitarian for April is filled with useful and instructive articles. A. N. Bell, M. D., publisher, New York.

—On Thursday, March 21, brethren at Collierville, Tenn.—J. H. McFerrin, Esq., by telegraph, and Albert Suggs, Esq., by mail—sent us, says the Western Methodist, the very sad news of the death of the Rev. W. T. Plummer, of the Memphis Conference, and president of Bellevue Female College at Collierville. After a few days' illness of pneumonia Dr. Plummer died at his college home, in the midst of his beloved family, pupils and friends, at five o'clock in the morning of March 21—died peacefully and triumphantly, in full view of the heavenly inheritance. Unexpected as was his departure, our dear friend and brother was all ready for the messenger.

The Raleigh Christian Advocate has lately come out in a new dress—a very handsome dress, and in these hard times, too!—May our excellent co-laborer truly prosper more and more.

Mr. Anderson has been released from prison, and we have probably seen the end of the Louisiana Returning Board trials.

JENKINS' ANNIHILATOR.—An advertisement of this medicine will be seen in our paper today. For rheumatic complaints it has been proven very efficacious in a number of cases which have come under the notice. Mr. Jenkins, the discoverer of the medicine, is well known to a large number of our readers as a reliable man, and one who has devoted much study to rheumatism and its kindred diseases. The price of the medicine has been reduced to $1 per bottle. Those suffering from any of the complaints enumerated in the advertisement should send on for circulars to the proprietors, and they will gain much information as to the nature of the diseases.

MADAME ROSA REYNOIR, No. 9 Chartres street, having just returned from New York with a choice selection of the latest styles in bonnets, hats and millinery goods, invites the personal attention of the ladies of the Crescent City to her opening, on Monday, the eighth instant, when a skilful corps of assistants will be in readiness to attend to all. Go early and have the first choice. Her prices are moderate enough to suit the pressure of our present times.

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD.—Messrs. E. F. Stockmeyer & Co. have an advertisement in this issue which will be of interest to any of those contemplating visiting Europe this summer. The excursion rates to the Paris Expositions are remarkably low, and as the steamers are all first-class and the accommodations excellent, a better line could not be selected. All necessary information can be obtained at the office of the agents.

MRS. F. R. HARDON, No. 29 Chartres street, has a fine assortment of French bonnets and hats, selected expressly for the spring costumes. The taste of the belles of New Orleans in bonnets and hats is proverbial for excellence in style and material, and Mrs. Hardon has been catering to the fashion and vanity of New Orleans' long enough to know just what suits. A visit will convince you.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found, so thoroughly a first class house, having reduced its rates to $1 and $1 50 per day.

MILLINERY.—Mme. Marie Quentin will have an opening of her new spring stock on the eighth of April, and would be pleased to have her friends and ladies generally to call and inspect the new fashions in French hats, bonnets, etc. This establishment is one of the most elegant in the upper portion of the city, and is most attractive to visitors.

ROOTS AND SHOES.—M. Andrieu, whose card is on this page, has had the pleasure with 50 for some years and we have always found regard to be satisfied with him in every respect. His agreements with us have always been carried out faithfully, and we can recommend him to our friends.

MR. FRANK SHARP will pay attention to storing and selling furniture for parties at reasonable rates. He has had much experience in this business, and those interested should call on or make arrangements with him. His advertisement is on this page.

WE REFER parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Dudley Coleman & Bro., No. 12 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

PHOTOGRAPHS.—W. W. Washburn, corner Canal street and Exchange alley, has one of the largest collections in the United States in the country. What better evidence of the result of your sitting before a camera could be desired?

FOR LADIES ONLY.—Ladies can make plenty of money by soliciting for Madame Griswold's skirt supporting corset. This lady stands well in New York city. Address 21 East Sixteenth Street.

READ carefully the advertisement of H. J. West, 107 Magazine street. All kinds of plantation hardware, agricultural implements, steam engines, guns, etc., always on hand. Give him a call.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA.—Remember that for all Affections of the THROAT AND LUNGS Lapice's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm is the sole remedy, combining efficiency of action with a most palatable savor. Give it a trial. Price, $1. Sold at all well assorted drug stores, and by the proprietor, 24 and 26 Elysian Fields street. Monthly depot—DuBose & Co., 20 Water St., St. Louis depot—Richardson & Co., 709 N. Main St. 8p

BUSINESS NOTICES.

THE BEST PROOF for the fact that Dr. F. Wilhoft's Anti-Bromide, or Bromide of Ammonia Tonic, is the most reliable Chill Tonic in the world, we find in the statement that Finlay & Thompson, the large wholesale druggists in New Orleans, guarantee that it cures Chills and Fever in every instance and that it does not contain any Quinine, Arsenic, Strychnine or any other poisonous drug. For sale by all Druggists.

A VALUABLE DISCOVERY.—Dr. C. W. Benson, a practicing physician, at 106 North Eutaw street, Baltimore, Md. (who has paid much attention to nervous diseases,) has discovered that extract of celery and chamomile, combined in certain proportion, invariably cures the dyspepsia, other billions, dyspeptic, nervous or sick headache, neuralgia and nervousness. This is a triumph in medical theodicy, and sufferers all over the country are ordering by mail. He prepares it in pills at 50 cents per box. The Doctor is largely known and highly respected in Baltimore.—Episcopal Methodist.

Those Pills can be ordered through any Druggist, or sent, postage free.

POZZINI'S MEDIATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not roughen the skin, coat plaster, or leave black spots in the pores. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. It drives all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box; sold by druggists, and at depot, 167 North Sixth street, St. Louis (Dodell Hotel.)

BUSINESS NOTICES.

FEMALES who have languished for years in helpless weakness and despondency recuperate with great rapidity under the invigorating influence of DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC. For sale by all druggists.

IN numberless instances constitutions greatly impaired, and apparently ruined by a long residence in a bilious climate, have been entirely restored by the continued and efficient use of DR. HARTER'S ELIXIR OF WILD CHERRY. For sale by all druggists.

GROWING ASPARAGUS.

D. K. Youngs gives the American Garden the following plan pursued in growing this crop for the New York market in the famous Oyster Bay district, and his views as to varieties:

For garden culture the rows should be at least two feet apart; the plant fifteen inches apart in the row. For field culture the rows should be at least four feet apart, the plants twenty inches apart in the row. At this distance the crowns will soon meet in the row, and after twelve or fourteen years' growth there will scarcely be any space left between the rows. Plant deep—six or seven inches—in a light sandy soil, to insure uniformly large shoots. Even then there will necessarily be many small ones. If planted only three inches deep they will become very small after three or four years, and "small by degrees, and beautifully less" every year thereafter.

Always plant in the spring. The next spring after planting cut the shoots as they appear during four weeks; and each succeeding spring cut them for six or seven weeks. By so doing the plants produce shoots better in size and quality than when allowed to pass a year or two without cutting.

This also prevents the plants producing heavy crops of seeds, which exhaust them more than anything else, except being overrun with weeds.

Three varieties are now grown, although I formerly thought there were but two. These varieties are distinguished by their color—brownish green, green and a very light green. The first is the most productive though not as large as the second. Conover's Colossal is as good as and exactly like all others that I have raised—without a shade of difference. After all the noise made, it is provoking that it did not prove just a little better than the other sorts. It has taught me the good lesson not to discard old and well-tried varieties for more pretentious and well bepuffed novelties.

LIQUID MANURE.

It is generally believed that no system of enriching land for small gardens, with a view to perfection of crops, is so truly economical and so easily available as that of liquid manure. We occasionally hear of a gardener, or an amateur fruit-grower who has practiced enriching the crop by use of liquid manure, but it is not a common practice so to enrich our gardens and lawns, however often the advocacy of the practice has been written. The writer practiced the sprinkling of a lawn in a dry season with weak liquid manure-water, and in the greatest heat and drouth has kept it fresh and green. In the management of pot plants no course of supplying food equals that of the judicious use of liquid measure. There are in almost every family waste liquids which usually go into a sewer, drains, or possibly upon the land where they are of no avail, but are saved by being conducted to a tank. Along with the wash-waters of the house, would enrich an entire garden for vegetables and fruits, flower borders, etc., and the whole, if the wash be applied regularly, and at night after sunset, in moderate quantities would prevent the driest weather or midsummer from checking vegetation. If an unpleasant odor comes from the tank, a little plaster (gypsum) sprinkled in and around the tank would keep it sweet and clean. Again, the use of liquid manure need never delay planting because of manure not being on hand, but planting could proceed and the application of manure be made at leisure.—American Rural Home.

MULCHING.—A mulch to the plant is as a shelter to the cow in winter. The latter will fill the pail and gather flesh during the summer; but if she is turned out in the storms and exposed to the blasts of winter she will be little able to enter upon the important duties of her office in the spring. So with the roses—fresh, vigorous when the "last rose of summer" and the last leaf of autumn have "faded and gone," should be the time to a mulching of coarse leaves, straw or litter. Raspberry canes, strawberries, vines and other small fruits should be likewise treated. Nature when left alone, affords this protection during winter by the growth of grass or the drift of leaves, but proper cultivation will, of course, prevent the natural process, and the plant will look to man to foster plant the gardener. Neither coal ashes to be applied than stable manure in which is a quantity of straw. The latter will be rotted by spring, and the whole ready to spread.

PRESSED FERNS FOR WINTER DECORATION.—Go to the fern haunts and take along with you large books in which to press the fronds. Midsummer is the best season, but all along after good sportsmen can be found. Lay them carefully between the leaves, and carry them home and place the books under heavy weights. It may be necessary to change the fronds to fresh leaves or books every few days, so that they will not turn brown from their own moisture though if the weather is dry many will cure well without change. When perfectly dry pack in boxes or books away from the light.

It is better that joy should be spread over all the day in the form of strength than that it should be concentrated into ecstasies, full of danger and followed by reactions.—Emerson.

SCIENTIFIC.

The remains of a new mastodon-like animal, from the Loup Fork beds of Kansas, have been described by Prof. Cope under the name of Dinelphodon campester. It must have been about the size of the African elephant. Among other palæontological discoveries recorded in the American Naturalist for February are a new genus of Oreodontidæ, from the Upper-Miocene (Pliocene) beds of Kansas, called by Cope Tichorhinus; and a new genus called by Cope Tichopus cymbatiches. It is a member of the group intermediate between the camels and rows. Prof. Little has discovered interesting vertebrate fossils in the region of Cretaceous and Tertiary rocks. Among these have been identified the dinosaurian Hadrosaurus, and some new turtles. In addition a new genus allied to Livatherium has been discovered, which is of much interest. It lacks anterior incisors, and has but a single base of horns on the vertex.

It is not so many years ago that hybrids between different species of plants were supposed to be infertile, and the very term mule had become almost synonymous with barrenness. In like manner it was supposed that the power of plants to hybridize was confined to very closely allied species. As physiological knowledge increased it was found that it was only sometimes that these crosses were sterile. Very often the crosses were more productive than their parents. It was clear that it was not the mere fact of crossing that necessarily interfered with reproduction; in time it was found that species supposed to be distantly related would hybridize more freely than those which were closely allied. Even some that were supposed to belong to distinct genera were found together in this way. A new variety of this latter character has recently been brought to the attention of vegetable physiologists by an English experimenter. Two bulbous plants—an Ismene and an Elisena—which successfully crossed, and the product has proved fertile.

A recent Sunday-school concert superintendent was talking about [illegible] when, to ascertain whether the children were understanding what they were hearing, he asked: "Children, what is an idol?" "Being lazy," was the loud and quick response of one of the members of the juvenile class.

I have used Bowning's Iowa Cannabis Indica. I know all about Cannabis Indica. Fifteen years I have been afflicted with the ASTHMA; for several years, but I succeeded to keep the disease under, so as to accommodate my business. I have used Cannabis Indica, and it has helped me. Inclosed find $5 for a box of your Remedy.

Respectfully, JACOB TROUT.

IT IS NOT A SINGLE CURE but a positive remedy that has cured thousands, and it will break a fresh case in a few days. Ask your druggist for it. If they have not got it, send $5 to me direct, and I will send you, by return mail, a bottle of the most powerful. $2 50 size, 3 bottles for $6 50. Pills and Extract, $1 each. Address

We have the no-imitation Gold Watch in the market. The metal is a composition of other metals so closely resembling gold that the best judges find it difficult to detect the difference, except by a chemical test, and it has all the virtues required to make it the best substitute for gold known. Genuine American Movement, Expansion Balance, Beautifully Engraved in Engine Turned Hunting Cases and equal in appearance to a GOLD WATCH THAT COSTS from $150 to $200. If you wish a watch for your own use, or to make money on, try this. Owing to our large sales we are enabled to reduce the price of them to $12 each, with an elegant Chain attached. They are used on railroads, steamers and in many other places where accurate time is required, and give general satisfaction. We send them by mail or express on receipt of $12, to any part of the country, or it will be sent C. O. D. when the customer desires and remits $3 on account. These elegant CHAINS weigh about FIVE Pennyweights, and the same pattern in pure gold would cost $100. We sell these Chains at Retail. But we sell the Watch and Chain for $12, sent by mail in a registered package, postpaid, to any postoffice in the United States.

WE SELL THE WATCH WITHOUT THE CHAIN FOR $10.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEART BURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHE caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk like smoothness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and we do not speak lightly when we say it is absolutely impossible for it to disagree with the most delicate invalid or feeble infant. It is also possibly adapted to females. The superfluousness of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent by the following illustrations. They represent a exact usual part of a single drop magnified 250 diameters. The first the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for where as the undissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates, in fact perfectly dissolved.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

COMMERCIAL.

Advocate Office,
New Orleans, Tuesday, April 2, 1878.

We have to report a dull market and rather an unsettled state of affairs generally. The failure of several large firms in the last fortnight has rendered it very difficult for any one to raise money except on undoubted security; for those who can give this security money can be easily obtained at from six to eight per cent. Dealers are not disposed, in many instances, to risk large bills except for cash. It is to be hoped that this state of things will soon be changed for if it is to be continued many results the injury to commerce will be incalculable.

State corsols have gone down still lower, but to day are somewhat stronger, with the prospect of a rise in a short time. They are quoted strong at 74@74¼. Premium bonds are quoted at 34@34½.

COTTON.

The Democrat reports the cotton market of yesterday as follows:

We have to notice another and further decline in cotton, the drop however, being limited to good middling, low middling and middling. New York and foreign advices being still unfavorable, the tone of the market was dull and easy throughout with sales amounting to 3,250 bales. The supply in the city was poor and unsatisfactory, although the receipts are unusually heavy.

The following is the official closing of the Cotton Exchange:

	To Day.	Yesterday
Low Ordinary	9¼	9¼
Ordinary	9¾	9¾
Good Ordinary	10¼	10¼
Low Middling	10¾	10¾
Middling	11	11
Good Middling	11¼	11¼
Middling Fair	11½	11½

Sales to-day, 3 250 bales. Market easy.

There is another thing of infinite importance to a divinity student. I mean a spirit of prayer. I am convinced that to carry on the whole Christian religion is so difficult, and so rarely attained, as a praying heart. Without this you are as weak as weakness itself. With it you are irresistible. I tell you, before the millennium comes the church will have to turn over a new leaf, and have to take a new lesson on the subject of prayer. When I think how almost certain you are to lose what of the praying spirit you ever had, and come out of the seminary very wise but very dry, and go about your work without much unction and life and spirituality, I am distressed, and could I raise my voice with sufficient strength, you would hear me cry: "Beware! Lay down your books and pray!" Frequent seasons of secret prayer are wholly indispensable to the keeping up of an intercourse with God.—President Finney.

Said a friend to a Book-seller: "The book trade is different, I suppose, by the general depression. What kind of books feel it most?" "Pocket-books," was the laconic reply.

SEWING MACHINES.

THE SINGER AGAIN TO THE FRONT!!

Great Reduction in the Prices

OF THE

WORLD-RENOWNED SINGER FAMILY SEWING MACHINE!

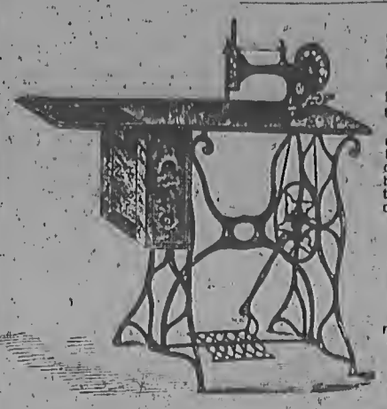
FOR CASH!!



The Singer Manufacturing Company, ever awake to the interest of the public, have determined to put the price of their Machines within the reach of every man, woman and child in the land

The Genuine Singer Sewing Machine is now Offered at Prices Below the Bogus Ones or Any Other.

The fact that the only Sewing Machine which unscrupulous men have ever attempted to imitate is the Singer is sufficient evidence of its superiority over all others. There is no longer any excuse for buying any of the cheap Machines hawked about the country, with no claim for patronage but their cheapness.

BEWARE OF

Worthless Imitation Machines.

The Singer Will Last a Lifetime.

THE WHEELER & WILSON has now been before the people for more than Twenty-Five Years, and upward of 1,400,000 of the Family Favorite are now in use in the families and workshops of the world. Our New No. 8 Machine is, without doubt, the best and most simple Sewing Machine in the world:

It has a self-setting needle.
It never cuts the thread or goods.
It is a new machine, with straight needle.
It will not break the thread if the needle is allowed to run off the goods when sewing.
It has no noisy cog wheels.
It has no complicated shuttle to thread.
It allows the work to run back from the operator.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

GALVESTON, April 5.—The News' Dallas special says: The through express train on the Texas Pacific road was stopped and robbed last night at Eagle Ford station. The express messenger and mail agent surrendered without resistance; the passengers were not molested. The amount stolen is not known. The robbery is supposed to have been committed by the same party that recently robbed the trains at Hutchins and Allen stations, on the Central road.

ST. LOUIS, April 6.—The latest news regarding the strike on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad is that several engines are derailed at Emporia, and two attempts were made the night before last to fire the railroad buildings at Topeka, probably by outside persons for the purpose of plunder. The sheriff has been on the ground with a strong force, and has guarded the road.

NEW YORK, April 8.—Ex-Gov. Franklin J. Moses, Jr., of South Carolina, was arrested on Broadway last night, and locked up. He is charged with having forged the name of J. Woodruff, and passing the note on James Allen. Moses will be taken to Charleston in a few days.

MACON, GA., April 8.—A fire at Forsyth, Ga., last night destroyed the only remaining hotel and three storehouses. The telegraph office was burned, but has been reopened. The losses aggregate $13,000; insurance about $4,500. The fire was accidental. Only three weeks ago Forsyth suffered severely by a fire.

MORNING, April 8.—There were forty-seventy inmates of the Insane Asylum, and the details of the fire are blood curdling. One man was fatally injured. Over forty were rescued and several escaped. The fire presented by charred remains and debris is sickening in the extreme.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, April 3.—The Times' St. Petersburg dispatch and advices from Berlin and Vienna mention some intimations that Russia might desire to renew negotiations for the Congress, taking the treaty of Paris as a basis of discussion.

The correspondent of the Times at San Stefano recounts an interview with the Grand Duke Nicholas, who said he had reason to know that the Czar would be glad to see his territory freed of Russian and English troops. The English fleet left the Russians could immediately begin to embark, the Grand Duke still hoped war might be avoided through the peaceful disposition of the Czar and the good sense of the English people.

A Belgrade special to the Times says: It is reported the Servians, by command of Russia, will shortly occupy Widdin and Adakieh.

Austria will likely protest against occupation of the latter place. The feeling in Servian government circles inclines to Austria rather than Russia, and a willingness is already expressed to make a military convention with the former.

HAVANA, April 3.—It is officially stated that 2,600 insurgents have surrendered in the jurisdiction of Manzanillo during March. The arms and all kinds given up amounted to 2,000 pieces.

LONDON, April 4.—The Berlin Post publishes an article (believed to be inspired) adopting Lord Salisbury's declarations of the San Stefano treaty. It says England will hardly remain alone in the opinion that the treaty of Paris, until amended, is the law of Europe. Russia, therefore, has no choice between war or parting with the treaty of San Stefano, as she would have to do if she entered a congress.

AT PETERSBURG, April 4.—The direction of foreign affairs has practically passed into the hands of Gen. Ignatieff. Russia continues to purchase war material in Germany. Russia will not consider Salisbury's note as an ultimatum. All its propositions being negative, England may be requested to suggest some solution of her own. It is argued that if the English cabinet really desire peace a pacific solution may be found. The Times, however, regard the circular as new proof that England has decided upon war.

BERLIN, April 5.—The North German Gazette says: Although the treaty does not affect Germany's interests, the entrance of Russia into antagonism with other neighbors and friends of Germany cannot be a matter of indifference to her. The regulations of the treaty seem not to have kept the interests of other powers sufficiently in mind.

Russia could only purchase complete fulfillment of the treaty by another war. The principal obstacle to a settlement is Russia's having placed herself by the terms of the treaty. Both England and Austria admit that great changes are necessary in the East. It is therefore hoped, in view of the agreement of Austria, Russia and England on the main point, that the common desire for peace will ultimately gain the upper hand.

BUCHAREST, April 5.—The Russians are rapidly building a large and apparently permanent bridge over the Prath, at Scheni.

ROME, April 6.—Cardinal Gulzeppe is dead.

The German Emperor's letter to Pope Leo the Thirteenth, while extremely courteous in expression and willingness to entertain friendly relations with the Vatican, gives no indications of a basis for negotiations.

PARIS, April 7.—A correspondent of the Temps at Pesth, has had an interview with Mr. Tizza, premier of the Hungarian ministry, who said Austria Hungary would go to war if necessary to prevent the establishment of a Slav State on her southern frontier.

LONDON, April 8.—A telegram from Calcutta points out that from the Bengal cavalry alone it will be possible to draw ten thousand men without the slightest detriment to the Indian service. They are infinitely superior to the Cossacks in training, equipment and organization.

The movements of the Russian forces on the Danube and in Roumania seem to indicate a determination to prepare thoroughly against the contingency of an Austrian attack in the rear. All the passes over the Carpathians, practicable for artillery and trains, are covered by the positions which the Russians have just occupied.

Telegrams from Silestria and Rustchuk say that Russian troops are constantly moving from Bulgaria into Roumania. The Roumanians are stated to be comparatively quiet again, the government having successfully used Premier Bratiano's absence to secure the postponement of action about a protest against the treaty of St. Stefano.

Large shipments of powder from Dortmund, Prussia, into Russia are reported.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 8.—The Agence Russe says it is authorized to deny that Russia threatened to oppose the discussion of the Bessarabian question by the Congress.

The Agence also states that the character of the latest news encourages the belief of a possibility of the resumption of the Congress proposals.

LONDON, April 8.—The Daily Telegraph's correspondent at Pera understands that Austria has assured the Porte she will oppose any effort to enforce the San Stefano treaty.

The Russians are desperately urging the Sultan to surrender his ironclads and positions on the Bosphorus.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says: Besides verbal remarks made to Gen. Ignatieff a more extensive statement in writing of Austria's views was delivered to Prince Gortschakoff by Austria two days after Gen. Ignatieff's arrival at St. Petersburg.

It is announced from Constantinople that the current of feeling in the Turkish government is now running wholly against Russia.

HAVANA, April 8.—The Official Gazette publishes, by the Captain General's direction, that in conformity with the proclamation of the twenty-eighth of March, restoration to the owners of all property embargoed for political offenses shall commence immediately, orders have been given accordingly to the director of finances and all governors of the Island. Persons interested must apply to these authorities to obtain their property.

AMERICAN MEATS SENT TO ENGLAND.—The amount of fresh dead meats shipped to England from the United States from January 1, 1878, to February 22, 1878 was of beef, 9,986,730 pounds, value $911,284; of mutton 211,815 pounds, value $11,251; live stock, cattle 4,389, value $430,800; live sheep 2,500, value $13,198; dressed and live hogs 765,080, value $39,389. In beef the total export for 1877 was 101,971,501 pounds, value $10,017,699; mutton 2,111,240 value $119,500. In live cattle 20,957, value $2,187,540; live sheep 13,176 value $63,960. The amount of fresh beef and live cattle exported to 1878 for the period from January 1 to February 22 increased only a trifle, for it was large in both years at that time. The promise this year (1878) in the total year, is of a large increase over 1877.

It is remarkable that from January 1 to February 22, 1878, the export of mutton and live sheep increased more than did that of beef. But the mutton traffic is not developed yet, and the market mutton in quality is not yet equal to the beef. Of hogs, dressed and live (not cured meats) the total in 1877 was only 281,086 pounds, of a value of $17,940. It is to be noted that the export of cured hams, shoulders and bacon and barreled salt pork is not included in this.—Kentucky Live Stock Journal.

"Who's your pastor, my dear?" asked a good old lady from the country, addressing her daughter, who had been living in the city for half a year or so. "Really, mother, I hardly know. I never saw him. He was away on vacation last summer, and now he has started on his lecturing tour for the winter. I may get acquainted with him next spring."

A great step is gained when a child has learned that there is no necessary connection between liking a thing and doing it.—Guesses at Truth.

Some Fearful Figures.

If an old field ceases to produce crops, and is given up to weeds there is a reason for it. Bad cultivation or bad management is at the bottom of the decline. A good farmer who takes charge of such lands first inquires for facts about the condition and former management of the farm, and upon those facts he lays his plans for ultimate success.

The Rev. John W. Harmon has been studying the influence of the drinking usages of society in Louisiana on the prosperity of the State for more than a quarter of a century. He has gone to the records of many of the parishes to see how much the crimes created by intoxicating drinks cost the tax-payers of those parishes. Here are some of his facts, which he has been giving to the people in lectures all the way from New Orleans to the Arkansas line:

Iberville parish collects about $2,500 for liquor licenses, and spends $15,000 yearly for criminal expenses most of the crimes caused by intoxicating drinks, and most of them occurring on Sundays.

St. Landry parish, Dr. Harmon states, receives $3,500 for licenses to sell liquor, and pays $25,000 yearly for criminal prosecutions, and expenses connected with crimes in the parish, mostly committed on Sundays, and nine-tenths of them, as in the other parishes, caused by ardent spirits. New Orleans, says Dr. Harmon, receives $144,000 a year for liquor licenses, and her expenses on criminals, etc., in the enforcement of criminal law, amounts to $825,000 annually—more than the amount of all the liquor licenses in the State.

Dr. Harmon says a colony of Canadian farmers was about to purchase lands and settle in East Feliciana parish, but declined purchasing or settling in the State solely on account of the drinking usages and irregularities of our people on the Sabbath.

A colony from Alabama was about settling upon lands near Opelousas, in the parish of St. Landry, and a colony from Indiana was about to settle in East Baton Rouge parish. The drinking usages on Sundays, as seen by the agents, prevented them from purchasing.

The colored labor of the State is demoralized by drinking on Sundays that often on Mondays near the large plantations many hands are taken from the field to testify in regard to crimes committed at coffee-houses the previous day.

These are Dr. Harmon's statements. The reader can make his own comments.—New Orleans Picayune.

BRING ONE SOUL TO JESUS.—To stand fast in his own place, and bring another one to his side, is the very highest view of each Christian's responsibility. Should each one, by example, by testimony, by living entirely, "praying always with all prayer," bring one soul to Jesus, how would the numbers of the saved be swelled on just in that single! To think that there should be multitudes who in the course of their whole lives do not even so much as this; that, saved themselves "as one by fire," if saved at all the mass of professing Christians enter heaven with not a soul to ever, in all eternity, greet them there as the direct instruments of his salvation; that, upon the contrary the balance is even a doubtful one of the good they do with the evil necessarily resulting from a wavering walk and a conversation scarcely tinged with the godliness of the gospel, while to the burning that consumes the wood, hay and stubble of their imperfect Christian development, the dear Lord's kingdom itself suffers loss! It is saddening to reflect that of the majority of professing Christians this must be true. What an access of power, then, would the kingdom at once receive if the heart in this regard should change, and a steadfast host stand up all through the Christian world, witnesses for Jesus unimpeached and unimpeachable! Patmos or the Kingdom and the Patience.

There are 21 universities in the German empire, with 20,000 students, of whom 2,500 do not attend lectures, but are probably under private instruction, though still connected as members with the university. Berlin University has 4,597 students, of whom only half attend lectures. Leipsic has over 3,000 in regular attendance. There are 2,221 theological professors attending these various universities. 1,300 of the professors are paid by the German empire. Six other German universities are situated beyond the confines of the empire.

There is at the core of all men something which the whole world of science and art is inadequate to fill. And this part of man is no mere adjunct of his nature, but his most permanent, highest self. What this inmost personality craves is sympathy with something like itself, yet high above it—a will consubstantial with our better will, yet transcending, supporting.—Shaler.

"Second class in grammar, stand up," said the schoolmaster. "John Ts. Who does John correspond with?" "I knows," said the little boy at the foot, holding up his hand. "If you mean John Smithers, he corresponds with my Sister Susan."

Many professors of religion like a little of the world by stealth, which they conceal as smugglers do their contraband goods.

Joseph Cook.

Many of our later subscribers, says the Independent who read the Rev. Joseph Cook's lectures, which appear weekly in the Independent, are asking us all sorts of questions as to who he is. We give them the following facts, in as brief a compass as possible:

Mr. Cook was born at Ticonderoga, N. Y. in the year 1838, and is the only child of parents who still survive at the homestead. He passed his earlier years, to all outward appearance, pretty much as all boys do, attending day and Sunday schools, and enjoying life hugely and innocently. He is remembered, however, as being graver and more thoughtful than the average of his fellows. Part of his school life was spent in Canada, where his first knowledge of French was acquired. Whether it was his own wish to go or his parents' wish to have him go to college does not appear; but we find him entering Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., at the age of seventeen. Here he studied hard, and was accounted a good scholar; and it was here that he cultivated his taste for speaking and writing until it developed into a positive power. He was fond of oratory before this, and it is told by those who know him intimately that even when a mere boy he liked nothing better than to go into the open air and speak extemporaneously on some random subject. At Andover he made the most of his opportunities in the debating society, and when he entered Yale, in 1859, his reputation as something remarkably uncommon and promising in the way of an orator had already preceded him. As the rival class societies were on the lookout for such men, all were anxious to have him; but, opposed to secret societies, he joined the open ones. It may be said, in passing, that he had found time, before going to college, to write and publish a history of his native town.

His class at Yale was that of 1862, and among his classmates who have since achieved more or less distinction, were ex Gov. Chamberlain, of South Carolina; Rev. William H. H. Murray, of Boston; Dr. Beard, of New York; and Prof. Coe, of New Haven. As a student Mr. Cook was rather reserved, and for the most part he attended to the curriculum. His favorite studies were rhetoric, logic, history, oratory and metaphysics. In the classics he was good; in mathematics often perplexed, occasionally floored. Of course he did not neglect the debates, and he sustained his standing as a speaker on all occasions. Probably no student in college in any of the classes could match him in the display of oratory. He met competitors who were able to push him nearly to the wall at times on positions he took; but, as he always held in reserve some general and accepted ground to stand on, he never appeared to be vanquished. Being older and far more mature than most of the students, he questioned the propriety of many college customs, and even the methods of instruction, and was known, in consequence, as "eccentric" or visionary. For instance, he decried emulation as a proper motive, and refused to enter contests where prizes were offered as the main inducement. He opposed "pow wows" sophomoreal pretensions and pretty much everything in college that looks puerile to an outsider or forty. He also had his hobbies. Phrenology being one; but he carried this only as far as physiology and psychology would warrant in both of which branches he was better versed than any one about him. He read character and talents in physiognomy. Such faces as Judge Story's and William H. Seward's he would examine and study minutely. About the middle of junior year Mr. Cook left Yale, and some months later entered Harvard, graduating in 1861. He then took a theological course of four years at Andover, where he enjoyed the friendship and appreciation of Prof. Park. It cannot be said that he studied theology with the single intention of becoming a preacher. It has been his aim rather to become a "teacher of teachers" in whatever channel an opportunity might offer. When he left the seminary he delivered addresses, much in the vein of his present ones, at different points in New England, took a helpful part in revivals, was settled a year over the First Congregational church at Lynn, Mass., and pursued his favorite lines of reading at Andover and Cambridge.

Going abroad in 1871, Mr. Cook devoted little time to travel, but gave a year to theology, philosophy and art in Germany and three months to the latter in Italy. He attended lectures, chiefly at the universities of Heidelberg and Berlin; spent a winter at Halle, "with invaluable opportunities of personal intercourse, especially with Prof. Tholuck," and studied also at Leipzig, Dresden, Gottingen and Weimar. Returning to America, he identified himself before long with the noon prayer meetings held in Boston under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, where his remarks excited increased attention. These gradually developed into formal lectures at the Meionaon, and then into the present "Monday lectures," at the Tremont Temple. About a year ago Mr. Cook was married to Miss Hemingway, of Fair Haven, Conn., and he now resides in Boston.

E. P. Whipple, who sometimes boils the maple sap of verbosity down to the maple sugar of sententious proverb, says the trouble in most of our theological schools is that exegesis too often means "exit Jesus."

The New Orleans Sunday School Association.

MR. EDITOR: It should be a subject of hearty rejoicing among all persons interested in evangelical Sunday school work that under the above title an association has been formed in our city, intended to enlist in its ranks the friends of the cause from all denominations, and to enter at once upon an active, energetic pursuit of the many beneficial results which invariably attend intelligent co-operative effort, and many of which are unattainable without it.

The association dates its organization from February last, and on Tuesday, the second instant, in the large Sunday school rooms of the Coliseum Street Baptist church, held its first regular meeting. From the admirable report read at this meeting, by Mr. W. R. Lyman, it appears that the interval has been filled up by an executive board, whose personnel is itself a strong pledge of the future usefulness of the organization, in such preliminary work as was necessary to present the association's system of operations ready to be put in motion. The Methodist Church South is represented on the board by Mr. R. M. Walmsley, the German Methodists by Mr. J. H. Keller, the Baptists by Mr. R. H. Browne, the Episcopalians by Mr. Frank Butler, the Northern Methodists and Congregationalists jointly by Mr. C. K. Shute, the Presbyterians South) by Mr. W. R. Lyman, and the Northern German Presbyterians by the Rev. L. Tilets. The annual dues have been fixed at $1, and by a constitutional provision no assessment can be levied nor can any debt be made by the association.

The objects of the organization, as set forth in this report, may be briefly summarized as follows:

1. The perfection of Sunday school statistics, and their presentation to the membership in manner and form best adapted to foster and increase that interest, and afford that encouragement and profitable knowledge which are the best fruits of trustworthy and copious statistics.

2. The communication of such various methods of school organization, management, instruction, etc., as the experience of individual workers here and there may have shown to be useful and valuable; thus to make available to all whatever one or another has found desirable and profitable in the work of the superintendent, secretary, librarian or teacher.

3. A continuous, intelligent and general knowledge of each other's needs; the saving of waste material by well-supplied Sabbath schools, and their distribution to indigent schools, according to the expressed preference of the donors.

4. To quote literally: "To gather and disseminate all manner of intelligence valuable to the Sunday school cause, and to do this in a general and therefore unofficial and unoffensive manner."

Work already begun enabled the board of managers to present to the meeting, through the medium of a standing committee, a table of highly interesting figures, many of which are brought together now probably for the first time. For want of space only a few tables can be given here.

TOTAL OFFICERS, TEACHERS AND SCHOLARS IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS IN NEW ORLEANS, LA.

	White.	Colored.	Total.
Protestant Episcopal	2,195	[illegible]	2,666
Presbyterian	2,851	217	2,851
Methodist (North)	750	1,455	2,205
Methodist (South)	1,500	[illegible]	1,500
Baptist	5,8[illegible]	580	1,661
Total	8,[illegible]40	2,547	10,[illegible]73

Other matters of importance were brought before the meeting and acted upon. Rev. J. H. McCarthy, and Messrs. L. H. Gardner and R. H. Browne were commissioned as delegates to the International Sunday School Convention, which meets in Atlanta Ga., on the seventeenth instant. Seventeen applications for membership were acted upon.

With such evidence of earnest intention and practical plans, which are even now beginning to bear good fruit, and with the knowledge of the great good which has been effected by the organizations in other places, it is to be hoped that the association will not long lack that important element of strength—a numerous membership; but that from all denominations of Protestant Christians the friends of Sunday schools will give in their adhesion to a standard, to join which need not qualify their perfect loyalty to their respective church organizations, but will help them to do much for the service of a common Lord, which has too long remained undone.

Fasting.

MR. EDITOR: I feel like thanking Bro. J. G. Jones for his article in the ADVOCATE on Fasting. During my labors in the ministry I have been greatly afflicted by the lukewarmness of the church on this subject. I have tried to teach it as one of the duties of Christians, and in so doing I have been time and again accused of "preaching a new doctrine." I have had members of old members of the Methodist Church to tell me that they had heard preachers advise people to fast, but never heard it preached as a real duty!!! (I wish that I could make an exclamation point here as big as a mountain.) Is not this a sad state of affairs? How many of our preachers are neutral on this subject not only in precept, but in example? I am afraid that the answer would unfold a picture of sad neglect. We have some preachers, and, as a natural consequence, circuits and stations (for a cold preacher will freeze the church) who are remarkable only for their want of spiritual life. I suspect that this is often the result of neglect of fasting, with perhaps the other Christian sacrifices—almsgiving and prayer. I am glad to see the editorials of Dr. Summers in the Nashville Advocate on this subject. I hope that the great minds will continue to agitate the subject until the church is waked up. God speed the day when we will have more preachers and lay members of the Wesley and Fletcher type. I will not attempt to discuss the subject, hoping that pens that are not so wee, bit as mine will shoulder that responsibility. But if "I can push a pound" by what I have said I will be thankful.

Yours truly,

LEWIS R. FEATHERSTON.

It may be set down as a positive fact, says the Churchman that if the children of Christendom go to Sunday school, instead of the church, the Sunday school is an evil and ought to be abandoned. We are sorry to say that in many a congregation the parents, as they go to church, meet their children on their way home from Sunday school. This is a shocking perversion of the church's work. Children ought to go to church with their parents, and if attendance upon Sunday school and church successively is too wearisome then the Sunday school should be given up.

Whatever else may be done, or left undone, on the Lord's day, this should be the rule everywhere. The father of the family, as the priest of the family, should gather about him and take with him to the church all the members of his family, whom, during the week, he has been instructing and leading in worship. Thus the public worship is a legitimate outgrowth of family worship, and the combined religious family life of a parish finds its natural result in a religious church life.

A woman took her little one in her arms to hear a famous preacher. The loud voice from the platform awoke the child and made it cry, and its mother got up and was leaving the hall, when the minister stopped her by saying: "My good woman, don't go away. The baby doesn't disturb me." "It isn't for that, sir, I leave," she replied, with a perfect unconsciousness of sarcasm, "it's you disturb the baby."

The crown of England contains 1,700 diamonds, the imperial crown of Russia contains 2,500 diamonds, the crown of France 5,312 diamonds, but the crown of the pearl of Christ's saints is one solid gem, not to be compared for beauty and value with all the diamonds in the world; for the Lord God of hosts is for a crown of glory and for a diadem of beauty to the residue of the people.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

PARAPHRASE ON PSALM XXIII.

BY MINNIE K. BERRY.

I shall not want for any good—
The Lord my tender Shepherd is;
He graces me now my daily food,
He is my own, and I am His.

In pastures green he makes me lie,
And leadeth me by waters still;
He, to protect, is ever nigh;
He is my cure for every ill.

My soul to health he doth restore
In paths of truth he leadeth me
For his dear sake. For evermore
He promises my rôle to be.

Yea, tho I walk through death's dark vale,
No evil can my soul befall,
For thou art near, thou canst avail,
My rod, my staff, my all in all.

A table thou hast now prepared,
Tho foes are thick on every side,
Thy own dear voice I oft have heard
Here would I evermore abide.

With oil thou dost anoint my head;
My cup with mercies runneth o'er;
May I by thee be ever led;
May I feel sorrow never more.

Thy blessings sure shall follow me;
While I'm on earth I make my stay
Upon in thy presence shall be
Through out the realms of endless day.

JOHNSTON STATION, Miss., March 27, 1878.

Sketch of Rev. B. M. Drake.

NUMBER IV.

"Not among the hopes and pleasures of this fleeting world
As thy vocation,
But in usefulness to that which cannot die.
Give God the praise
That thou art counted worthy."

In consequence of the death of Mrs. Drake's mother the family at Ararat, her old home, were left very desolate. The inmates in 1831 were a son of twenty, and two aged relatives who had looked to her for aid and sympathy. A younger son was absent at the Wesleyan Seminary in Middletown. These circumstances were the chief inducements to the residence of Mr. Drake and family there for the year, and to his building near them the year following. At the close of 1830, the property being in debt, and land in great demand in the neighborhood, the estate was sold, and Mr. Drake and his brothers in-law came in possession of family servants without land. Averse to separating families, or hiring them where they might be maltreated, they seemed almost necessitated to buy land on credit. The aunts being infirm and unwilling to remove, remained with Mr. Drake, while the brothers went with the servants to Warren county. The rage for speculation and sales of produce were perhaps higher than at any other time. As usual, in a few years, a reverse came, and the consequence was not only loss of property, but the distress and perplexity of debt, which caused them incalculable harassment for many years. During all these years of annoyance he was not less interested or sensitive than others as to what involved the comfort of his family or his good name; his Master's work was not neglected. His influence and efforts were given to every benevolent enterprise which conduced to the good of his fellow-beings. Uncertainty at one time as to whether duty to his family required him to locate, he consulted them and Dr. Winans, and continued to travel. About this time Dr. Winans writes concerning the Manual Labor School: That wherever he had mentioned it it had met with a degree of approbation equal to anything he could have wished. Obstacles, however, prevented its success, and the plan finally resulted in the establishment of Centenary College. Mr. Drake attended Mr. Maffitt during his revivals in Natchez and Washington, and made collections on his district to aid Bro. Curtiss in completing the Poydras Street church in New Orleans. On his way to the General Conference in 1836 he made, as usual, a detour to see his mother, now a widow. Passing the place where he was converted, he wrote as follows: "The house had lately been burned, and was totally deserted. There were no signs of life save a flock of sheep which fed or rested near. I alighted as near the spot as I could, bowed my knee, and returned thanks for all the goodness of my heavenly Father. In a few minutes I reached Bro. C.'s, and found that my dear mother yet lived."

"Cincinnati, May 3.—We are at Sister Thomson's, pleasantly situated * * * The delegate from the British Conference, Rev. W. Lord, is with us. A letter was read to-day in which they urge us to make efforts for the abolition of slavery. * * *

"May 8.—We have prepared an answer to the British Conference, and appointed Dr. Fisk to attend as our delegate to that body.

"I offered sundry resolutions on the subject of the theological library, and by my request they were referred to a select committee of seven. * * * Just the committee I desired. But it has enemies, and warm ones."

The object of this was to get a library of the very best theological works published by our Book Concern, which should be accessible to all our preachers, giving them all the advantages of a seminary without withdrawing them from the active work of the ministry. He thought the great outcry about the ignorance of our early preachers and commendation of theological schools could not be atoned for by eulogizing Methodism and the fathers, and was very injurious to the improvement of our young preachers, causing them to think that intelligence and learning can only be acquired in schools. He asks: "Would it not be better to set before them the bright examples of success on our present plan?" "The greatest danger to the church now is making high literary and theological attainments a necessary qualification for the ministry. Far be it from me to recommend a low standard of either. The command is too positive that 'the priest's lips should keep knowledge,' and that he should 'study to show himself approved.' I earnestly recommend to every minister to acquire knowledge by every means consistent with the performance of his ministerial duties. But I plead that the great Head of the church may still have the selection of his own ministers, and I deprecate with all my heart any arrangement that would tend to take this prerogative out of the hands of the chief Shepherd. Hitherto we have gone forward in the name of the mighty God of Jacob. He has owned and blessed us. When we turn aside we shall hew to ourselves broken cisterns that hold no water. While education is kept subservient to religion, they promote each other's interests; but so soon as religion is made secondary, the contrary process commences."

The following extract is from a letter to his son, twelve years old, written from Baltimore, May 1, 1811: "This is the first time father ever addressed a letter to you. I this morning received yours of the thirteenth of April. I was pleased to receive it. I am also glad to hear that Rollin is nearly finished. I hope before I return you will be well progressed in Plutarch. Meanwhile, don't neglect your potato-patch. I shall expect a fine one when I return. I hope all the bees won't run away." He gives him a description of his journey, and reminds him of the importance of reading the Bible and secret prayer. During his absence at General Conference the pulpit in Natchez was filled by Rev. J. G. Jones.

May 5 he writes of his pleasant lodgings with Mr. Plaskett, a merchant living near the Washington monument, and the attendance of the English delegates. "On Sunday morning I heard Mr. Newton in Light street. I was delighted beyond measure. He is a fine-looking man, about sixty, above the middle stature; a fine voice, with the deepest intonations I ever heard; simple and earnest to a high degree. In the afternoon I tried to preach in Entaw, standing over the ashes of Asbury and Emory, but their mantles did not fall on me. At five I heard Mr. Newton preach to about ten thousand in one of the public squares. In the crowd were Clay, Preston and many other distinguished men. On Monday the Bishops delivered their quadrennial address. It was good—very good. On the same day there was a Whig convention—the greatest of the kind ever holden in the United States. There were speeches from the most distinguished men in the nation—Clay, Webster, and others. I saw the procession and heard a little of the speaking. There is a greater amount of hospitality here than I have seen in my travels.

"May 12. I took tea with Mr. Newton at Mr. Tiffany's. He is in the social circle all that you could wish; and, what is best of all, he mixes true religion with everything. I go to Washington on Saturday. I hope to meet your uncle. I have written to Miss M. Bent and Mrs. Foxall. Love to aunts and the children.

"May 15.—I have felt the most intense anxiety. Your letters of the first and sixth came yesterday, and one of the eighth from Bro. Jones, giving particulars of the storm. He seems confident it did not reach my house. With this came the intelligence of the illness of dear Aunt Priscilla. How I regret being absent at such a time! * * * Last Saturday I went to the ancient site of Cokesbury College, and preached on Sunday morning in the college chapel. I walked for an hour before preaching in the grove adjoining the ancient college grounds. * * * The spontaneous effusions of my heart were: O that a double portion of the spirit of our fathers may descend on me and the whole church! I preached in the evening near Judge A.'s, and spent the night at his house. * * * Mr. Wesley's rule on temperance and abolition are exciting the Conference to a high degree."

During the session, a gentleman being desired who could best entertain Mr. Newton in conversation while his likeness was taken, Mr. Drake was chosen for the purpose.

The next two years he was on the Washington circuit, and the four following on the Natchez district. A few sentences follow from a letter to Mr. Steele in 1841: "I am sorry I have contributed to your depression, which I always deprecate as unfriendly to a growth in grace or improvement in health. I am aware we cannot change our constitutional temperament, nor does religion in its highest degree change it; but reason and religion join in correcting excesses either of mirthfulness or depression."

In the spring of 1844 he again represents the Mississippi Conference. He writes of the immense crowds, on boats, stages and cars, going to the Clay convention in Baltimore; of a great alarm on board the Sultana (just as Bro. Winans was commencing to preach,) from an accident crushing in her side. Passing the Potomac, he says: "The bays were literally whitened with sail. Among them were two steamboat loads of delegates going to the Clay convention." Arriving at New York, himself and Bro. Winans were lodged at W. Harper's. He writes of being introduced to two interesting Armenian gentlemen from Constantinople, who came to learn the way of the Lord more perfectly; of the interesting speeches and anniversaries, and of a missionary speech by the candidate for vice-president, Frelinghuysen, which he said was short but splendid, and that he was a lovely man. Mr. Drake's letters contain a full account of the controversy which rent the church:

"May 11.—On the verge of this dreadful crater. I am surprised at myself that I feel so calm. Last Sunday and Monday I spent in Hartford and New Haven, in company with Bro. H. Bangs. I preached twice on Sunday in Hartford." He also visited Yale College, etc.

"June 1.—The agony is over. For nearly two weeks the debate has gone on. It has been exceedingly able on the part of the South, and with a solemn sense of its importance."

He says that when the resolution to depose the Bishop was carried by the North, "the scene was awfully solemn. Many in the galleries and on the floor were in tears. Conference immediately adjourned, though not at its regular time. The Southern delegates met in the basement of the church to deliberate. This meeting was one of the most interesting I have ever seen. Business was several times interrupted by the sobs and tears of its members. Bishop Andrew tried to speak, but floods of tears overwhelmed him. All wept as if they had buried their first-born. We went no further than to appoint a committee to prepare a protest to offer to the Conference."

He attended the Louisville convention the next year. The second day was observed for prayer and fasting. There was a great deal of speaking—a splendid effort from Rev. G. Peirce. He says the report of the Committee on Division was the finest thing he ever heard. The members were in a good spirit.

The Doctrine of Eternal Punishment.

There is but one source of information on this all-important subject. We can know certainly nothing of the other life only as it is revealed to us in the Bible. I think the trouble with those who have recently advanced heterodox opinions on this subject is that they have lost proper respect for the Bible as a divine revelation. If the Bible be a mere human production, then it deserves only to be treated as such; but if we cannot refute its claims to divine authority, then every utterance of it, after fair interpretation, should be implicitly believed. What does human opinion amount to in the face of such authority? I am not concerned about what this or that man believes, but about what the Bible teaches on the subject.

As to the nature of the punishment to which the wicked will be appointed it is not necessary that revelation should be explicit. We are not to interpret Bible phraseology on this point literally. The inspired writers have adopted natural symbols in describing it, as other things, to make the truth more impressive; and the symbols used were such as the circumstances suggested. Neither would I take the descriptions of heaven literally. It is enough for me to know that heaven is a place of unalloyed happiness; and it is enough that hell is a place of endless torment.

I do not see any unreasonableness in this doctrine. When we are taught that the sentence of punishment will not proceed upon any non-fulfillment of mere arbitrary demands, but upon a willful and obstinate rejection of truth, it should then occur to us that the punishment is self-imposed, and not divinely imposed. The acceptance of truth being the absolute condition of virtue and happiness, its rejection necessarily works the opposite effect. If a man in this life deliberately do a malicious deed, he can blame no one for his punishment but himself.

But the advocates of a limited hell are troubled about the duration of punishment. They think that God after awhile will certainly relent, and that the poor victims will be released from their sufferings. By the distinction, as above, between the self-imposed and divinely imposed punishment, the difficulty would be obviated. The punishment is not the fruit of divine revenge, nor a corrective measure, but the necessary result of a free human choice. God is not giving a man measure for measure. The question is not how long we ought to be punished in eternity for the sins of a life-time; but whether, if a life-time were an eternity, one would even then learn to do well. God necessarily knows what one would do under given circumstances, and therefore we may be assured that he does not forestall any one's possibility of eternal happiness by ushering him unprepared into an unchangeable state of existence.

With this view of the subject, we see also how this doctrine does not reflect upon the goodness of God. Goodness consists in making the proper distinction between truth and error, as well as in showing mercy to the helpless. If God's nature had the one-sidedness of the views of some men in reference to it, we might well tremble for the moral government of the world. If I am assured that the Lord of all the earth will do right, I am no more troubled about the depth of the divine compassion. With all my blindness, I cannot charge the Almighty with my present sorrows. With all of its evils, I cling to my existence tenaciously. I have no fears that there may not be to me an alternative to a destiny of ruin. Every moment I feel the pressure of responsibility, and my unpreparedness can be ascertained at any time upon reflection. The great personal concern, therefore, with me every moment is: Am I prepared to go hence?

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MRS. FLORA KELSOE CAPPS reflet of the late Rev. James W. Capps, was born near Wilmington, N. C., July 30, 1801; was married February 3, 1821, and died suddenly, at her residence near Wingfoola church, Lee county, Ala., January 1, 1878. In the seventy seventh year of her age. She was the mother of eight children, all of whom she lived to see grown and members of the church of her choice, and two of them useful local ministers. Only five of them survive her. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in early life, and to the end was a quiet but eloquent illustration of the force of religion in practical life, both private and public. She was one of the pioneers of Methodism in east Alabama, having settled with her husband, who was an efficient local preacher, near Opelika in 1837, about the time the Mizells, Bennetts, Tarvers, Williamses, Fletchers and Cades came over from Georgia, and was one of the first members of old Lebanon. In 1850 she moved to the neighborhood of Wingfoola (where she died), and was an loyal member of that church. The contemporary ministers of that day and locality were J. W. and Joshua Starr, William Mizelle, E. W. Story, A. W. and Joseph Tally, Lilum Kennon, Gideon Powledge, David Lockhart and W. B. Neal. The most of these glorious old warriors still live, and Aunt Flora's memory is fresh in their hearts. She dixed the firm but mild and beautiful impress of her moral and religious character, which was of the highest scriptural type, upon all her children, and her influence for good went beyond the family circle and the pale of her church. She, "being dead, yet speaketh."

Her death was very sudden. On the fourth of January, though her health had been feeble for a year or more, she was as well as usual, and was seated at the table enjoying the noonday meal with other members of the family, when she suddenly fell back in the lap of one of her friends, and died, without a spasm, of dropsy of the heart. Her house was always set in order, and in a most eminent sense she was ready. Five children, twenty-four grandchildren and two great grandchildren survive her. A mother in Israel is gone, and her children rise up and call her blessed.

F. A. CHENEY.

DEBORAH STARLING, wife of H. F. Starling, was born in North Carolina in April, 1811, and was married to H. F. Starling in 1831; removed to Mississippi in 1811, and died, near Lake Station, Newton county, Miss., December 3, 1877.

Sister Starling joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1828, and lived a faithful, devoted member until her death. Her children are all grown and in the church. She and her husband lived happily together the forty-six years of their wedded life, and Father Starling now feels desolate and lonely on account of the absence of one who was so long the comfort and joy of his household. She was a woman of devoted piety, sweet and loving disposition, possessed of a benevolent spirit, and was truly a Dorcas to the poor, and an angel of mercy at the bedside of the suffering. She was devoted to the church of her choice, meeting every obligation with pleasure, and, before her declining health prevented, attending punctually on public worship, as well as the social meetings of the church. Her doors were always opened to ministers, as well as her friends generally; and the writer has many times partaken of the hospitality of this godly family, and will long remember the pleasant hours spent around their fireside. Her faith was unwavering in the God of her fathers. She talked freely upon the subject of religion, and regretted exceedingly that her health was too feeble to admit of her attending the camp meeting (it having been the intention of the family to tent on the grounds.) When bidding me farewell she told me that probably we would meet no more here on earth; but with tears in her eyes she said: "Meet me in heaven."

Through suffering long, when the final hour came she died in great peace, enjoying rationality almost to the last. She talked to her husband and children, and requested them to meet her in heaven; also talked freely to her pastor (Bro. Hayes) when visited by him a few days before her death.

IRVIN MILLER.

MRS. SARAH E. DAVIDSON was born in Madison county, Miss., November 11, 1829. She was the daughter of Samuel and Martha McKay, her father being one of the pioneer Methodist ministers of her native State. Mrs. Davidson professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in 1843, and was married to James C. Davidson October 28, 1848. She died at home near Belmont, Sumter county, Ala., on the fourth of February, 1877. Plain and unpretending, yet unswerving in principle; gentle, amiable and kind, yet firm and unflinching in every duty; simple and modest in her manners, yet scrupulously careful of the amenities of life; intuitive of right and decorum, she moved along without ostentation, commanding the confidence and respect of those around her. We saw her often during her protracted illness. She set her house in order with calm deliberation, had become familiar with death, and when the hour came, clothed in the white panoply of Christian faith, she met the grim monster as a harbinger of rest, and, giving him the crumbling clay, her pure spirit mounted to mansions on high.

Mrs. Davidson left a husband and six children, whose bleeding hearts will sacredly her memory. This simple tribute is from a friend familiar with her joys and sorrows, her hopes and fears; who, pointing her bereaved family and friends to her spotless example, would commend them to the Shepherd whom she loved and followed. Monuments of marble crumble into dust; oblivion is forgotten; titles, fame, all the trappings of earthly honor are lost in the abyss of Time; but the heroic life of a Christian wife and mother—the impress of her spirit is eternal as the souls upon which it is stamped.

M. F. T.

DEPARTED this life, March 3, 1878, E. B. Smith, daughter of Rowan and C. E. Spicer. Sister Emma was born in Monroe county, Ga., December 3, 1847, and died at her mother's residence, Rose Hill, Covington county, Ala., March 3, 1878. She was married to her beloved husband at the age of nineteen; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at an early age, and lived a Christian life; died leaving three lovely little children with her companion and earnestly prayed him to give them pious training; to live for God and strive to meet her in heaven. The most remarkable feature of her Christian life was the exercise of patience; though her sufferings were intense, yet she never murmured or repined. The topic of her conversation was religion. She prayed to God, she talked of Jesus and she sung of Jesus until she lost her power of speech. Then she exclaimed, in low whispers: "Blessed Jesus!" It was the good fortune of Bro. J. L. Stewart to catch the accents of her dying sentiments. She stated that her way was clear to Jesus. Bro. Stewart states that it was a feast to his soul to converse with her upon the subject of religion. It was on a beautiful Sabbath morning when death made the summons. Bro. Stewart, being called to duty, grasped her hand and bade her farewell, to meet her in heaven. She lingered only a few moments longer, when her hands were folded across her breast and she fell asleep in Jesus.

A FRIEND.

THOMAS JOSHUA SMALL was born in Alabama, August 16, 1813, and died of congestion of the lungs, in Avoyelles parish, La., August 31, 1877.

Dedicated to God in baptism when a child by pious parents appreciative of baptismal obligations, and reared under strictly moral and religious influences, fruit appeared in his subsequent life and character. The writer never knew a man more "diligent in business," unobtrusive in his demeanor, or conscientious in his dealings with his fellow-men. He was not a professor of religion, yet he was constant in the daily reading of the Scriptures, regular and voluntary in his contributions to the cause of Christ, and unusually susceptible of religious impression. His house was ever the welcome home of the itinerant. Many of us well remember how much pains he has been taken under his hospitable roof to minister to our physical comfort and social contentment. He evidently believed in Christ as the only hope of the sinner, but dutifully refused to make confession of his faith, and dwelt upon the discrepancy between his own imperfect character and that symmetrical, perfect Christian character of the Scriptures, which humanity may ever approximate and yet never attain.

Only three weeks elapsed when the sorrowing household were bereft of another member—the infant son, Ashley, aged two years and seven months.

S. H. SCHNEIDER.

BRO. JOHN MILLER died at his home in Wayne county, Miss., January 24, 1878. He was born in Marion district, S. C., October 21, 1803, where he spent his youth and early manhood, and joined the Methodist Church in 1830 as a seeker of pardoning grace, and two years afterward found the "pearl of great price," and ever found peace and comfort in a crucified Redeemer.

Mr. Forbes, in his book on Africa, writes: "The bird which guards the buffalo and the rhinoceros is very intelligent. The grass is often so high and dense that one could go close enough to these animals quite unperceived, but the guardian bird, sitting on the beast, sees the approach of danger, flaps its wings and screams, which causes its bulky charge to rush off from a foe he has not seen nor heard. For its reward the vigilant little watcher has the destruction of the parasites of his friend.

THE CHAMBER OF PEACE.

The pilgrim they laid in a large upper chamber, whose window opened toward the sunrising. The name of the chamber was Peace; where he slept till break of day.—Pilgrim's Progress.

In a pleasant upper chamber
Weary Christian lay,
Sleeping till the light of morning
Chased his dreams away;
Chased his dreams and sweet the dreaming,
After toiling past
Sweeter still the sunrise beaming
From the rosy east.

Through long nights of pain and sorrow,
Watchful in the gloom,
I have thought of Christian sleeping
In that peaceful room,
And he opened, fully spoken,
Talk of sacred things;
There was a loving token
From the King of kings.

Rose of heavenly refreshment
Which makes weary glad;
Joy, like wake-up chiming,
Sweet to work and live;
How calm the resting-place!
Where beloved ones lie,
Where by sleep with quiet faces
Are the weary ones.

Sweet to know the pilgrim's slumber,
Safe within his grace;
Sweet to wake next door to heaven
In a little space;
Sweet to wait another waking
Other hope to gain,
Other glory breaking,
Other sights to light!

"And There Was No More Sea."

What is meant by this symbol is explained by remembering the sea appears in the Old Testament. The Jew was not a sailor. The references in the Old Testament, and especially in the prophets, to that great ocean are such as a man would make who knew very little about it, except from having looked from the hills of Judea, and having often wondered what might be lying away out yonder at the point where sky and sea blended together. One of the three main things which it is set forth in the Old Testament as a symbol of mystery, of rebellious power, of perpetual unrest. And the promise of the cessation of that which is set forth in this way. "There was no more sea" shall be no more mystery and unrest. There shall be no more "the raging up their voices," and the dashing with impotent foam against the throne of God. There shall be no more tossing and tumult among circumstances, and no more unrest and disquiet of a sinful heart. There shall be the "new heaven and the new earth." The sea will be left, and the rest will remain, deepened and made more pure. But sorrow and all that is sorrowful, and all that is mysterious and unhappy, shall have passed away forever.

Look back and see that this thing is, while clinging straight as an arrow, true to the center. Look at the crown and wreath of the poet. Some of the mystery of God will be resolved for man; but there is enough of it left unresolved to keep us humble as we look forward to the higher life. Trust God where you cannot trace Him. Believe that He is working out the highest good of the universe, and the children of God forever, and live the life of faith that shall not yield to sight. Do this will. Put your faith in the Savior to deliver you from sin, and when the wild tossings of that great ocean of ungodly passions and lusts opposed to God shall have ceased, you will enter into a blessed rest. Your work will last and live long after the ending of time.

THE VOYAGE OF LIFE.

Life is a voyage over a stormy main, changing circumstances come rolling after each other, like the successive billows of the great deep. Tempests and storms are there as well as sailing on peaceful seas. Shall we ever get through the stormy life? Shall we ever be landed safe on the shores of eternity? Yes, if we have a good pilot on board, and a good ship under us. That pilot is Jesus, and that ship is faith in His name. Let us then, with Jesus for our pilot, launch forth into the deep of life, and we shall be landed safe on the shores of eternity.

Reverence for Jesus Christ.

We all know how lowly a reverence is paid to Jesus Christ in passage after passage by Shakespeare, the greatest intellect known, in its wide, many-sided splendors. Men like Galileo, Kepler, Bacon, Newton and Milton set the name of Jesus Christ above every other. To show that no other subject of study can claim an equal interest, Jean Paul Richter tells us that "the life of Christ conceives Him who, being the holiest among the mighty, the mightiest among the holy, lifted with His pierced hand empires off their hinges, and turned the stream of centuries out of its channel, and still governs the ages." Spinoza calls Christ the symbol of divine wisdom; Kant and Jacobi hold him up as the symbol of ideal perfection, and Schelling and Hegel as that of the union of the divine and human. "I esteem the gospels," says the latter, "to be thoroughly genuine, for there shines forth from them the reflected splendor of a subtlety, proceeding from the person of Jesus Christ, of such divine a kind as only the divine could ever have manifested upon earth." "How petty are the books of the philosophers, with all their pomp," says Rousseau, "compared with the gospels!" "Can it be that writings at once so sublime and so simple are the work of men? Can he who the life they tell of be himself no more than a mere man? Is there anything in his character of the enthusiast or the ambitious sectary? What sweetness, what purity in his ways, what touching grace in his teachings! What a loftiness in his maxims, what profound wisdom in his words! What presence of mind, what delicacy and aptness in his replies! What an empire over his passions! Where is the man, where is the sage, who knows how to act, to suffer and to die without weakness and without display? My friends, men do not invent like this, and the facts respecting Socrates, which no one doubts, are not so well attested as those about Jesus Christ. These Jews could never have struck this tone or thought of this morality, and the gospel has characteristics of truthfulness so grand, so striking, so perfectly inimitable that their inventors would be even more wonderful than he whom they portray." "Yes, if the death of Socrates be that of a sage, the life of Jesus Christ is that of a God!"

Thomas Carlyle repeatedly expresses similar sentiments. "Jesus of Nazareth," says he, "is our divinest symbol. Higher has the human thought not yet reached." "A symbol of pure personal infinite character, whose significance will ever demand to be anew inspired into, and anew made manifest." Dr. Channing says: "The character of Jesus is wholly inexplicable on human principles." Matilda Hamilton, one of the pets of Germany, in the last century, writes to a friend: "No man ever thus loved as Christ did, nor did anything so truly great and good as the Bible tells us of him ever enter into the heart of man. It is a holy love, which rises before the poor pilgrim like a star in the night, and satisfies his innermost craving, his most secret yearnings and longings." "Jesus Christ," says the exquisite genius, Herder, "is in the noblest and most perfect sense the realized ideal of humanity."

No one will accuse the first Napoleon of being either a pietist or weakling. He strode the world in his might like a Colossus, a man of gigantic intellect, however worthless and depraved in moral sense. Conversing one day at St. Helena as his custom was, about the great men of antiquity, and comparing himself with them, he suddenly turned to one of them, Mohammed, and asked him: "Can you tell me who I am?" The reply was: "You are a great conqueror who fought battles, and were successful; you have made much thought of such things, taken much glory, breaking, but there is One greater than you." "Well then," said Napoleon, "I will tell you." He then compared himself with Jesus, and with the child with himself, and with the Christ, in terms of ambiguity, and showed how Jesus far surpassed them. "I think I understand somewhat of human nature," he continued, "and I tell you all these were men, and I am a man, but not one is like him; Jesus Christ was more than man. Alexander, Cæsar, Charlemagne and myself founded great empires; but upon what did the creation of our genius depend? Upon force. Jesus alone founded his empire upon love, and to this very day millions would die for him." "The gospel is no mere book," said he at another time; "but a living creature, with a vigor, a power, which conquers all that opposes it. Here lies the book of books upon the table (touching it reverently); I do not tire of reading it, and do so daily with equal pleasure. The soul, charmed with the beauty of the gospel, is no longer its own—God possesses it entirely. He directs its thoughts and faculties; it is his. What a proof of the divinity of Jesus Christ! Yet in this absolute sovereignty he has but one aim—the spiritual perfection of the individual, the purification of his conscience, his union with what is true, the salvation of his soul. Men wonder at the conquests of Alexander, but here is a conqueror who draws men to himself for their highest good; who unites to himself, incorporates into himself, not a nation, but the whole human race!"—Gekie's Life and Words of Christ.

The Ceramic Art.

And besides all this it may be affirmed also that no other art so fully gratifies the love of beauty. Standards of beauty are arbitrary. But the ceramic art conforms to any and every standard. The highest results of civilization may be said to appear in the best union of beauty with utility. Pottery and porcelain are thus the measure, as no other art can be, of comparative civilization. If we had no other evidence we should rank the civilization of Japan as equal to that of Europe from the exquisite splendor, beauty and delicacy of her ceramic productions; and that such is the proper rank to be given it cannot now be doubted. More than two thousand years before the Christian era the Chinese and Japanese were great potters, and had reached to a high point in form and decoration. Porcelain, the finest pottery, they began to make some two hundred years before our era. At that time our ancestors were in a state of gross barbarism; while they showed skill, taste and refinement in this in other ways. As late as the seventeenth century cups of "horse-hair" or wool were used in the best castles of England, and the dishes were often square bits of board; and down even to a much later day the fingers were used to carry the meats to the mouth. It was by the agency of the Chinese and Japanese that soil more has found opportunity for its highest achievements in baked clay. And it is only because we are accustomed to see them in such common use that we are not enthusiastic in admiration of the beauty in form which domestic pottery and porcelain in table services constantly present to our view. Color, except in gems, is nowhere so brilliant and effective as in enamel, and many colors on enameled pottery and porcelain are more brilliant and expressive than in gems. The most cheerful household decorations are effected by the use of such colors on walls or in cabinets. Families brought up with such articles around them feel their civilizing and refining influences. Children grow up among them with knowledge, appreciation and love of beauty. Almost all other beauty fades or decays. Flowers are beautiful, but short lived; and oil or water paintings of flowers on paper or on canvas change and fade. I look up as I write to a bouquet of very common but very beautiful flowers painted more than a century ago by a great artist, on a Dresden vase, and they gleam with all the beauty of a summer day, and will not know the vase be broken for as beautiful a thousand years hence, when possibly the flowers themselves will be utterly unknown except from just such paintings. A fragment of white porcelain is a gem; and if it were not a common ware a white porcelain plate or cup would be as precious to a lover of beauty as the rarest vase of silver, gold or jade. The table furnished with this ware is bright and joyous to behold, a more feeding place for memories becomes important possessions to the members of the family who go away. The dearest associations of old age with childhood are connected with the home table, whether its furniture was the rarest porcelain of China or the simple and always beautiful blue and white crockery of Staffordshire. The lover of ceramic art and the collector of its treasures of beauty can afford to pity those who are unable to enter into the enjoyment which he is happy in possessing.—National Repository.

The Irishman who wished bad luck to Mr. Gladstone for the disestablishment of the Irish Church because it took away one of the grievances of the nation and left one less cause for grumbling, was not the last of his race. A Saxon tourist, meeting an Irish peasant, said: "I suppose the English buy all the pigs that you wish to sell?" "They do; bad luck to 'em, the tallants!"

Lord Castlereagh and Sir Thomas Romilly were the leaders of the bar in their day. They both died suicides. Wilberforce accounts for their aberration of intellect on the ground that they were only intermittent in their work, and they never rested on Sunday. "Poor fellow!" said Wilberforce in regard to Castlereagh. "Poor fellow! It was non-observance of the Sabbath."

At a recess while the rope walker was going through his performance a boy about twelve years old turned to an acquaintance of the same age and remarked: "Tom, don't you wish you could do that?" "Yes, I do," sadly replied Tom, "but my folks make me go to school, and are determined that I shan't never be nobody."

Religious Intelligence.

—The Unitarians have finished and dedicated a new church in Washington, costing about $60,000.

—Twenty-two men in Glasgow, Scotland, recently gave $110,000 for church extension by the Free Church.

—The sixty-first annual meeting of the American Colonization Society was held at Washington on the sixteenth of January. The Secretary of the Navy, Hon. R. W. Thompson, was among the speakers. Emigration to Liberia the coming year bids fair to be very large.

—The Convener of the Glasgow Presbytery of the Established Church has telegraphed the Pope that an interdict will be demanded against the proposed papal hierarchy from the Supreme Civil Court of Scotland, and the laws of the country will be rigidly enforced against it.

—The Baptist Year-Book reports for the Baptists of America, for 1877: Churches, about 24,000—an increase of 1,000 over last year; ministers, 14,500—an increase of about 600; baptisms, about 102,000—a decrease of perhaps 7,000; members, 2,021,000—an increase of about 92,000.

—A decision, though not a final one, has been reached in the famous Cardinal Antonelli will case. The court decides that Countess Lambertini, the deceased cardinal's alleged daughter, should be permitted to introduce evidence in support of her case, and that the defendants, the Counts Antonelli, pay the costs of this first stage of the proceedings.

—The Bishop of Carlisle has given notice of a motion, at the next meeting of York Convocation, declaring that the time has arrived for a revision and rearrangement of the principles of legislation affecting church matters. He proposes a new constitution and new canons to be passed by both convocations and approved by the Queen, with the advice and consent of Parliament.

—A resolution was recently introduced in the Glasgow Free Presbytery in favor of the appointment of a committee "to consider what steps should be taken, in concert with other evangelical bodies, under the divine blessing, to maintain our Protestant rights and liberties, and to promote the conversion of the Roman Catholic priests and people to the true faith of the gospel of Christ."

—The islands of New Britain and New Ireland which lie off the northeast coast of New Guinea, are inhabited by a race of nude savages of the Oriental Negro type. New Ireland has a population of about 11,000; but the number in New Britain is unknown. The Australian Wesleyans, who have been so successful in their missions in the Fiji, the Friendly and other islands, finding they have means to establish a new mission, have chosen the islands of New Britain and New Ireland for this purpose; hoping to open a way from them to New Guinea. The Rev. George Brown, of Sydney, chose to lead the expedition. He first went to Fiji which now contributes considerable sums of money for missions and easily found ten native catechists, with their wives, who were willing to go with him to open the new mission. The missionaries were soon fixed in suitable towns in the islands and began the study of the language of the people. A few months later seven more Fijian catechists, under the charge of a native preacher, were sent out. Mr. Brown, who is in poor health, is about to leave the mission, and the services of two or three European missionaries are called for in this place. Of one town suitable for a mission station Mr. Brown writes: "That they need a missionary is very certain, for while I was sitting talking to the chief of one of the villages one of our lads went into a house about ten yards distant to light his pipe, and found a woman engaged roasting the leg and thigh of a man who had been killed the day before by the chief whom I was talking to. Abundant proof was found of the cannibalism of the people. In one house thirty-five human lower jaw-bones were counted, and outside the same house seventy-six notches in a coconaut-tree were counted, each of which represented a human being who had been cooked and eaten there. A human hand and some other parts, all smoke-dried, were hanging in the same house." Mr. Brown made an extended exploration of the islands, and gathered some curious information. According to the solemn and positive assertion of many of the natives, there exists a race of men with tails at a place called Kalili. The natives deny most indignantly the supposition that they must be monkeys, asking if monkeys fight with spears, plant yams, make houses, etc. They say that the appendage is hard and jet-like—so much so that they have to dig a hole in the sand before they can sit down, as they die at once if the tail is broken. They also say that any child born without this appendage is destroyed for fear it should be ridiculed when it grows up." At one of the villages Mr. Brown found one of the houses in taboo. The house consisted of "three conical shaped structures, made of pandanus leaves sewn together, and about four feet in circumference at the bottom, that circumference maintained for about four feet upward. From that point the structures tapered off to a sharp point at the top. Each place was closed by a double door of plaited cocoanut and pandanus leaves. In each of these structures, and raised about three feet from the ground was a young girl, their ages apparently being eight, ten and fourteen years respectively. The girls are put into these cages at an early age, and kept until they arrive at the age of puberty, four years or upward. During the time the girls are thus confined their feet are not allowed to touch the ground. They are occasionally allowed to come out, to perform their ablutions; but they are kept from the ground during that operation by bamboos." In January last the first new church was opened. Since then five or six chapels have been erected and several schools established.—Independent.

Our Young People.

THE "COMING MAN."

A pair of very chubby legs
Encased in scarlet hose;
A pair of little stubby boots,
With rather doubtful toes;
A little kilt, a little coat,
Unlike a mother goose—
And lo! before us strides in state
The Future's "coming man."

His eyes perchance will read the stars,
And search their unknown ways;
Perchance the human heart and soul
Will open to their gaze;
Perchance their keen and searching glance
Will be a nation's light—
Those eyes that now are wistful bent
On some big fellow's kite!

That brow where mighty thoughts will dwell
In solemn, secret state,
Where fierce Ambition's restless strength
Shall war with pure Love,
Where Science from now hidden caves
New treasures shall outpour—
Is knit now with a troubled doubt—
Are "six" or "three cents more"?

Those lips that, in the coming years,
With power or prose or touch,
Whose whispered words on lightning flash
From world to world may reach;
That, so only grave, may speak command,
Or, smiling, win control—
Are pursing now for "circus bread"
With all a baby's soul.

Those hands—those little boyish hands—
So sticky, small and brown,
Those hands, whose only plan as yet
Is to tear all order down—
Who knows what hidden strength may be
Within their infant grasp,
Though now 'tis but a tally-tick,
Or sturdy hold they clasp.

All blessings on those little hands,
Whose work is yet undone;
And blessings on those little feet,
Whose race is yet unrun;
And blessings on the little brain
That has not learned to plan
What for the Future hopes in store,
God bless the coming man.

From Our Little Friends.

JACKSON, LA., March 5, 1878.

DEAR DR. PARKER: Last October your friend and mine—good Mrs. Shelmire—gave me a hen and ten little chickens. I sold some of the chickens, and a number of Minnie's (my hen) eggs, the proceeds amounting to $2.50, which I send you, for the Mexican mission. Mrs. MacAustin gave me a hen. She, too, is to be a missionary hen. As a little girl cannot "go" to the heathen, I am glad to "send" this small offering to those who do not love Jesus.

Your little friend,

MARTHA ANDREWS.

Nobody the Editor.—Thanks to Martha for her missionary contribution. We shall turn the money over to Bishop Keener, to be devoted to our missions in Mexico.

WASHINGTON PARISH, LA., Feb. 27, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old. I love your paper very much. We have no Sabbath school this year, but we hope to have one soon. I am learning to sew. I have made one quilt. I have two little sisters and one little brother. "Washpot" is found in Psalms lx, 8. Now I will ask the little boys and girls some questions: Where are "grasshopper," "pomegranate" and "caterpillar" found in the Bible? Tell Miss Emma Malona Moore that Aaron died on Mount Hor. It is found in Numbers xx, 28.

From your little Methodist friend,

MARY JANE PERRITT.

PICKENS, MISS., Feb. 26, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy eight years old, and this is the first letter I ever wrote; so you must make all excuses. What do you think of that, Mr. Editor—writing one's first letter for publication!

I go to school at home, and, besides sister and myself, we have other pupils. About a week or so ago I got my teacher to read me every piece of poetry in your paper in search of a speech, and that piece about "Just Once" was specially good.

I expect to visit your grand city soon, on the Mardi Gras occasion. While there I am going to ask papa to take me to see you.

Not to be an exception to the rule, I will also ask a Bible question: Who is the youngest Christian spoken of in the Bible?

From your fine young friend,

HIRAM CLARK TYE.

Chamoi-Hunting in the Alps

There are yet in the Alps many pasturages on high mountain ridges that neither cows nor goats are able to ascend. These are the lonely retreats of the grayish-brown chamois that roam in flocks from one rendezvous to another, and there feed, after the guards have been posted so that they may be made aware of any sudden attack.

For hours at a time these guards stand on the summit of a rock where there is barely room enough for the feet of a chamois. With its pointed horns the chamois defends itself from eagles and vultures; but from the hunter's balls it secures safety only by vigilance and swiftness as well as by bold leaps up and down steep precipices, and sometimes over wide chasms.

It excites the greatest astonishment to see with what certainty and address these animals, with the smallest start, descry and make use of an almost perpendicular wall as a means of escape, that man would think an impossible outlet. The most courageous inhabitants of the Alps take a particular pleasure in looking for and killing the chamois in the wilds of the highest mountains.

Great courage, great presence of mind and great perseverance are wanted in chamois-hunting. With the thick-soled shoes, the iron-tipped stick, the pointed hat ornamented with a chamois beard, and the double-barrel rifle, the hunter starts in the evening, or very early in the morning, to surprise the chamois at their pasturages.

The giddy path lies up steep walls, over precipices, masses of rolling stones, and fields of snow and ice. To help himself in danger the hunter carries also an ax and a rope; with these he cuts steps, or lets himself down from rock to rock. If he has finally reached the heights where the chamois feed he must approach them without being seen, and must take care that the wind blows from where the chamois are toward him. It is often necessary to take a round about way, for many hours at a time, over cliffs and precipitous rocks; and it is not rare for a hunter to be from eight to fourteen days before he can obtain a shot.

In such a hunt it is not a rare occurrence if he passes the night under the blue sky, between high, snow-covered mountains. He generally takes with him provisions for several days. If the chamois have caught sight of him they escape up the rocks; the hunter follows them, often incurring great danger in climbing, when he has reached a place where he can neither go forward nor backward.

If the chamois have become quiet in the meantime the hunter looks for a hiding-place, where he lurks until the chamois come near enough to be shot at; then it costs one or two of them their lives, as the chamois hunter never misses. If he has killed one, he commences a new and dangerous work. He must go in quest of the prey that has perhaps fallen over a precipice; and then, with from a hundred to a hundred and fifty pounds burden, he will return home.

He binds the chamois' feet together, and places them so that the feet are on his forehead, and the rest of the body is on his shoulders and back. With this burden he goes up and down precipitous cliffs, over slippery fields of snow and dangerous glaciers. Often thick fogs come up, so that he can see but a few feet ahead; or a furious tempest breaks out that threatens to precipitate the hunter into the abyss; or vultures hurl themselves down on his shelter, when he climbs a steep precipice, and try to push him down.

It is no wonder, therefore, that yearly chamois-hunters lose their lives in falling down a gap in the ice, or a precipice; and, nevertheless, other inhabitants of the Alps undertake this dangerous chase, that only brings them a few florins, as only the skin and horns of the chamois are bought.—Sunday Magazine.

Be Polite.

Many children as they grow older, are obliged to learn the rules of politeness as they would a lesson. The consequence is when they appear in society they are awkward and blundering. On the other hand, children who have been accustomed to politeness at home are at their ease in the most polished circles, and are saved that confusion and bitter self-condemnation which are sure to follow any breach of the rules of etiquette.

Some children, learning from their parents, seem to consider politeness at home affectation. Brothers who would jump up with alacrity to give an easy chair to some dashing miss of their acquaintance will appropriate it to themselves when at home without the slightest apparent consciousness of the presence of a sister, or perhaps a mother.

"My brother is as polite to me as any one else when I go out with him," said a girl proudly to a companion. What a reflection on his manners at home! A sister will, perhaps, accidentally knock over some of the tools with which her brother is busy. An apology involuntarily rises to her lips, but she stifles it on considering that it is only Jack; and all the satisfaction he is offered for disordered plans is a blunt "O!" Angry reproaches are sure to follow. "You are really ungallant to talk so about such a thing. You know I didn't mean to" is the equally angry rejoinder. Why did she not say so? Two words would have saved all the trouble. In their plays children are constantly meeting with little accidents, for which they should be taught to apologize. I have seen the cheek of a child flush with anger, his eyes flash, and a little hand raised to strike the unfortunate breaker of a toy, when, as if by magic, the blow was arrested by these words: "Excuse me; I did not mean to."

Polish is not everything. It is, however, something. It is better to have a black kettle that is sound than a bright one with a hole in the bottom; but there is no reason why the sound one should not be bright too.

It is of the first importance that children should possess those sterling qualities which fit them for battle with temptation and sin; but do not send them out in the world in great clod-hopper boots. Shine them up and both happiness and influence will be increased.—Advance.

BE KIND BOYS.—You are made to be kind boys—generous, magnanimous. If there is a boy in school who has a club-foot, don't let him know you ever saw it. If there is a poor boy with ragged clothes don't talk about rags in his hearing. If there is a lame boy, assign him some part of the game which does not require running. If there is a hungry one, give him part of your dinner. If there is a dull one, help him to get his lesson. If there is a bright one, be not envious of him; for if one boy is proud of his talents, and another is envious of them, there are two great wrongs, and no more talent than before. If a larger or stronger boy has injured you, and is sorry for it, forgive him. All the school will show, by their countenances how much better it is than to have a great fight.—Horace Mann.

That Dispute by the Way.

Doubtless the disciples thought that the kingdom was about to appear, and their heads were filled with the anticipations of a visible and earthly glory. The dispute as to who should be greatest was among themselves. The Master was near, but they supposed he was out of hearing. What confusion came upon them when, in the house at Capernaum, he put the searching question! At this time they were ashamed of themselves. The lesson of the little child, and its pointed application, ought to have sufficed to correct the risings and unhallowed ambition. But shortly afterward, as they came nearer to Jerusalem, and it seemed that the grand Messianic demonstration must almost immediately burst upon them, James and John could not forbear privately to press their own claims upon the Savior's attention.

In that dispute by the way they had probably insisted that the primacy belonged to them, and, in spite of the rebuke given them at Capernaum, they now, through their mother, make their request to the Lord himself. This was something bolder than the dispute among the company of disciples, and yet the fact that they persuaded their mother to speak for them shows that they somewhat distrusted the propriety of their demand. The mother of Zebedee's children was in perfect accordwith her sons. Her maternal pride would be gratified by the elevation of her sons to the posts of honor, but the desire was original and strongest in the breasts of James and John. The most humiliating feature in the transaction was the evident purpose to get ahead of the other disciples, and to gain an advantage over them. That dispute by the way had enlightened them concerning the estimations of the rest, and they must anticipate the measure which the others meditated by taking it first themselves. The displeasure of the ten may have sprung from superior virtue, or it may have arisen from the feeling that these Boanerges had outwitted them in the endeavor to be greatest.

This disclosure of a really carnal ambition in the disciples is one of the most striking things in their character and history. We must remember, however, that at the time they had no correct conception of the purely spiritual nature of Christ's kingdom, and that they shared the prevailing error that Messiah's reign was to be one of earthly splendor and power. After Pentecost they were wholly cured of this misconception as to the nature of the kingdom, and after that event there were no more disputes concerning who should be the greatest. No more disputes among the apostles, but we cannot say as much of the Christian church and ministry. A history so discreditable to the apostles was put into the inspired record for the learning and admonition of those upon whom the ends of the world have come. It stands as a lesson and warning to the church throughout all time.

These aspiring disciples were far from being bad men, but they yielded to a desire that naturally dominates the mind not wholly under the leadings of the Holy Spirit. We cannot imagine that the Spirit moderates other desires than to be good and useful. "If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all." The greatness which the disciples disputed about was the greatness of place, of reputation and power, and not the real greatness of holiness, self sacrifice and, of consecrated service. As is often the case with good men, the motives of the sons of Zebedee and of the rest were mixed. They may have said to themselves: Our elevation to the posts of honor will be for the welfare of the kingdom. The Master has no more faithful followers; none can serve him so well, and none have made greater sacrifices to become his disciples. Probably each man of them was persuaded that he was moved to this desire by the holiest influences, and felt himself divinely called to its realization.

The selfish rivalry, the questionable and underhanded measures, the temper of the dispute, and the traces of conscious duplicity, were seemingly overshadowed by the prize that possessed their imagination. When they would have called fire to come down from heaven they did not know what spirit they were of. And in the dispute about who should be greatest their self-deception was equally profound. Judas Iscariot was the only one of the twelve who was not perfectly loyal and perfectly sincere. What he had to say in the dispute by the way, and afterward, when the conduct of James and John aroused the displeasure of the ten, we can only conjecture. His purpose of betrayal may have been born of that hour. He would be the greatest, or he would sell his Master. The others went not so far. In his case the wicked flame kindled into hell. In the others it was put out, and the flame of love, humility and heaven was kindled in its place. John disputing with his fellow-disciples about who should be greatest, and using his mother to advance his interests with Christ, and John of the eagle wing and eagle eye, as he penned the fourth gospel, and preached and wrote of love, are in wonderful contrast. What a gulf between the spirit of the hot disputant by the way, the ambitious aspirant for the primacy, and the spirit of him who afterward unfolds to us the innermost truth and heart of Christ!

These disputants were half ashamed of their groveling and selfish ambition at the time, but with what loathing and disgust and self-abasement must they not have looked upon it when the baptism of fire came, and when the carnal and earthly gave way before the tide of spiritual light and power. After that a very different ambition possessed them. They disputed no more about greatness. Thenceforth they were clothed with humility, knowing no other desire than that of working and suffering for Christ, and cherishing no other emulation than that of being most faithful and most devoted in the ministry of salvation.

City of Mexico Mission.

City of Mexico, March 18, 1878.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener, New Orleans, La.

Dear Brother—I have been closely and constantly engaged in my work since my last letter, and feel much encouraged—not so much at the success as the prospects. Truly there are many and great difficulties in the way of our work, but none, I think, that may not be overcome by prudence, perseverance and divine help.

Last week I started out the missionaries and made a trip myself. I concluded not to send Escobar to San Luis at present, but make him useful here. He and Bro. Villegas attend to the church in the city, and do other special service, as occasion and the interest of the work demand. I am very well pleased with him.

Mota has gone to Cuernavaca, but I have not heard from him yet. I expect to go down myself this week and arrange for permanent services there. I learn that the State officers in Cuernavaca are favorable to our cause, and the people desirous of attention. It is the capital, and will serve as headquarters for that section of country. Other towns are near at hand and promise something good. John Butler visited one of these last week, three miles from Cuernavaca, and came upon some people under a tree singing our hymns. He preached to them. Hope to make a good report from Cuernavaca soon.

Juarez has gone to Leon, taking with him, contrary to my expectation, the young man I mentioned in a former letter. I requested him to stop at Queretero and see if we could do anything there. In a letter from him, read this morning, he says he found some parties to whom he had letters of introduction, but they had to keep retired. The State and city officers, and also the working classes, are fanatics. The priests walk the streets in their robes, in violation of the law. He does not think a mission could be well established there under two years, unless a change in public officers should take place sooner.

I made a visit myself last week to Toluca, the capital of the State of Mexico. Pascoe, an "Independent," has established a small work there; also prints a paper there with means furnished from England. He has married a Mexican and moved farther west. I found material for a good society. The congregation, I learned, had become very small. There was a nice room rented and well furnished. But Pascoe was not there, and no one could tell anything about his purposes or arrangements. I wrote Pascoe a letter and returned to the city. I understand an application will be made formally for at least a part of the congregation to be received into our church. An excellent school can be had there. The city is improving. The country is very fine. Other little towns are in reach.

Another application for recognition has been made to us from a small town sixteen or eighteen miles southeast of the city, where there is a congregation of about thirty five persons. They have bought a lot and are trying to build a church. I expect to see some of their representatives to-day. There are other similar cases I might mention. There is plenty of work, therefore, for all the men and means we can command, and I think the prospect is encouraging, both in the cities and country towns. I am not sure but that the latter promise us a more speedy result than the former. But the cities must be centers of districts.

Our charge here is still in a very backward condition, but gradually improving. All our services are held regularly, and receive good attention. Last Sunday night, in anticipation of Bros. Juarez and Mota leaving for other fields, I made a sacramental occasion. It was as quiet and solemn a service as I ever conducted in the States. Besides—our—four native preachers, there were twenty-five communicants, but not all our members.

Last night we were interrupted in our services, one man riding into the church on horseback. He found his match in our porter, who captured the gentleman, and to-day he is in jail. While the porter was after this man (who was accompanied by two others) the fourth man came into the room and threw a large stone with great force into the congregation, but without damage. In the absence of the porter—our war man—he made good his escape. I think public sentiment and the officers of the city, district and republic of Mexico will protect us in our religious services.

A few days ago we made a call on the president of the republic, who received us kindly and treated us with great consideration. Though other ladies were present, he selected my wife to take his arm as he himself showed us through the various departments of the White House. On leaving he gave my wife a large photograph of himself, with his compliments and signature written by himself on the back of it. I told him I had come here to stay, and that I should watch with interest, and aid in any way I could, the prosperity of the country. He could not, under the circumstances, give any partizan expression on the subject of religion; and while his replies and good wishes were general, they were very encouraging. Some of the brethren expressed surprise on hearing that we had called on President Diaz. They had not thought of such a thing. I am confident that after awhile we shall get under full headway in this city. If we cherish carefully our two schools, they will finally yield an abundant harvest.

The male school is progressing as heretofore. My female teacher is proving herself successful in her calling.

I wish to enlist the Ladies' Missionary Society of New Orleans in this female school. They can make it a telling success and power in our mission work. If you think best, please ask them at once to undertake to furnish the means for its support. I think they will delight to do this work. It will not be necessary for them to send out a teacher at present, as there will be some advantage in using native teachers, as long as they can do well all that is required. I will write to Nashville and Richmond to get the ladies there enlisted in some other feature of our work, or a school at some other place. Will write also to personal friends at other points, to awaken as much interest as possible. I wish by the next steamer to send forward some articles for the papers, for by that time I can speak more understandingly than I have so far been able to do. I hope for the early coming of the two native brethren at Vanderbilt, and two or three more American brethren, if they can be found of the right sort. There are two or three young brethren at Vanderbilt studying Spanish. Of course it will be best for them to acquire considerable knowledge of the language before coming. It may be well to have at least one American on hand to be ready for such work.

My object is to lay out, as soon as possible, as much work as can be fully developed during the year. By this plan we can take choice of the places now open, get good points from which to radiate, and work to better advantage hereafter.

The papers you sent were gladly received. The children were pleased with the pictures, as that folly (Mardi Gras) has gone out of date in this country.

Returning so late from Toluca, and the mail closing unexpectedly soon, I shall have to leave some of my correspondence over to the next steamer.

Much love to yourself and your kind family from us all.

Yours in Christ,

W. M. Patterson.

A Loose Statement.

"While, therefore, the Master of the heart has ability to enforce his claim, with infinite patience and wisdom he condescends to persuade men to tender their submission." The above is from the lips of one of New York's great preachers. He is by no means a pronounced Calvinist. He began his sermon by a strong assertion of the opposite to the quotation, and of everything that Calvinism teaches on the subject of man's freedom and God's power. "Every man's house is his castle. Still more is every man's heart. He (man) is sovereign over all its outgoing expressions and demonstrations, all the incoming inspirations and influences. He may bar its door to all intruders." Language could not be much stronger, nor statement more correct. And yet in the paragraph following the opening sentence above, was plottered one contradicting himself, and miserably mangling one of the grandest truths of revelation. In the first he asserts man's freedom, and settles the matter of his personal responsibility in the issues of his salvation. In the second he falls into the old slough of Calvinism, and throws the whole responsibility upon God, the Father, with all its logical results—making him the author of sin, and by a fixed decree damning men and infants. Both of the preacher's statements cannot be true. They are as far apart as the poles. If man is the sovereign of his own heart (will, volitions,) then God has no ability to enforce his claim to man's obedience. If man is thus free and does not obey, then the responsibility rests where it belongs—upon man. But if God has the ability, against man's will, to enforce obedience, and does not do it, then the logical sequence of Calvinism is true, and he becomes the author of man's evil in life and final damnation in death.

In matters physical and creative we know no limit to God's power. He can create, and he may be able to destroy. We know he can change from one form to another. He may be able to annihilate. We do not know. But we do know from his own word, and from the very nature of the case, that in matters moral and religious he has self imposed limitations, as binding upon him as his own nature. It is no reflection upon his glory or power to say he cannot do some things—that he cannot work contradictions, that he cannot lie, and that he cannot force man's will, and man remain man—a free and responsible being.

The old answer to the infidel's demand is that it is true that God has all wisdom and knows sin; that he is all goodness, and desires to prevent sin; that he has all power, and could prevent sin; but his not doing it is for some good reason, that he cannot make known to us. This did not and does not now, nor will it ever, satisfy the questioner. But when we meet the issue squarely, as Dr. Tyng did in the opening sentence of his sermon—"Still more is every man's heart his castle. He is sovereign over all the outgoing expressions and demonstrations, and all the incoming inspirations and influences. He may bar its door to all intruders whom he does not choose to admit"—we get rid of the strong pillar of infidelity, and it falls to the ground. The sinner stands out clear and well defined in his own responsibility. The Savior's call, "Come unto me," and his cry, "Ye will not," etc., has some meaning. It gives significance to his life. Otherwise it is meaningless.

To say that while, therefore, the Master of the heart (God) has ability to enforce his claim, with infinite patience and wisdom he condescends to persuade men to tender their submission, is to present in very loose statement the old answer to the old difficulty.

If he has the "ability," why does he not instantly "enforce his claim," and stay the wave of sin and drive back the waves of death? If he "has the ability to enforce his claim," and men die by thousands, while he is waiting in patience and wisdom to persuade them, to whom does responsibility attach? If it is best to persuade in patience and wisdom, why is it best? How is it best when men will not be persuaded, but go on in sin and die?

We have but little thought that Dr. Tyng designed to teach such a horrid thing. It is well to have the form of sound words. "Let all things be done decently and in order" had reference, doubtless, to speech, as well as to form and ceremony. When men attain to such pulpit eminence that the publication of their sermons is called for, the form of sound words becomes doubly important. Loose, unguarded speech in the heat and excitement of pulpit work, explained perhaps at the moment, may be pardoned. But when committed to publication there is no excuse.

The New Orleans District Conference met at Baton Rouge on Friday, April 5. Two sessions of about five hours each sufficed for the dispatch of business, and the Conference adjourned sine die on Saturday, April 6. The session was very pleasant, and a good religious interest prevailed. Congregations were large. On Sunday night many in the congregation bowed for prayers, the altar was filled with penitents, there were several conversions, and twelve persons applied for membership. The pastor, Bro. Sawyer, has the church in Baton Rouge in fine trim, and everything seems to be moving forward encouragingly. About fifty have applied for membership since the first of January, and the most of them have been received according to the Discipline; others will be received in due time. The love-feast on Sunday afternoon was one of the best we have ever attended anywhere. The basement was full, and there was no halting in the speaking. Nearly all the members attend class meeting, and the weekly prayer meeting is large and lively. The spiritual state of the district is very good. It was expected that Bishop Keener would preside, but his health was not sufficiently restored for him to leave home. His absence was universally regretted. Bros. Fauntleroy, Werlein, Walker and Hannon did the preaching, Bro. Sawyer much of the exhorting, and the presiding elder had an easy time. The following are the delegates to the Annual Conference: Alvan E. Read, George W. Hamilton, J. G. Parham, R. M. Walmsley. Reserves: W. H. Foster, J. W. Adams, B. O. L. Rayne.

The next District Conference is to be held at the St. Charles Avenue church, New Orleans. The steamers Katie, Ouachita Belle and John H. Hanna carried the members of the Conference at a trifle over half fare. The people of Baton Rouge seemed to enjoy the Conference highly, their hospitality was worthy of the occasion, and the members of the body all had a delightful time.

We would write an article on class meetings again if we thought it worth while. We have done it from time to time, but there will be no class meetings unless the pastor organizes them and goes forward himself in leading them. Our Methodist machinery was constructed for the needs of a living and spiritual church. When the spirituality runs low it is very hard to get people to attend class meetings, or to speak in love feast. Immediately after a revival we have noticed that the people took out to class meeting, and as they grow cold the attendance falls off. Perhaps if the class meetings had been well and judiciously led the interest would have continued. Class meetings would promote the spirituality and bring about revivals. If we could induce the members to attend, and it is certain that they will perpetuate revival influences, and greatly help to train the young converts. But it is exceedingly difficult to start class meetings where they have fallen into neglect until the church is awakened and revived. The Methodist drill is the best in the world, but it takes a great deal of religion to carry it out. There are some churches that never come to close quarters in dealing with souls. Prayer books and Sunday services can be managed and enjoyed by people who have not the fervor to carry them through a love-feast. Without this fervent type of experience the class meeting is dull, if not repulsive. If we can obtain a degree of spiritual power, this will reach its maximum in the class meetings, and the class meetings will live while the spirituality lives. We would not wait for a revival before attempting to organize classes, but we would aim to bring the church up to a revival point, and keep it there, and then with proper care the class meeting will flourish, and the people will love it as one of the most delightful means of grace. If our young brother determines to have class meetings, and works and prays and preaches for them, he will be apt to succeed.

We may despise the world, but we cannot do without it.—Baron Wessenburg.

Sunday School Missionary Societies.

To interest the children in the great missionary enterprises of the church is of acknowledged importance. By this means we increase our missionary revenues and raise up educated supporters of the gospel. But the efforts made have not, save in few cases and places, met expectation. The organization of a missionary society within the Sunday school, with monthly or quarterly collections, and annual reports to the Conference, have awakened temporary interest, but have lacked the permanency of principle. Collections one year have been gratifying, but the next marked a large deficit. Much, doubtless, depends upon the missionary sympathy and fidelity of the pastor, but upon him rests not the sole nor chief responsibility. The objects of the organization are not well defined to the children's minds. Foreign missions is to them a great, general, abstract something, beyond their comprehension. Their money is cast into the treasury and they hear if no more. They contribute to foreign missions without an intelligent idea as to what they are doing. They need something tangible, specific, objective, to command their faith and reward their zeal. To secure this, each society should designate a specific object to which its funds shall be applied. If to support a native preacher, Bible woman or teacher, and regular reports are sent as to the society, the children will see the results of their labors, and will have a perpetual stimulus to their faith. Should one school be unable to support a native preacher to attain the object designated, two or more might unite, and thus guarantee success. I am just in receipt of a letter from Rev. J. W. Lambuth, which makes this suggestion, and has inspired this communication. He says: "Two or three schools might unite and support a native preacher, whose salary is about eight dollars per month. Several schools might unite in the support of a day school in China, costing seven or eight dollars a month. Ten or fifteen could unite in raising funds to build us a church somewhere in the country, by the sum of three hundred dollars could raise enough to purchase the land and build the church on, say one hundred and fifty dollars. In this way we can get churches of our own, and not have to pay rent every month. Some six or eight societies could collect money to pay a Bible-woman to go and read the Bible to the heathen women."

This, to my mind, is wise, and the remedy for the present difficulty. If adopted it will initiate a grand forward movement in the missionary enterprises of the church. Eight dollars per month is a small amount, and could be easily raised by many schools in the Mississippi Conference. A missionary society has been organized in the Sunday school at Vicksburg, and has undertaken the support of a native preacher in China. The collections thus far insure success. If many schools will act upon the suggestion of Bro. Lambuth our foreign work must be greatly enlarged.

An Antinomian reproached Mr. Wesley and Hall with preaching "a legal gospel." "Do you acknowledge," asked Mr. Hall, "the Ten Commandments?" "Certainly not," replied Mr. Wesley; "said Mary Hall to the servants, 'Show that man the door, and forbear upon pain of death to let the fools in.'"

THE STOCKHOLM (Sweden) Aftonbladet says: "His majesty the King has been pleased to buy of the Academy of Music for occasion of the visit with an organ of superior quality, built by the Mason & Hamlin Organ Company, U. S. A. On the front of the organ is an inscription stating: 'King Oscar II to the Royal Academy of Music, the 24 March, 1878.' The Mason & Hamlin Company also received an official letter of thanks from the royal organ makers to the King of Sweden and Norway. This is quite a compliment to these well-known American manufacturers, whose organs are almost as famous in Europe as in America."—New York Tribune and Times.

DENTIST.—The card of George J. Friedrichs, Jr., appears in this paper. Dr. Friedrichs is considered one of the best dentists in this city. He has every advantage for acquiring a thorough knowledge of his profession, and has improved his opportunities. A great many of those who have had work performed by him, and other competent judges, consider him without a superior. His charges are very reasonable.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is an apparent at American House, Boston, is one of the characteristics of that well regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular house offers an opportunity seldom found at so centrally a first-class house, having reduced its rates to $2 and $2.50 per day.

SHAKSPEARE IRON WORKS.—This well-known establishment is putting up first-class engines, saw mills, cotton gins and other implements of agricultural use for many of our planters, and also in other States. Their work is unsurpassed for durability, for workmanship and for moderate prices.

GEORGE STROUD, at his marble works, 1514 Charles street, has unusual facilities for making the most elaborate and costly monuments, tombs, vaults, as well as the more simple and cheaper. His designs are artistic, his workmanship first excellence, and his charges really low.

COMPOUND OXYGEN TREATMENT.

See advertisement of Drs. Starkey & Palen. In a late number of Arthur's Home Magazine the editor, T. S. Arthur, says: "Two or three years ago we spoke very favorably of this treatment. Since then we have had large opportunity for observing its effects, as well in our own case as in that of others, and can now speak of it with even greater confidence than before. One of the marked effects attendant on this treatment is an increase of healthy action in the whole system, every part of which seems to respond to the influx of a new life. We found this especially so in our own case, and in that of many others with whom we have conversed. We advise all who are suffering from chronic ailments to send for Dr Starkey's Treatise on Compound Oxygen, and its mode of cure. It is a little book of two hundred pages, and will be mailed free.

OFFICIAL MAIL PACKET.—The

fine steamer Facchon, commanded by Capt. R. H. Brand, will make regular trips to Wa hington, and take freight or all way landings. To our friends who may have occasion to come to the city we would kindly commend this boat. Capt. Brand is known to many of our readers as a polite and attentive gentleman to travel with. Those who have produce to ship or goods to be brought from the city should select the Facchon.

J. B. WOLFE & Co. advertise their cotton gin in to-day's ADVOCATE. This gin has been in operation 12 and 15 for as we know, has given entire satisfaction to all who have used it. The inventor, Lionel Pratt, has been one of our subscribers for a number of years and no doubt many of our readers are personally acquainted with him. Those who purchase the gin can rely upon its being exactly as represented.

SINGER SEWING MACHINE.—S. E.

Randle, the manager of the above well known sewing machine company for the South, is prepared with a standard machine to compete in perfection with the cheap shuttle machines, which of late have endeavored to be foisted upon the discriminating public, but with ill success. Call and be convinced at No. 8 Canal street.

THE New Louisiana Remedy for the cure of colds, coughs and kindred diseases will be found advertised in this paper. We hardly to dread be a great many who have used it, and the large sales must all be evidence of its excellence in the cases of complaints it is offered to. It can be obtained from any druggist generally, and at the depot, 206 Camp street, New Orleans.

ATTENTION is called to the notices of Steers & Morse and S. B. Steers & Co. These gentlemen deserve great credit for the intelligence and energy displayed in perfecting their press, and we are pleased to note the success which has met their efforts. The communications in another column will be of interest to every one engaged in the cotton business.

ANY of our readers who may wish to purchase anything in the line of printing presses for job work, or type of any description, are referred to the advertisement of Gidding & Co., Boston. They received prizes at the Centennial Exhibition for superior presses, and are also to sell good presses at low figures.

ADMIRED BY ALL.

Every person who has used Dr. Price's Toilet Perfumes admires them. His Pet Rose is enchanting; the fragrance of sweet blossoms; his Alpha Bouquet delicately delightful—the odor of dainty buds; while the Floral Riches surpasses in rich, fresh flowery odor any Cologne or toilet water ever made.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

From the Bulletin.

Extraordinary Compressing.

The new Morse compresses erected in this city during the present season are producing astonishing results by way of largely increased cargoes of cotton from this port.

The ship Mary E Riggs, of 1,277 tons, American register (1,226 British, class) just received a cargo of 5,400 bales of cotton, weighing 2,568,640 pounds; making 2,011 per ton American and 2,095 pounds per ton British measurement.

The final cargo of this ship from this port was 3,740 bales; the last and largest previous to the present one was 4,361 bales, weighing 1,913,248 pounds. Her present cargo of 5,400 bales exceeds her largest previous cargo, 1,036 bales or 624,112 pounds. With freight at one cent per pound and five per cent primage the value of this increase, for this medium sized vessel, is about $6,000. This cargo was compressed, without the advantage of a "tie puller," in the ordinary course of business, by the Fiftors' Press, one of the seven large Morse compresses recently erected in New Orleans by S. B. Steers & Co.

The only cargoes of single bales approximating this one are the following:

The Minnie H. Gerow (1,301 tons American) last season, from the Champion Press, 2,481,700 pounds per tons measurement.

The Western Empire (1,327 tons American) registered last season, from the Champlain Press, 2,622 per ton.

The Minnie H. Gerow this season, from the International Press (Taylor hydraulic, 61 inch cylinders), 2,611,936 2,028 pounds per ton.

But in all these cargoes of 1,301, 2,022 and 2,028 per ton measurement, the pullers were used, for which is claimed an advantage of 20 per cent.

If the present cargo of the Mary E Riggs had had this advantage, her 2,011 pounds per ton American, and 2,095 British, would have been 2,413 and 2,514 per ton, or say 20 per cent. larger than any cargo of single bales ever cleared in this country.

The only cargo exceeding the above named was that of the Western Empire, recently loaded here, of 2,170 pounds per ton, consisting of 1,630 bales, of which 2,500 were from the Champion Press, and the remainder, about 1,000, largely from the new Morse presses. But in this case "a large quantity" of the cotton was doubled, and the Gibson tie-puller used, for the whole cargo. Making due allowance for these advantages, the compressing of the Mary E. Riggs' cargo so as to stow 2,011 pounds per ton, American measurement, and 2,095 British, without tie-puller, is claimed to be largely superior to any compressing yet done in this country.

Mary E. Riggs' largest previous cargo of 1,301 bales averaged only 415 pounds per bale. The present cargo of 5,400 averages 476. The gain in bales is 18, therefore over 1,400, instead of 1,076.

The average of cargoes from this and other ports previous to 1877 was only say 1,100 pounds to each ton of vessel's measurement.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

FEMALES who have languished for years in helpless weakness and despondency recuperate with great rapidity under the invigorating influence of Dr. HARTER'S IRON TONIC. For sale by all druggists.

IN numberless instances constitutions greatly impaired, and apparently ruined by a long residence in a bilious climate, have been entirely restored by the continued and efficient use of Dr. HARTER'S ELIXIR OF WILD CHERRY. For sale by all druggists.

THE BEST PROOF for the fact that Dr. T. Wilhoft's Anti-Periodic or Fever and Ague Tonic, is the most reliable Chill Tonic in the world, we find in the statement that Finley & Thompson, the large wholesale druggists in New Orleans, guarantee that it cures Chills and Fever in every instance, and that it does not contain any Quinine, Arsenic, Strychnine or any other poisonous drug. For sale by a l druggists.

A VALUABLE DISCOVERY.—Dr. C. W. Benson, a practicing physician of No. 106 North Eutaw street, Baltimore, Md. (who has paid much attention to nervous diseases), has discovered that extract of celery and chamomile, combined in a certain proportion, invariably cures headache, either bilious, dyspeptic nervous or sick headache, neuralgia and nervousness. This is a triumph in medical chemistry, and sufferers all over the country are ordering by mail. He prepares it in pills at twenty cents per box. The Doctor is largely known and highly respected in Baltimore.—Episcopal Methodist.

☞ These Pills can be ordered through any Druggist, or sent postage free.

POZZONI'S MEDICATED COMPLEXION POWDER is acknowledged by thousands of ladies, who use it daily, to be the only preparation that does not produce the sickly appearance so often seen in the paste. Mothers can apply it to infants who become chafed with a surety of immediate relief. Removes all eruptions. Price, 50 cents and $1 per box. Sold by druggists, and at depot, 607 North Sixth street, St. Louis. (Lindell Hotel.)

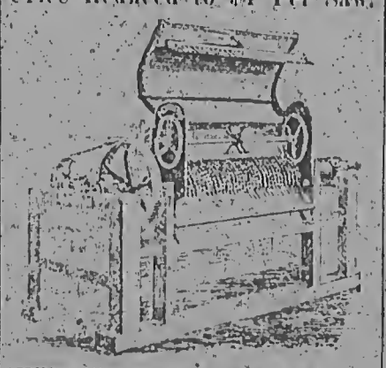
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1878.

Price Reduced to $4 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It dry cleans all fiber and seeds of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint From the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work with the same time while economizing steam or animal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value given by length of staple with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every bale ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

A CARD.

THE MORSE COTTON COMPRESS, WITH LIFT & ROYAL PRESSERS, of these Morse Presses ranging from $24,000 to $30,000, sold in less than one year.

S. B. STEERS & Co. have orders already for several for next season larger and more powerful than any ever before constructed. Some are 16 feet constructed. So that bales may be "tie-lifted" should the shipper so elect (by this expensive as well as very obnoxious process) to the greatest possible density. The Morse Presses already erected can be altered, at a small expense so as to do single bales with facility. Some of the new Morse Presses so far this season compressed above one hundred bales, and several have compressed from 60 to 70 bales. These subject of Presses are beyond the reach of all competition. The steam cylinders can be altered to any size so as to give any power wanted in the least space to the Press. This Press with a cotton shed, is as compact as the old "hog Pen," leaving the greatest possible security and efficiency of its parts. S. B. Steers & Co. are prepared to guarantee that the Morse Press will make bales more compact at less cost and a greater dispatch and less expense for repairs than any Press.

Further particulars about new Presses to be given in next week's issue of this paper.

Notice to Agents.

THE demand for Bishop Marvin's book, "THE FAST LAY WAY OF THE WEST," has become so great that it is impossible for me to fill orders for agents promptly and attend to the work of publishing the book. We have therefore made arrangements with Lucas D. Patterson, agent of the Advocate Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn., to be general agent for its sale to all parties who may apply for agencies, and all orders for agencies must be made to him. Those who have heretofore been supplied direct from us will be supplied by Mr. Patterson.

CUTTING AND KEEPING FLOWERS.

A great deal has been written on the preservation of cut flowers, but the matter is still imperfectly understood by most people. It is important to know not only how to take care of them after being cut, but how to cut them. On this latter point a practical hint may be of service to our readers. It might not occur to them that it could make any serious difference whether the stems were broken off or cut with knife or scissors. A sharp knife is the right tool for the purpose, as it leaves the sap-vessels of the stems open for the absorption of water, while scissors crush and compress these vessels, so that their absorptive power is more or less destroyed. Like injury may be done in breaking off the stems, especially if they are tough.

If the flowers are not put into water immediately, the ends of the stems should be cut off with a sharp knife, as the sap vessels will probably have become clogged up with coagulated matter.

It should be remembered that evaporation is going on from every pore of flower or leaf, and that unless fresh fluid can be taken up by the stems to make good this loss, the blooms will soon wither and die. We can readily see why the flowers of plants with hard, close stems fade sooner than those with soft, large-lined stems. The latter, owing to the ease with which they suck up moisture, will expand in water almost as well as if left on the parent plant.

Cut flowers often suffer from too dry an atmosphere. It is difficult to avoid this in our artificially-heated rooms, but we may at least put the blossoms in the coolest part of the room. Near a window, and especially in a bay-window, the temperature is generally several degrees lower than in other parts of the room, as you can see if you will test it with a thermometer. The best authorities say moreover, that the flowers should have the benefit of light, and even of sunshine in most cases, though there is a popular prejudice against exposing them to the latter. On the other hand, they suffer, as plants do, from draughts and from sudden alteration of temperature.

Botany also furnishes a useful hint for prolonging the life of many single flowers. This may be done by removing the anthers, for when the pollen on these becomes ripe the stigma gets impregnated, and the flower, having fulfilled its natural destiny, drops its petals and withers. In the case of blossoms that fall to pieces very easily, it is a good idea to let fall a drop of gum or mucilage into the center, which will glue the petals together at the base. To prevent this from running out before it hardens, the flowers should be kept in an upright position by putting their stems through the bottom of a sieve or sticking them in sand. With the aid of a camel's hair brush or a pointed stick, a large number of flowers may be gummed in a short time.

When flowers have been carried a long distance in close boxes or cases they frequently appear withered and worthless, but with proper treatment they may be revived and restored to their original beauty. Instead of being at once put into vases, and exposed to the hot and dry air of the parlor, they should either be carefully spread out on wet flannel or moss, and covered with a dish-cover or an inverted box, or else put in pans containing moss and water, or wet sand in which they can be set upright, and then shut up in the dark for a few hours. If they do not regain their freshness under this nursing there is no hope for them; but in all ordinary cases their recovery is certain.—British Journal of Chemistry.

GREEN CORN PUDDING.—Grate a dozen ears of tender corn, which however, must be fully ripe, grate from the cob; or, if you take the pains to cut the knife through the grain before beginning to slice them from the cob. Then with the point of your knife scrape the cob clear, for the sweetest part of the grain may adhere to it. Now beat up very well three eggs, and add to them a pint of sweet milk, half a cupful of butter, one spoonful of sugar, pepper and salt. Bake in a well heated oven. In winter, this dish can be prepared from dried corn, but is, of course, not so good as when made of the fresh vegetable.

A PRETTY TEA DISH.—The Country Home has a recipe for a tasteful relish that looks pretty, and tastes nice. Make a short, sweetened pie-crust, roll thin, and bake partly in sheets; before it is quite done take from the oven, cut in spirals of four inches or so, take up two diagonal corners and pinch together, which makes them basket-shaped; now fill with whipped cream or white of egg, or both, well sweetened and flavored, and return to the oven for a few minutes.

Mr. Bornell, of "Deerfoot Farm," says: "The milk of the best butter cows has the largest butter globules, and the larger they are the more rapidly they rise to the surface. With the Jerseys these globules are particularly large and delicate. Many are broken by milking; and in a few minutes after milking, if a pail is set aside, they will free themselves, and form cream on the top of the milk. The first cream is much richer and of better quality than that which rises last."

The Rev. Sydney Smith once, on entering a drawing-room in a fashionable mansion, found it lined with mirrors on all sides. Finding himself reflected in every direction, he said that he supposed he was at a meeting of the clergy, and there seemed to be every respectable individual.

BUT JUST TO SAY.

I do but just to say that the firm of Scott & Pond well deserves the first place in the list of those who are honestly striving to produce pure and wholesome food for the people. Their Crown Baking Powder is a boon to housekeepers, and is entitled to the gratitude of the public.

SCIENTIFIC.

—Much interest has recently been exhibited in regard to the cross-fertilization by insect agency of the fringed gentian. A recent writer in the Bulletin of the Torrey Botanical Club shows that insects can come into contact with the stigma sometimes; but that the pollen which may thus be communicated comes from neighboring flowers, which, according to Mr. Darwin's definition, is practically not cross-fertilization at all.

—The sparrow controversy is going on vigorously. A fresh contribution to the subject is a note in the Fehruary Naturalist by Prof. S. S. Haldeman. He states that for about forty years the peewee fly catcher (Sayornis fuscus) nested under his portico, until in 1877 the European sparrow appeared, "not only attacked the nesting peewees during several days when these were repairing their nest, but as fast as one party built the other demolished, tearing the nest to pieces and littering the porch below, without renewing or occupying the premises."

—The fever-tree (Eucalyptus globulus), so extensively extolled for its medical properties (it was supposed to drive away fevers wherever planted), has at length been the object of special investigation at scientific rooms. It is found, as most intelligent persons suspected, that there is no medical properties in the plant. The immensely rapid growth of an immense supply of moisture, and hence the plants make wet land dry by the sheer demand of roots for moisture. In so far as dry swampy ground, the trees are a good sanitary agent.

—The last volume of the memoirs of the Royal Astronomical Society contains a long and profoundly mathematical paper by Maxwell Hall, on Bode's law system. The paper seems a curious instance of an attempt to explain by mathematical discussion a hypothesis results more reliable than the original data on which the investigation is founded. The author starts with the assumption that the planets move in orbits around the assumed great center of attraction, that these orbits are not merely such which is improbable, but which is impossible; and these assumptions and the few we have as to the parallaxes of proper motions of about a dozen stars are a ponderous fabric of tables, formulæ, the net result of which is naturally, nothing—nothing, that is, but exhibition of misapplied ability and labor. No mathematical mill can bring out more grist than the grain put into the hopper—a fact often forgotten.

—Whoever can discern truth has received his commission from a higher source than the chief justice in the land who can discern only law. It is that delivers sentence. He is himself constituted judge of the case.—Thoreau

MILK OF MAGNESIA
IS THE best preparation known for all disorders of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEART-BURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant, safe and milk-like substance of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no persuasion to take it. It positively prevents food souring in the stomach, and acts as a laxative when needed. As directed, it is also peculiarly adapted to females. The superiority of this preparation and its perfect solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a fractional part only of a single drop magnified 250 diameters. The first the celebrated Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia now offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates and powders in the drop of undissolved Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates, in fact perfectly dissolved.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it and take none other. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

COMMERCIAL.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
NEW ORLEANS, Tuesday, April 9, 1878.

There has been no material change in prices of provisions and Western produce since our report of last week. Except in a jobbing way, we cannot see that there is much business doing.

There has been considerable trouble here lately between the dealers in flour, one class of dealers refusing to allow the State board of inspectors to brand their flour, and the other class refusing to buy any flour that was not branded. It is claimed that the board was inefficient, and that useless expense was entailed upon the sellers, which was, no doubt, to a certain extent, true; but as the law on the subject is imperative it is difficult to see how this class can avoid the inspection. Good judges of flour should be appointed, and then there would be no clogging of the wheels of commerce.

State consols have advanced from 74 as reported last week, to 78¾ to day, and are still tending upward. Premium bonds have gone up slightly.

Money is still easy for those who can give the best security.

COTTON.

The Democrat reports the cotton market as follows:

The inquiry for good assortments was fair, and in the absence of liberal there was but little movement and the transactions were confined to 3,600 bales. Influenced by favorable telegraphic news from Northern and European points, the market was somewhat stimulated and prices were slightly stronger, although at the close no transactions at an advance had been made.

The following is the official closing of the Cotton Exchange:

	To-day.	Yesterday.
Low Ordinary	7¾	7¾
Ordinary	8¼	8¼
Good Ordinary	8¾	8¾
Low Middling	9¼	9¼
Middling	10¼	10¼
Good Middling	11	11
Middling Fair

Sales to-day, 3,600 bales. Market firm; assortment poor.

The Christian life is a long and continual tendency of our heart toward that eternal goodness which we desire on earth. All our happiness consists in thirsting for it. Now this thirst is prayer. Ever desire, approach your Creator and you will never cease to pray. Do not think necessary to pronounce many words. Fenelon.

Be assured that there is nothing more tractable than the human mind. You need but will, and it is done, it is set right; as, on the contrary, you need but nod over the work, and it is ruined; for both ruin and recovery are from within.—Epictetus

An abundance of peace shall be multiplied unto him, who in the secret heart steadfastly resolved not to suffer from imaginary ills.

THE FOUR ANCHORS.

The night is dark, but God, my God,
Is here and in command;
And e're am I, when morning breaks,
I shall be "at the land."
And since I know the darkness is
To him as sunniest day,
I'll cast the anchor Patience out,
And wish—but wait—for day.

Fierce drives the storm, but winds and waves
Within his hand are held,
And trusting in Omnipotence,
My fears are sweetly quelled.
I've cast on his faithful grasp;
I'll not him, though he slay;
And letting go the anchor Faith,
I'll wish—but wait—for day.

Still seem the moments dreary, long
To me, unused the Lord;
Those of his eternal years,
And feast upon his word;
He grain me, so rich and great,
As my support and stay;
I drop the anchor Hope ahead,
And wish—but wait—for day.

O Logic infinite! O light
And love supreme, divine!
How can I feel one fluttering doubt,
In hands so dear as thine?
I lean on thee, my best beloved,
My head on thy dear breast lay;
And casting out the anchor Love,
I wish—and wait—for day.

Christian Messenger.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

PHILADELPHIA, April 9.—Intense excitement prevailed in the drug market yesterday, owing to the alleged rise in the price of morphia and quinine. Drug dealers from all portions of the State, and from New York and Baltimore, are endeavoring to have orders filled, but none can be obtained at any price.

GALVESTON, April 9.—A fire at three o'clock this morning destroyed fifteen frame buildings on both sides of Market street, between Twenty-Eighth and Twenty Ninth streets. The one building in the block was saved. Loss, $50,000; insurance, $30,000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., April 9.—The New England Methodist Conference, at Westfield, to-day adopted resolutions approving fraternal relations with the Methodist Church south, but maintaining the claim of their own denomination to be the original Wesleyan Church.

WASHINGTON, April 10, 1878.—The House Committee on Mississippi levees agreed to report favorably on the proposition the appointment of a commission to report upon the improvement of the Mississippi levees from St. Louis to the mouth. The bill provides for the appointment of three army officers by the Secretary of War, and three civilians by the President whose annual salary shall not exceed $7,500 each. The bill appropriates $250,000 to defray the expenses of the commission.

NEW YORK, April 11.—The conference at the sub treasury between Secretary Sherman and the members of the late syndicate resulted in the signing of a contract for the sale of $10,000,000 4½ per cent. bonds. The details of the negotiation, including the method of payments, withheld in the official statement of the transaction given out at the sub-treasury, which the following is a copy:

The Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the late syndicate have entered into an agreement for sale, for resumption purposes, of $10,000,000 United States 4½ per cent. thirty year bonds at par and accrued interest, and ¼ per cent. premium in gold coin; $10,000,000 to be subscribed immediately, and $5,000,000 each month during the balance of the year. The sale of 4 per cent. bonds will be continued by the Treasury Department as heretofore upon the terms and conditions of the last circular, and the proceeds will be applied to the redemption of the 6 per cent. 5-20 bonds.

WASHINGTON, April 11.—Messrs. Wells, of Louisiana, and Cameron, of Wisconsin, were added this morning by the Senate Committee on Levees making the committee seven members.

Mr. Eads intends to push for the appropriations for the levees, and will take early occasion to make a speech upon the subject. He will defend the appropriation upon the ground that the Mississippi is the property of the United States, and entirely subject to the control and regulation of Congress.

The bill appropriating $75,000 to open and operate the New Orleans mint passed the Senate this morning.

GALVESTON, April 11.—The News special reports another train robbery on the Texas Pacific road, at Mesquite station, thirteen miles east of Dallas, at ten o'clock last night. When the train stopped at the depot the engineer and fireman were taken from the engine and placed under guard. The express messenger and route agent barricaded themselves in their car, but the robbers saturated it with coal oil, set fire to it, and forced them out. The express and mail were then plundered. Conductor Alford and two of the robbers were wounded. The plundering party numbered fifteen or twenty. The passengers were not molested.

NEW YORK, April 12.—William M. Tweed died, in Ludlow Street jail, at precisely twelve o'clock to-day. He was attended by Dr. Carnochan, who has been with him since an early hour this morning, also Mr. Foster Dewey, his late secretary; Mr. Douglas, his son-in-law, and Mr. Edelstein, one of his counsel. All hope of his recovery was abandoned soon after eleven o'clock, when Dr. Carnochan announced a clogging of the heart and complete nervous exhaustion. At the time of his death there was no struggle, as he passed away in sleep, with his head lying upon his arm. The keeper, Kiernan, was hurriedly summoned three minutes before noon, and, reaching Mr. Tweed's room, the signal rang out, and the long-prisoned old man dropped back dead in his bed. His last words to Dr. Carnochan were: "I have tried to do some good; if I have not had good luck, I am not afraid to die. I believe the guardian angels will protect me."

WASHINGTON, April 12.—Mr. Zamicana, Mexican representative here, has received the following telegram, announcing the recognition of the Diaz government by United States Minister Foster:

CITY OF MEXICO, April 12.—Minister Foster sent yesterday a communication recognizing the government of Mexico, and establishing official relations with the Mexican government.

You have been appointed our minister to the United States government, and the Senate has confirmed the appointment.

VALLARTA,
Secretary of State.

CHICAGO, April 13.—Reports from the spring wheat region show an average fifty per cent. greater than last year, and the condition and prospects better than since 1860. The season is three to six weeks ahead.

NASHVILLE, April 14.—A destructive fire occurred at Clarksville last night. The estimated loss is half a million of dollars. The burned district covers fifteen acres. One grocery warehouse covered over one acre itself. Between fifty and seventy-five principal houses are destroyed.

TOPEKA, April 14.—A tornado passed over Cottonwood, on the Santa Fe road, last night, blowing forty-five cars off the track, and destroying a number of houses. Some lives are reported lost. A stock train was wrecked near Emporia.

FOREIGN.

CAPE TOWN, March 26.—There has been continuous fighting in the Pirie bush for a week. Four British officers have been killed. The situation in Transvaal is very serious.

ROME, April 9.—Count Corti, minister of foreign affairs, answering interpellations on the Eastern question, in the Chamber of Deputies, today, said that Italy was free from all engagements except those devolving from treaties, which constituted the public law of Europe. The progress of negotiations between European cabinets afforded grounds for believing that there would be a peaceful settlement. In any event Italy would preserve a rigorous neutrality.

ST PETERSBURG, April 9.—The Journal De St Petersburg says: None can execise pacific influence better than the Berlin cabinet, which inspires confidence at Vienna, London and St Petersburg. If the Congress assembles for the discussion of new guarantees Russia will test them with a sincere wish to find them sufficient.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 9.—The Russians are completing the fortifications commenced by the Turks, at Schejnedje and Derkos.

Fresh purchases of arms are being made by the Turkish war office.

ATHENS, April 9.—Eight thousand Thessalians, from burning villages in Thessaly, have taken refuge in Greece. They are utterly destitute.

LONDON, April 10.—The report of aggressive movements by the Russians on Roumania is confirmed.

A special to the Political Correspondence from Constantinople states that Mr. Layard has succeeded in paralyzing, for the present, Russia's endeavor to obtain the friendship of the Porte.

LONDON, April 11.—A special to the Times from San Stefano says: The Grand Duke Nicholas and Gens. Gourko Skobeloff Shouvaloff Nepokoitchitzky and Levitzky, with a large staff and an escort of fifty cavalry, yesterday visited the principal defensive works lately commenced by the Turks between San Stefano and Constantinople, and then embarked on board the imperial yacht Livadia for the city.

The erection of these defenses has caused great indignation. The Grand Duke Nicholas has obtained an order to stop it. It is rumored Osman Pasha ordered the construction of the works without the knowledge of Reouf Pasha, the war minister, at the instigation of Mr. Layard, the British embassador, who is accused of trying to bring on a war between Russia and England.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 12.—The Porte has issued a circular to its representatives abroad. It recognizes the treaty of San Stefano as the result of reverses sustained by Turkey in the late war, and expresses determination to carry out loyally the terms of the treaty, but declares that the Porte would, nevertheless, regard as opportune any modifications which might be made by the benevolent intervention of the powers and the moderation of Russia. The circular concludes by stating that whatever may be the issue of present negotiations, the Porte pledges itself to carry out the projected reforms.

LONDON, April 12.—Right Rev. George Augustus Selwyn, D. D., Bishop of Lichfield, is dead.

VIENNA, April 13.—A Russian courier arrived, bringing an autograph letter from the Czar to the Emperor Francis Joseph. The relations between the two courts have assumed a more conciliatory tendency.

Soul-work cannot be run off as men can run off beads. It cannot be unchained. It engages the best part of a man all his life long.

The New Pope.

A great change has come over the aspect of affairs at Rome so far as the Vatican is concerned. The new Pope has been using the new broom to sweep out local petty abuses that had accumulated in the papal palace; he has been dismissing the hangers-on and getting rid of the pensioners who were supported in idleness by the contributions to Peter's pence from all parts of the world; but outside of the Vatican he does not seem to be making any great impression—certainly not a sensation. Hardly a week passed, under the regime of Pius the Ninth, that we did not have some startling intelligence as to what he was doing or was going to do. He was constantly waited upon by deputations from all parts of the world and was constantly saying something that was designed to keep the world in a state of fermentation. When he had nothing else to say, he bewailed most piteously his condition as a prisoner, and the sufferings of the church, which was not allowed, as in the days of yore, to lord it over kings and peoples. Every once in awhile, too, he would break out in a strain of cursings, which it was shocking to read, and which kept his followers in a state of excitement.

The new Pope takes things very quietly, and but for the record of his election and an occasional rumor as to what he intends to do, we should scarcely know that there is a Pope in Rome. If he is waited upon by a deputation, instead of spreading before them his own grievances or telling them what measures he is about to take to reduce the world again to subjection, he advises them to go about their own business and not to trouble themselves with his. It is said that he actually attends to his own business himself, regulates his own household, writes his own encyclicals, and attends to the affairs of the church as if he were actually a bishop.

Recently, when a French deputation came to condole or to consult with him on the state of the church, he is reported to have given them some wholesome advice to go home and fight the unbelieving world with the weapons of truth, to meet the sophisms of man's science with the sounder arguments of God's knowledge, to spread true light among the people, to combat error by dispelling ignorance, to win the masses over to the eternal, unchangeable truth, to base morality on Heaven's law, and to make God's will the people's will as the best means of establishing the kingdom of God on earth. This was very sensible advice, if he actually gave it; and if it were followed by the teachers of religion generally they would soon come much nearer together, and a much brighter prospect would speedily dawn upon the church and the world. On the whole Leo the Thirteenth seems to be a very sensible man; but Pius the Ninth began well, and we must wait and see what the end will be.—New York Observer.

St. Sophia.

It is the only great Christian church which has been preserved from very early times, for the basilicas of St John Lateran and St Mary the Greater, at Rome, have been considerably altered. And in itself it is a prodigy of architectural skill, as well as architectural beauty. Its enormous area is surmounted by a dome so flat, pitched at so low an angle, that it seems to hang in air, and one cannot understand how it retains its cohesion. The story is that Anthemius, the architect, built it of excessively light bricks of Rhodian clay. All round it, dividing the recesses from the great central area, are rows of majestic columns, brought hither by Justinian, who was thirty years in building it (A D 538, 568,) from the most famous heathen shrines of the East, among others from Diana's Temple at Ephesus, and that of the Sun at Baalbec. The roof and walls were adorned with superb mosaics, but the Mohammedans, who condemn any representation of a living creature, lest it should tend to idolatry, have covered all these figures, though in some places you can just discern their outlines through the coat of plaster or whitewash. In place of them they have decorated the building with texts from the Koran, written in gigantic characters round the dome (one letter, Alif, is said to be thirty feet long,) or on enormous boards suspended from the roof, and in four flat spaces below the dome they have suffered to be painted the four archangels whom they recognize, each represented by six great wings, without face or other limbs.

One of the most highly cultivated and widely-traveled ecclesiastics whom Russia possesses (they are, unhappily, few enough) told me that, after seeing nearly all the great cathedrals of Latin Europe he felt, when he entered St. Sophia, that it far transcended them all; that now for the first time his religious instincts had been satisfied by a human work. Mr. Fergusson, in his History of Architecture, says something to a similar effect. This will hardly be the feeling of those whose taste has been formed on Western, or what we call Gothic, models, with their mystery, their complexity, their beauty of varied detail. But St Sophia certainly gives one an impression of measureless space, of dignity, of majestic unity, which no other church (unless, perhaps, the Cathedral of Seville) can rival. You are more awed by it, more lost in it, than in St Peter's itself.—Macmillan's Magazine.

American Bible Society.

The stated meeting of the board of managers was held at the Bible House Astor Place, New York, on Thursday April 4 at half past three o'clock P M, William H Allen, Esq., LL D president in the chair.

The Rev. M S Hutton D. D., read from the fortieth chapter of Isaiah, and offered prayer.

The general agent submitted specimen copies of a small New Testament from new electrotype plates (32mo,) bound in muslin with red edges the price of which has been fixed at fifteen cents.

There were presented for the library a copy of the revised version of the Gospel of John, in Japanese, prepared at this society's expense in Yokohama; and some other books of value among which was a copy of the Hebrew Bible once owned by the Rev Levi Parsons and afterward used by the Rev. Dr. Goodell in preparing his translation of the Scriptures into Armeno Turkish the gift of the Rev E D G Prime D D.

In accordance with a recommendation of the Committee on Nominations the Hon. Lafayette S. Foster, of Connecticut, and Robert Carter, Esq. of New York, were elected vice-presidents.

Recent letters from the society's foreign agents brought reports from Dr. Gulick of February 28, Dr. Bliss of March 15, Mr. Milne of February 16 and Mr. Blackwood of February 8. Other foreign letters, containing reports of distribution or requests for grants, were received from Rev. L F. Woodin, of Foochow, Rev. E P Hastings of Japan, Rev. William H Gulick, of Santa Barbara, and George H. Prince, Esq., of St. Petersburg.

The printing of the Second Book of Kings in Dakota was authorized. Appropriations of money for translating, printing and distributing the Scriptures in foreign lands during the present year, amounting in the aggregate to $83,000, were made, to be expended under the direction of various missionary societies and the society's agents abroad. Grants of Scriptures were also made to numerous applicants, amounting in all to about 20,000 copies, of which 10,000 were raised later for the China, and 6,781 for circulation in other countries.

The receipts for March were $69,579.14; and the entire receipts for the year ending March 31 were $445,951.14.

The volumes issued in March were 49,333. The whole number of copies issued from the Bible House during the year not including those issued in foreign lands, was 459,224.

The following minute respecting the Rev. Dr. Holdich was adopted and put upon the records of the board:

"In accepting the resignation of the Rev. D. Holdich the board of managers of the American Bible Society take occasion to record their high estimate of the diligence and fidelity with which he has fulfilled the duties of the office, to which he was elected in 1849 and their deep regret that he has been compelled by the infirmities of age to withdraw from active work. Twenty-nine years have elapsed since he entered the service of the society and consecrated his best energies to its noble aims. Within that period the list of officers has been entirely changed, and of those who in 1849 had responsibility for its management but few survive.

"The course pursued by our esteemed brother through this long period of his connection with the society has been signalized by Christian prudence, urbanity, integrity and zeal as to win the affectionate regard of all who have been associated with him; and the vice presidents and managers can not but offer him their congratulations that the years have passed so happily and usefully while he has been employed in this department of Christian philanthropy. Condoling with him in sympathy for his bodily infirmities and loss of vision, they express their devout desire that his declining years may be serene, and that he may ever be cheered by the hope of a better life beyond."

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE DAILY ADVOCATE.—Price $1.—The General Conference Daily Advocate will be published during the session, at Atlanta, Ga. It will contain the proceedings of the body including the reports of committees, speeches of members, and the plans that may be adopted for the extension of the kingdom of Christ.

We have published the price as $1 25; but, after making our contract for publication find that we can furnish subscribers at $1. Persons who have already sent us $1 25 will be credited with twenty five cents.

We request all persons who expect to subscribe for it to do so at once.

A H REDFORD Agent.
NASHVILLE, TENN., April 4, 1878.

A meeting of Methodist ministers of the Northwest was held at Chicago, March 26, and a report was submitted by the management of the Garrett Biblical Institute which comes some $200,000 short of maintaining the institution. A committee was appointed to consider a plan for raising the deficiency, and to report to a subsequent meeting. The committee reported in favor of putting an agent in the field, and providing for voluntary contributions.

The General Council of the Reformed Episcopal Church is announced to meet in Newark, N. J., May 8. Including those in England, this church now has six bishops.

Save Us from Our Friends.

When the United States forces, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, occupied Nashville the Southern Methodist Publishing House, with all its equipments and stock, was seized and used for the army printing till the close of the war. Its valuable material was worn out, and the largest and costliest printing establishment in the South was left a wreck. An estimate of the damage done was presented to Congress and a petition for payment. A more righteous claim never sought justice at the hands of any tribunal. The government was requested to pay an honest debt, and at the same time wipe out the dishonor of robbing a church. It seems the time has come when the decent men in the national legislature are ashamed of withholding payment on the sacred claim. The public conscience in the North is quickening from the callousness of the great war barons and men of fair character in both parties are agreeing to give a return for this official plundering of church property.

The Senate has been moved by a returning sense of self respect and common honesty to vote for a sum (only half the amount set down in the estimate.) Though small, yet the motive in the appropriation is better than a stubborn refusal to make compensation for any of the ill gotten spoil.

The bill has yet to pass the House of Representatives. Our brethren of the Northern Church could give us now substantial evidence of "fraternity" by a kind word, if not active work, to secure us a part, at least, of our just claim. Are they helping us? The Independent Methodist papers are either silent or coldly friendly. We thank them for their indifference or timid assistance, for the official organs—such as the Chicago, Pittsburg, Atlanta Advocates, and so on—are raving with wild rhetoric against the payment of one poor penny of this sacred debt. The Federal officer and the hardened demagogue are relenting toward the South, but these Northern Methodist editors plant themselves in front of the goods stolen from their "brethren," and slump with rage at the thought of returning the smallest aliquot part of compensation.

We hope there will be one man in our General Conference with sense and grit enough to rise and read these hostile editorials from official journals. It would be at the right place to give them in good voice when some mushy Methodist has got through with the usual honey and water twaddle about "fraternity." "If we must swallow our quadrennial quart of this thin treakle let us flavor it with an acid of sincerity.

Moody's Farewell in Boston.

Last Friday evening says the Christian Union of March 27, Mr. Moody preached his farewell sermon in the Boston tabernacle, which, having served its uses for fifteen months past, is now soon to be torn down. Since its erection, except through the summer months, the building has been scarcely closed to religious services for a single week. Seldom however, since Mr. Moody left Boston in May last, have such crowds been seen in attendance as during the two weeks past. Many new conversions have been witnessed in the inquiry rooms, and the overflow meetings have been full. The meetings in general have had a peculiar interest arising from the interblending of the experience of the recent converts and of those who have now for a year continued steadfast in their profession. Wednesday last was the great temperance day. Many remained from early morning till eleven at night within the building, collations being served noon and evening. At noon Mr. Pentecost came on to the platform, just from Hartford and his great farewell meeting there. To see Mr. Pentecost at home again, though only for a day, was a pleasure to the audience scarcely less than that which had been awakened by Mr. Moody's own arrival. Mr. Sawyer and Francis Murphy were also present and added much to the interest of the day. The superb singing of the afternoon and evening was furnished by a choir of one hundred and fifty male voices from Hartford. A finer body of people to look and voice it would be hard to find. Mr. Sankey's voice was in exceptionally good condition, and his power to win and hold the masses seems not at all diminished. During the fortnight Dr. Tourjee and his choir of two thousand rendered gospel songs, both old and new, with great power and beauty. More than ten thousand persons, doubtless, sought admission to the tabernacle at the closing service, and probably more than fifty thousand thronged its entrances during the last three days.

To Superintendents of Sunday Schools.

OFFICE OF SECRETARY
MISS. STATE SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION,
Jackson, Miss., April 9, 1878.

Superintendents of Sunday schools of the various religious denominations in the State of Mississippi are earnestly requested to send me their names, postoffice address and denomination, at an early day.

WM. J. BROWN, JR., Sec.

Better than martial victories are the silent triumphs of wisdom, as souls are quietly turned from unseemly ways and led to a loftier life.

Books and Periodicals.

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF THE SOUL, OR MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY, AS REVEALED. By Charles L. Ives, M. D. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger, 1878.

We have not had time to read this book with care. The author, however, seems to oppose the generally received doctrines of the orthodox churches. To him a disembodied soul is inconceivable. There is a spirit-body and a resurrection of it. The wicked are to be annihilated. The soul sleeps until the resurrection. After the resurrection this earth is to be the dwelling-place of the good. Nothing new in all this and not much that is true.

ECHOING AND RE ECHOING. By Fay Huntington. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

We do not very much like any religious novel, and we could not commend works of the kind for Sunday school libraries. This book seems to be written to do good. The story contains moral and religious lessons, and is entertaining. A handsome 12mo of 309 pages. Price, $1.50.

LINKS IN REBECCA'S LIFE. By Pansy. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.

Pansy has written several very entertaining and useful books. She writes vividly and graphically. This story is well told, and is much above the average religious novel. It is one of the best works of its kind that we have met. Those who have time and taste for such fiction will find this at least pure, and tending to piety and good morals. 12mo, 420 pages. Price, $1.50.

—Our Sunday school periodicals for May have been received. The original articles in the Magazine are: John Wesley, with portrait, by Dr. T. O. Summers, D. D.; Daniel, by Rev. R. K. Hargrove, D. D.; The Captivity of Judah, by Prof. N. E. Lupton, LL. D.; Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, by Rev. D. C. Kelley, D. D.; The Story of Our English Bible, by President A. B. Stark.

—The National Repository for May has: Spring Flowers, illustrated; Ocean Grove, illustrated; Ashes of Palms; Victor Emanuel; The Bullfrogs' Serenade; Post Christian Judaism, No. 2; Among the Thorns; Russia and the Russians; Robert Pollock and His Times; Assyrian Libraries; Editorial Miscellany. An excellent number of the National.

—Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for May is as varied and instructive as usual. This one number is equal to a good stout volume, and is filled with a choice miscellany of religious and literary articles. The illustrations are very numerous, and some of them are very fine.

—Sacred Melodies is a collection of new sacred music designed for Sunday schools, church and social worship, by J. W. Slaughenhaupt, Taneytown, Md. 25 pages, 12mo, paper binding. Price, 10 cents.

—The Complete Preacher for March has six sermons. The preachers are: Justin D. Fulton, D. D., Newman Hall, LL. D., John Cummings, D. D., Prof. A. J. Nelson, R. S. Dabney, D. D.

—A Layman's Thoughts on Preaching, originally published in the Christian Union, has been issued in pamphlet form by the Christian Union print, New York. Price, 10 cents.

—We are indebted to Rev. J. G. Futrell for a copy of the minutes of the North Mississippi Conference.

VACANT MINISTERS.—There is no greater scandal in the church at the present time, says the New York Observer, than the eagerness manifested by ministers to obtain introductions and recommendations to the more important vacancies as soon as they occur. This is true of many who are already in places of usefulness. On the other hand, hundreds of vacant churches remain unsought by the hundreds of unemployed ministers, because they are not prominent places. The right man can make almost any field an important one, and can be successful in it by devoting himself to the work of the ministry with energy and perseverance and faith, and no man can be successful anywhere without these elements. The Rev. Dr Poor, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Education, in an address before the Presbytery of Newark last week, said:

"Another cause of the contempt for the ministry is the habit of applying for vacant places in swarms. He always said to candidates for the ministry never to engage in this; that they should use their friends for better purposes than to get them into places. If Christ has called them, he will find places for them, and they should take the work he gives them, and not stand on their dignity waiting for a better place. They should wait to be asked, and not be seeking for places. They should put themselves in the hands of Christ, and follow the first call they got. This swarming after places is getting to be a perfect enormity."

For The Advocate.

AN INVOCATION.

O God! thy glory I invoke;
Oh, give me strength to bear this yoke.
For I am very weak.
Give me thy precious grace each day,
And be my light alone for the way
One word of comfort speak.

Oh! give me faith while here I stay,
Till I by faith shall hear Thee say
Thy sins are all forgiven.
For I am bowed beneath sin's load,
I'm weary of this sinful road—
I'm wand'ring the way to heaven.

Be thou my guiding star by night,
And cheer me through the dark dreary night,
Till the endless day.
Be thou my hope, my trust, my guide,
My Savior, who was crucified,
Be thou my all, my stay.

Then I will fear no ill nor foe
If Thou art with me. God is with—
I need no other friend;
For in Him dwelleth all good things
From Him our every blessing springs.
Oh! God, thy blessings send.

I want no treasure on this earth,
I want nothing home to me with me
Let us ask, my wife—
For as I there expect to have born
Let all the things my brow has worn—
All—peace, the rest above.

[illegible]
To God, to know with Him to go
Unless I heed the way.
Then life's long dark and dreary walk
Lead on [illegible] of light
[illegible] day.

They go [illegible] and we [illegible] there.
The last [illegible] ear we hear no more
Then we'll watch with those
And when it [illegible] waters cross
And enter in the peaceful [illegible]
I'll see with those above.

The Presiding Eldership.

MR. EDITOR: As it is likely that the subject of the presiding eldership will be considered by our ensuing General Conference, it may not be amiss that the readers of the ADVOCATE have their attention directed thereto.

The writer would like to advert to the origin and history of the office somewhat, as well as to its practicability and utility. The Methodism with which we are successionally connected had its origin at commencement in America in 1766 and only had lay or local preachers for three years, under whose labors it developed and grew into sufficient importance to warrant the application to Mr. Wesley and his Conference in England for assistance and supervision. In response to this call two preachers were sent, and two years later these were joined by others, and the work of preaching and building up societies was carried on until 1773. This year a general assistant was sent over from England, a regular Conference was convened, the preachers assigned to charges, and the work was continued, even through the war of the Revolution, up to 1781. Thus it may be seen that for nearly twenty years American Methodism had no presiding eldership, and was carried on with an unordained ministry. At the Christmas Conference of 1784, America having become civilly and ecclesiastically separated from England, the Methodist societies, as they had been called, were organized into a church, taking the episcopal form of government.

Two persons were elected to the general superintendency of the church, and twelve were elected to the eldership. These latter constituted an adjunct to the episcopacy, or general superintendency; and this eldership was increased from time to time, and by the appointment of the Bishops some of them were designated as presiding elders; but not until the first regular General Conference of 1792 was the presiding eldership a part of Methodism by the action and refinement of the constitution of the church. From that time on it has had a place and has been an important feature in Episcopal Methodism. But for thirty-six years no part of our economy caused more agitation and animated controversy than this one feature. From the outset the church seemed to divide as to the right constitution of the office. One party maintained that the incumbents should hold the office alone by the appointment of the Bishops; and the other that, according to this view, they could only be responsible to the authority appointing them; but that as they represented the members of the Annual Conference they should be elected to the office by the suffrages of the members of that body. The subject was one of discussion and controversy in every General Conference up to 1832, when, by a vote of sixty-one to twenty-five, the office was made elective, such lights of American Methodism as Ezekiel Cooper, Nathan Bangs, John Emory and William Capers favoring the measure. But Joshua Soule, being elected to the episcopacy at this Conference, was so opposed to the office of presiding elder being elective that he would not consent to be consecrated. An effort was made to get the measure reconsidered, but this failed, and just before the adjournment of the Conference the operation of the law was suspended until the next General Conference. In 1824 the operation of the law was again suspended, and in 1828 it was rescinded. Immediately succeeding 1828 there was much less agitation and controversy on the presiding elder question; but then in 1828 the Methodist Protestant Church was organized, and most of the element of the church favoring the office being elective found its way into the new organization, and yet not all; but there was comparative quiet.

The acceptance and operation of the new law might not have been as subversive of the true interests of Methodism as many apprehended. At any rate, at the present time there seems to be considerable interest excited on the presiding eldership. The agitation is now of a different complexion to what it was in the earlier history of the church. The subject stands about thus at present:

1. There are those in the ministry and among the membership who want the office abolished.

2. Those who favor a modification.

3. Those who want the office to remain just as it is.

1. To abolish the office would involve much more than many suspect. It would evidently necessitate a modification in the episcopacy, as well as the institution of the feature of an advisory council to furnishing the church with the pastorate.

2. Modification, in the estimation of many, seems to be the way of relieving the difficulty; but the opinion of the writer is that the change that will most likely be made is the one that will fail to maintain and conceive the office in its integrity and utility. The indication is, judging from the drift of the discussion on the subject, that the restriction as to the number of appointments to a district will be removed. This will not only be unwise, but may be serious in its bearing and effect upon the office. A diminution in the number of the incumbents of the office will lessen the representation which the preachers have through the office in the episcopal council, and may withdraw some of that influence requisite to secure and conserve the interests of pastors and the church. Then, as the laity have a representation through the districts, my entailment in the number of districts will lessen the lay representation in the Annual Conference, which is less now than it ought to be.

Furthermore, increasing the number of pastoral charges in a district will so augment the labors and responsibilities of the office as to effectually break it down with its own weight.

3. To let the office remain as it is would seem to disregard the urgent demands, coming from many, for some change. To let it remain would evidently be the better policy if there could be any satisfactory relief as to its support. If the efficiency and utility of the office could be brought so vitally in connection with our people as to make them feel that in its counsels and labors they have a quid pro quo for all expended in its support, there would be satisfaction. If this cannot be accomplished the way out of complaint might be reached by making a change in the provision for the support of the office. It is hoped the wisdom and firmness of those charged with the responsibility of settling this question will be fully adequate to the demands and interests involved.

J. W. SHORES.

QUARTICE, Ala., March 27, 1878.

Perilous Times.

MR. EDITOR: While we may confidently look for the final triumph of the truth of the gospel, we should not close our eyes to the dangers to which the progress of true religion is exposed. The discovery of our peril is an encouragement to prepare to meet it; and the prevalence of error under forms of religion is an additional confirmation of the truth of the gospel, which frequently directs the attention to these things in terms too clear to be misunderstood by the careful observer of the "times," aided by the light of God's word. The gospel is applicable to the families and nations of the earth who have it; and as its introduction and progress cannot be the same in all places, there must be different phases of character and society at different times and places in the Christian world. Therefore we need not be surprised to see many evil things in our own favored land, as well as anywhere else in Christendom. "Perilous times shall come." How prophetic! Then follows a delineation of character so nicely defined that one might almost conclude that the picture was drawn in the United States; and yet it was done more than eighteen hundred years ago, and for those who lived then in that quarter of the world, as well as for us who live here now. If there are people who think the inspired writer never saw their race "in the last days," let them read what follows: "For men shall be lovers of their ownselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away." It is our painful task to recognize the existence of such characters in this country, not all developed in the same person, but some or many of them in multitudes. But while candor compels us to admit these things, and we are forced by facts to the conclusion that the gospel has not saved the masses of the people from fatal error, even in these perilous times there are "those that are good." What numerical proportion the good sustain against the other classes cannot be ascertained in this warfare; but whether the good are few or many, the times and the salvation of souls demand that they should "turn away" from those who resist the truth—men of corrupt minds. There are times of danger to life, liberty and property, and the strong arm of civil government is raised for the protection of these "indienable rights;" but there are perilous times to religion when there is apparent security in other rights. The salvation of souls is the great purpose of the gospel, and all its force moves in that direction; and no evils of any number or kind could so impress the mind of one who was for the defense of the gospel, as those which he knew would endanger the souls of men, and cause them to make shipwreck of the faith. If war or famine or pestilence, or any thing in the line of God's providence or judgments, was in view, it was subordinate to the predominant interest he had for the souls of men. Men are alarmed and brought to repentance by these means, because they see the danger of losing their lives suddenly, and feel the necessity of preparation to meet their God.

There are many things in these days to indicate that we are in perilous times. Some may not notice them at all; others may see a few of them, and others still may do the cause of religion injustice by magnifying the failures of its advocates. As long as such characters as the apostle describes are to be found in great force there is no safety for the weak child of God but to avoid them. But the peril of the soul is increased by the failure to see the dangers surrounding it; the enemy speaks peace when there is no peace. There are more attractions to the gratification of evil nature now than ever before in this country, and the ungodly take advantage of them. It is scarcely necessary to mention theaters, races, games, lotteries, balls, and other places of legalized iniquity, where multitudes vie with each other in their march to ruin in "the course of the world." Such folly ought to be manifest to all, and would be if men were not blinded by the god of this world. Christianity readily discovers an enemy in these things, and turns away from them, or meets them armed for conflict. The soul that would live should see the danger of contact with such associations as the churches have denounced.

But there is one feature of these perilous times that should be emphasized—that is, having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. This is in the church and among the forms of religion; but it is all form and no power. The form may go no further than a mere recognition as a church member, or it may include all the externals of religion; but in either case there is a want of the power of godliness, and consequently a lack of religion; for the kingdom of God is in power. This seems to be the chief cause of trouble in the church in these days—form without power. It is not strange that many walk disorderly, and that sinners are not converted to God. The church is powerless in proportion to the want of power in the members. May the Captain of our salvation guide the ship in safety.

J. W. SANDERS.

Quarterage Versus Visiting.

MR. EDITOR: "Ex-Steward" sings the Syrian song: "Preacher will not visit—members will not pay." The omission of one justifies the dereliction of the other; and he apologizes for both by saying that the "laborer is worthy of his hire."

After eight years' experience I am satisfied that he is wrong. The fault lies in another direction. It is as Bishop McTyeire says: "Inefficient stewards will starve a preacher in the midst of plenty." The Discipline (page 101) is explicit on the qualifications of stewards. Review your board of stewards; see how many will measure with this standard. See if the ones who come nearest the standard do not, as a general thing, come nearest paying up their assessment. I admit that there may be some few exceptions to this rule. But now let us see where the fault lies. It is the presiding elder's duty to see the law carried out in the quarterly meetings. It is the preacher in charge's duty to nominate. Some preachers in charge think that it is a sine qua non to have a steward for each society, and a member at that place; so he steps aside of his ordination vow, and the presiding elder quietly acquiesces, and becomes a party to the violation by not asking the question as to his fitness, etc. Here is the root of evil, in my opinion. "But," say you, "such men cannot be found in the society. What then?" Then let the preacher in charge be his own steward; get some outsider to assist him, or appoint some ladies, who are always ready to help. The qualifications are laid down to keep out inefficient men; but they will appoint them, in violation of ordination vows—walk rough-shod over the Discipline. Then they experience the language of Solomon: "As vinegar to the teeth and smoke to the eyes, so is the sluggard to them who send him." Suppose the Bishops and Annual Conferences were to adopt such loose rules to supply the want of preachers, just to fill up—what would be the result? It is not hard to divine.

Brethren, one and all, you may write, legislate, change and modify, but you will never rid yourselves of the evil till you enforce the whole law. Get men in whose religion the people have confidence—men who are holy in life and conversation. Then Heaven's endassadors will be fed, and that abundantly. Such men will teach the people to give from principle—give for the glory of God and the spread of scriptural holiness. Such men are in sympathy with their pastor, and will encourage and teach the people not to pay for singing, praying, visiting, etc., but to send the gospel on wings of love to the perishing millions of our race, which can only be done by supporting the ministers in their vocations.

ITINERANT.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

BRO. AND SISTER MIXER, of Pine Prairie, St. Landry parish, La., were exalted examples of piety and good works. They were the friends of God, and their faith, like Abraham's, was accounted to them for righteousness. Their names are associated with the earliest days of Methodism in southwest Louisiana, and as long ago as 1841 their house was the welcome retreat of Richmond Nolly, one of the pioneer ministers of this State. God gathered these aged disciples into his own everlasting habitation several years since.

Mrs. SUSAN MAYO, who died at Opelousas, February 3, 1878, was the daughter of these faithful servants of God. In 1857, while only eighteen years of age, she was married to Mr. Claudius Mayo, and for twenty-one years she sustained the relation of wife, illustrating, by the grace of God, all the excellencies of this honorable estate, instituted of God in the time of man's innocency. Out of six children one still lives, the others having passed into the silent grave before their mother. Death has severed the relation of husband and wife, parent and child, and made the home of the husband lonely and desolate. These earthly relations, though short and exceedingly tender, are broken by the ruthless and blighting hand of death. Whatever may await us in this life, one thing is true: "Earth has no sorrow that Heaven cannot heal."

In 1856 Sister Mayo was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and as years rolled away became more and more attached to the church of her choice. She was always a true friend to God's messengers, and to them she ever extended a cordial welcome. When they entered her house they felt and what they enjoyed was the generous and spontaneous offering of a heart touched by the Master's hand. She was a devoted, earnest, prayerful Christian. She looked unto the hills from whence cometh all our help. Her heart was well established by grace, and with a faith which took refuge in Christ she could cast her eyes clearly upon mansions in the skies. She did not, like Peter, follow her Savior afar off, but, with the spirit of Mary, she sat at the Master's feet, hearing his words of wisdom, and feeling the tender sympathy of his loving heart. He claimed the heart, and that was all freely given. That was a bright day. Christ, as the sun of righteousness, arose upon her waiting soul, never again to set. Her example was a fulfillment of the Savior's exhortation: "Let your light so shine before men that they see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." There was a consistency, a symmetry, a beauty, which rendered it attractive, and clothed the truth of God with a freshness, rarely seen. Asthma made her a lifelong invalid. She was purified as if by afflictions, but there was no repining, no murmuring at this dispensation of divine Providence. Said she, two years before she died: "I bless God for afflictions. They have brought me near to him." When recovering from a severe attack she said: "I am a little disappointed this morning, for I expected to be in heaven." Her death brought the long looked for victory, and the long-expected crown. The body is sown in weakness. It shall be raised in power; though sown a natural body, it shall be raised a spiritual body. The hour of death was victory, and her conquest was the victory of the cross.

DANIEL WESLEY WIGGINS, only son of Mrs. M. E. and the late Rev. D. M. Wiggins, was born on the twelfth of August, 1849, and died, at the residence of his mother, on the second of December, 1877. He was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in the fall of 1862; but, although he never fell into any habits of immorality or dissipation, he made no pretension to living a high Christian life. Few have ever lived a life of more devotion to others. At the death of his father the care of a large family fell mainly upon him, then only a farmer boy. Nobly he struggled with poverty and adversity, forgetting self entirely in his desire to see his sisters educated and provided for. Although his own education was neglected, his judgment was remarkably clear, and his knowledge acquired by reading was equal to that of others who had much better opportunities. During a protracted meeting in Sharon, in October, 1876, he first began to feel that he should lead a better life, and from that time there was a gradual change in his nature. He was attacked by that fell destroyer of so many hearts and homes—consumption—in January, 1877. Even after he was too weak to walk he used almost superhuman energy to make arrangements on the farm before he should be obliged to take his bed. Everything that could possibly be done by a devoted mother, loving sisters and kind friends for his comfort was done, but naught would bring back the bloom to his sunken cheek or fill his heart with hopeful hope. Day by day he grew weaker, never a murmur escaping his patient lips. More gentle and loving he became until his heart seemed filled with that beautiful Christian charity that none but a follower of Jesus can know. His sufferings were often intense, but we knew of them more by the lines of care on his pale face than from any complaining words. The only desire he had to live was to shield from care his beloved mother and two unmarried sisters, who had nursed him so faithfully during the long, weary days and nights of his sickness. He seemed to appreciate every little kindness bestowed upon him and they were very many, but often said he could never repay his mother and sisters for their tender care. There is a void in their hearts which will never be filled; but we feel sure that he is with his sainted father.

W. H. H.

DIED, at his residence near Louisville, Winston county, Miss., February 28, 1878, Mr. REESE PERKINS, in the sixty-eighth year of his age. He was born in Chesterfield district, S. C.; removed from his native State to Alabama, and after a two years' residence there he came to the State of Mississippi. He first settled in Noxubee county, but for the last twenty years has been a resident of Winston county. He was a man of strong impulses, and did not always pause to calculate the consequences of an act or a word. At the same time these impulses were often generous and noble. He was of feeble constitution, and of nervous temperament, and was little calculated to rally under great mental affliction. His son George, in the strength of young manhood, was murdered in cold blood. The shock was too great. The feeble old man sank under the blow. Rather late in life he was married to Miss Mary Thompson. Six children were the result of this marriage. In March, 1877, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Since that time those who knew him best can testify that he did strive a Christian life. This was manifest in the great concern he expressed for the religious good of his children, sending messages invoking the prayers of their friends for their salvation. He claimed most emphatically to have made his peace with God, and to be at peace with all mankind, even with the murderers of his son, and was often happy on his sick-bed, at times elated by the power of Divine song, and then melted into sweet peace by the reading of the word of God or religious conversation. He said that not a doubt rested on his mind in regard to his acceptance with God. Not one cloud nor mist floated between him and his hope of a heavenly inheritance. He died of catarrh and general debility. Thus passed away a worthy citizen, a generous neighbor, a tender father and an affectionate husband.

BRO. THOMAS MILLETT died in Lake Charles, La., January 1, 1878. He was the son of Frederick Millett and Mary Argent, and was born in London, England, June 7, 1817. His father moved to New York while he was a child. Of his early life I know but little, nor in what age he became religious. He was for some time a member of the Presbyterian Church, but, becoming dissatisfied, he left it and joined the Methodists. He was licensed to preach in 1838, was received on trial into the Louisiana Conference in 1872, and appointed to the Sugar-Town mission; in 1873 and 1874 he traveled the Lafourche mission, and in 1875 the Rapides mission. At the close of the year 1874 he withdrew from the Conference and the ministry, and spent the remainder of his life at Lake Charles. He was an invalid for three months, and at times seemed to have severe conflicts with the powers of evil; but he never let go his dependence on Christ, and faith triumphed. The writer visited him often during his sickness, and always found him ready to talk of things that are spiritual. Salvation through Christ was his theme. A short time before he died he said to a brother: "I am on the rock." When his voice was almost gone he made an effort to tell what he felt. A brother bent his ear to listen, but all that he could hear was: "Jesus." Thus he passed away, with the love of God beaming in his face, the triumph of faith flashing in his eye, and the name of Jesus trembling upon his lips.

JANE P. CAMPBELL, daughter of John and Deaney Autrey, was born in Union parish, La., March 20, 1851; was married to Thomas P. Campbell on the eighth of July, 1875, and soon emigrated to Robinson county, Texas. From thence she departed, on the twenty-fifth of January, 1878, into the spirit-world of the good. Her parents gave her to God in baptism (by Bro. Ephraim Pennington) in infancy. Having early religious training, she gave her heart to God at the age of ten years, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South under the ministry of Bro. N. A. Cravens. Her parents say she was a dutiful child and a faithful Christian; and from the time of her conversion, when occasion required to speak of death and the future, she invariably expressed herself as being ready, and not afraid to die. As she lived so she died. When the summons came she was not only ready, but, like the apostle, anxious to depart and be with Christ." She was asked: "What will you do with your little Bible?" She replied: "Leave him in the hands of God." Among the last words that fell from her lips were: "Let me go to my dear Jesus." May the bereaved husband and her two motherless infants be kept continually as under the shadow of the Almighty.

J. W. WATTS passed from the shores of time on the twenty-ninth of December, 1877, at his late residence in Coushatta, La. He was born in Bienville parish, La., in the year 1837; was converted in his native parish, and in the year 1857 became concerned about his eternal welfare. After being an anxious inquirer for several months he professed faith in the Lord Jesus and united himself to an army church. Soon he became a faithful soldier of the cross, well as for his country. When the war was over he came home and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and began a faithful member. In the year of his death, filling several important offices in the church. At one time he was a local preacher. At one time he was a class leader. He served the church in this capacity one year before his death, when he contracted a disease of the lungs, and gradually declined in health. About one month before his death Rev. Mr. Fuller visited him, and found his faith was still strong in Christ. He said he never had a doubt since he was converted. Under the strong influence of his death I was again with him, and heard him bear testimony to the goodness and power of God in his dying hour. He stated that if it was the will of his Master he was ready to go. A short time before he passed from earth with a heavenly smile, as though he had fallen asleep in Jesus.

JOEL PEARSON was born in the State of North Carolina in the year [illegible], died in St. Helena parish, La., in the year 1877.

Bro. Pearson was a member of the Methodist Church South for nearly forty years. He was a man who had a wonderful knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, and a model of character.

The funeral sermon was preached by the writer, who feels that in his death he has lost a kind friend and counselor in the church one of its purest and best members. Uncle Joel, as he was familiarly called, is known as an "old-fashioned Methodist," always doing all he could for the members to attend class meetings, prayer meetings and love-feasts. His death was unexpected to his friends, and we say unto this sainted man, I feel the privilege of being present with him during his illness. It was, indeed, a pleasure to enjoy the last hours of such a Christian man. Though, while sitting by his bedside, that death had no terrors for him was evident by one of his last expressions when he said: "Jesus will be with me." With the blessed assurance he fell asleep in the arms of Jesus.

J. S. PARKER.

ANOTHER aged pilgrim has gone to his eternal rest and reward. Mrs. MOSES BLACKWELL, was born near Greenville, Franklin county, Ga., February 17, 1787; was married to Miss E. Gage; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1822, and died near Homer, Claiborne parish, La., March 28, 1878, having lived over eighty years. He was for many years of that time a consistent member of the church. For a number of years he was a class-leader. He was one of the church of his choice. The last of his life he gave up all hope of ever leaving his bed, but he spent his days visiting his children and attending church. He went to camp-meeting and camp meetings with a zeal that all his children ever be blessed with the example of piety.

OUR dear and excellent sister CYNTHIA MCKENNON, has passed away. She was born in the city of New York, but when quite a child she came to Louisiana with her people. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South when quite young, in Lake Providence. February the twenty-seventh she was a sufferer long and hard before the shining shore. She was sixty-two years old at the time of her death.

She was faithful and true; lived only to die, and now, no doubt, rests from the long day's work. "Their works do follow their labors." The family has the sympathy of many friends.

DIED, on Shelly Island, Calcasieu parish, La., December 12, 1877, BRIAR A. LARKINS, aged sixty-two years, one month and thirteen days. For many years she had been an invalid. O precious promise! Lord, fulfill to us. Come, blessed Spirit, and convince us of sin; make us to feel sinfulness and the misery of a state of estrangement from God. Reveal Christ to us, and produce faith in our hearts, whereby alone his merits may be imputed to us.—H. Exhibitor.

The keeper of Boone Island light-house, on the coast of New Hampshire, reports that a flock of wild geese, dazzled by the glare of the light, flew against the lenses of the lights ago, and eleven of them were killed outright. This is a very common occurrence at lighthouses.

Statistics of Pauperism and Crime, North and South.

BY REV. R. K. HARGROVE, D. D.

[illegible] of the "Ninth Annual [illegible] of the Freedmen's Aid Society [illegible] Methodist Episcopal Church" [illegible] by the writer in the Methodist, New York, last September [illegible] into several other papers, [illegible] this paragraph:

"The attention of some of your [illegible] may never have been directed [illegible] following facts, indicating the [illegible] material and moral status of [illegible] slave-holding States, even [illegible] the devastation of war, and [illegible] the disorganization incident [illegible] inauguration of a new industrial [illegible] system. On page 568 of the [illegible] Census of the United States" [illegible] showing the paupers supported [illegible] the criminals actually in confinement in each State on June 1, 1870" [illegible] figures show this comparative [illegible] statistical report of the government shows that pauperism and crime are less prevalent, both in fact and in proportion to population, at the South than at the North, with all the native citizens. Respecting [illegible] whites the figures show a decided advantage in favor of the late slave-holding States; while among the [illegible] race, according to population, the Northern States have nearly [illegible] times as many criminals, and [illegible] times as many paupers, as the Southern States. In other words, the official report shows the white South to be, in physical [illegible] and moral character about [illegible] per cent. in advance of [illegible] Northern States, while the condition of the negro North is more [illegible] fold, or two-fold, than of the [illegible] in the Southern States. A study into the causes and the [illegible] might prove interesting and [illegible]

[illegible] of its publication the [illegible] called forth an editorial [illegible] Dr. H. Fowler, of the New York Christian Advocate. In the New Christian Advocate Circular of March 27, to the Northwestern Christian Advocate, Chicago [illegible] same date and to the Pittsburg Christian Advocate of March [illegible], this gross paragraph [illegible] and a reply by Dr. E. D. [illegible]. The opening sentence [illegible] this last article had appeared before, and is reproduced by [illegible]

[illegible] Dr. Mansfield is [illegible] to the said grossly misrepresentation in the language, "He [illegible] that the negro is a great deal [illegible] being in a state of abject [illegible]," his repetition of a [illegible] made by Dr. Fowler, now re[illegible] with apparent confidence, [illegible] to notice his article.

[illegible] I ask attention to the significant [illegible] that none of my critics call [illegible] question the accuracy of my [illegible] of the census. I have correctly [illegible] the official record. It is as [illegible] it.

[illegible] Dr. Fowler and Dr. Mansfield [illegible] to the same expedient to break [illegible] force of these figures. Both [illegible] that the census reports [illegible] themselves are defective, erroneous [illegible] misleading. They intimate that [illegible] upper" and "criminal." In the [illegible] they have no definite and exact [illegible]ning; that they mean one thing [illegible] applied to the South, and another when applied to the North; [illegible] saying thus my opponents rob of [illegible] the numbers signify nothing. [illegible] such a position by Dr. Fowler is [illegible] more surprising because of the [illegible]dence and apparent satisfaction [illegible] which he has appealed to these [illegible] census reports to prove both [illegible] relative and the real inferiority [illegible] the South in other respects. The [illegible]ministry and the feebleness of [illegible] defense seemed to mar its own [illegible]ple population. A formal reply [illegible] been considered unnecessary.

[illegible] to Dr. Mansfield, he does not [illegible] wait for the explosion of this fearful bombshell thrown into my facts; until, in apparent forgetfulness, he changes his base, and brings the charge against me, as an incautious and incompetent "dabbler in statistics," that I have outraged public justice in that I withheld Mr. Walker's clear and precise definition of what he means in the census by "pauper." A moment ago, "pauper," in the census, according to Dr. Mansfield, meant nothing in particular; now its meaning is specific, exact and technical. Who shall decide between Dr. Mansfield in one sentence and Dr. Mansfield in the next? As Mr. Walker is his own witness, I suppose objection will not be made to his decision. Let him speak. He says substantially that "pauper" means the poor sustained in charitable institutions at public expense, not including those rendered dependent by mental and physical infirmities, and receiving the benefits of "hospitals, dispensaries, asylums for the insane, the idiotic, the blind, the deaf and dumb."

On account of the difficulty in a perfect classification of the destitute, as distinct from the excepted classes, he does not claim absolute mathematical accuracy in these reports. But he does say: "The effort has been, however, made to make the returns for each State an equivalent for those of every other." Then, referring to the inaccuracy of a certain column in this table, from which we were careful not to quote, he concludes thus: "The numbers reported respectively as receiving poor-support, and as in prison on the first of June 1870, are regarded as quite accurately determined. Errors may be found to exist, but an extensive correspondence, on the part of the census office, has established their substantial accuracy and completeness." And the particular numbers thus vouched for, are those from which my figures are all taken.

Aside from the marked inconsistency of both Dr. Fowler and Dr. Mansfield, their objection to the reliability of my statistics is, upon the testimony of Mr. Walker, the superintendent of the census, shown to be utterly groundless. The resort to which they are driven shows the alternative to be extreme and desperate.

Since "paupers," in the census report, are those receiving assistance from public institutions for the relief of the poor, Dr. Mansfield's next insinuation is that the real deficiency of the South is in such humane institutions, and not in proper inmates for them. He takes occasion to glorify his section for the number of its workers, because it argues better and ampler provisions for that class. Whether the plea that the increase of humane institutions works an increase of pauperism be a safe and satisfactory ground on which to base the superior civilization of his section is a matter for Dr. Mansfield himself to determine. If pauperism be a glory, far be it from me to pluck its plumes. Let those contest his laurels who desire them. He boasts that Ohio has an infirmary in every county, and alms-houses in every city. She has more loose population than the entire South put together, and three hundred thousand foreign-born people." If, as the context implies, he means by "loose population" fit material for poor-houses and work-houses, then he exactly corroborates the figures of the census, and explodes them by the law of supply and demand.

Dr. Mansfield exhibits one streak of magnanimity which the sheerest justice requires me to note. Confident as he is that the larger the population of "paupers" in a State the higher the civilization, he proceeds with almost reckless indifference to the glory of Ohio, and with a generosity equally prodigal toward the South, to concede that a few of the Southern States, be specified where the freedmen are very numerous, have actually a larger proportion of paupers than Ohio herself. The doctor will accord our acknowledgments for this tribute to the superiority of our Southern civilization, particularly as it applies to those localities where the freedmen abound, and slavery had produced its most thronging results.

From this compliment let us now turn to a question of fact. Is there any sufficient ground for his insinuation that the South provides less liberally than the North, for the actual necessities of its poor? It may surprise some to know that he adduces no evidence, makes not even a pretense of proof. He makes the bold, heedless assumption, and trusts apparently to credulity and prejudice alone for credence. Do the poor of the South suffer more than those of the North? Is the provision made for them less adequate to their necessities? I deny the fact, and challenge all critics to produce the evidence.

Too long already, prejudice and passion have prevailed. We now appeal to the poetry of facts. In the meantime let no intelligent and just mind accept his slander for information.

But this ugly insinuation, destitute as it is of proof, does not meet the exigencies of the case. Dr. Mansfield adroitly overlooks the fact that these official figures show an excess of "criminals" as well as of "paupers." In the North. If he doubts our humane disposition, he dare not question the capacity of our prisons. They are not full. He must seek a more plausible explanation of these unpalatable facts.

Evidently doubtful of the efficiency of mere insinuation, Dr. Mansfield's next resort is to logic. To his marvelous feat of ratiocination your attention is now directed. He considerately reminds us that to construe statistics requires uncommon wisdom, which he proceeds to supply. He says they are two-edged tools, and cut unskilled hands that rashly attempt to use them. He "demonstrates!" He establishes our "absurdity!" Yes, he flourishes both these forceful words to drive us from our facts. Note his language. "Thus:

Paupers in Africa	[illegible]
Paupers in Texas	[illegible]
Paupers in Ohio	[illegible]
Paupers in North Carolina	[illegible]
Paupers in Virginia	[illegible]

Here we have a complete demonstration that, judged by the 'pauper' standard, Africa is in the best condition, Texas next, and Virginia, with its intelligence, high-tone, and Christianity, is in the worst and most miserable condition! Thus is the proposition of the Rev. Mr. Hargrove reduced to a simple absurdity. Before the war, when four millions of blacks were in slavery, the case for the South was still stronger, for the slaves had no paupers, and what a blessed condition they were in!!!

To see this "demonstration" (!) one needs to be free from prejudice and color-blindness. Let us try it: "The slaves had no paupers." Property interest and law both required the master to clothe and feed and house his slave. In the one item of pauperism, the only one now in question, the negroes were in better condition then than now. No absurdity here. I furthermore pledge myself to show (if official statistics are accepted) that before the war, in respect of pauperism, the South was far in advance of the North, and its own present condition. In reference to Texas and Virginia, no doubt the statistics exhibit the correct relative proportion of paupers—the point, and the only point, here in question. Whatever the facts as to "intelligence, high tone, and Christianity," which are to be educed from other premises, they ought not to be obtruded here to warp and bias, by confusion and prejudice, the inquirer after truth.

As to the condition of Africa being "best," and that of Texas "next," and Virginia "worst and most miserable," let us see if we can fathom the profundity of the process that discloses this wonder. For simplicity we will reduce it to syllogistic form. Major premise: Africa is enveloped in gross darkness, peopled with naked savages, and has neither census nor eleemosynary institutions. Minor premise: The carefully-collected statistics of the United States, in which humane institutions abound, show that the great States of Texas and Virginia are taking care of their helpless poor—the one a certain proportion of her whole population, and the other a larger proportion. Conclusion: Therefore, Africa is in the best condition, Texas next, and Virginia is in the worst and most miserable condition!!!

Possibly it may be stated more concisely still. Because Africa is a heathen country without a census, or any humanitarian establishments, therefore the statistics of the United States, however carefully collected and accurate, are not only valueless, but dangerous—a two-edged sword as likely to cut one way as another.

Whatever may be true of the ninth census, Dr. Mansfield's logic is unquestionably two-edged and fire-proof. To its versatile capabilities no difficulties are formidable, no Gordian knot is intricate. It laughs at impossibilities, and "demonstrates" truth and falsehood with equal facility.

Even Dr. Fowler must now shake in his shoes, lest the deplorable condition of Africa should blast all his cherished theories of illiteracy North and South, founded on these treacherous census reports, and reduce him to a hopeless absurdity. This logical boomerang gyrates to any point of the compass. Cannot somebody prevail on Dr. Mansfield to forbear?

This brings us to his last desperate charge on our battleries. Up to this point he has maneuvered for position, his tried tactics; and little pits, and dark movements. He now shuts his eyes, uncovers himself, and, with a reckless and almost sublime heroism, dashes straight upon our position. Hear him: "Let us now see what the proportion of native whites in the South and North is. More than half the paupers and criminals in the Northern States are foreign-born—in the South but very few. Exclude the foreign-born, both North and South, and make the comparison with native-born persons, and how will the South appear? We advise the Rev. Mr. Hargrove not to inquire!"

This advice is considerate but unfortunately comes too late. We have already done that very exhaustive thing against which he so earnestly cautions us.

Our statistics, which he quotes, do make the comparison between native-born whites and native-born whites in proportion to number, and between colored and colored. The foreign element was eliminated in anticipation of this hackneyed objection, and that no pretext might cover up the naked facts. Native-born white criminals and paupers are largely more numerous in the North than in the South in proportion to the total number of native-born whites in the respective sections. And the disparity as to colored and colored is fright[illegible] large, and in the same direction.

How was it possible for Dr. Mansfield to read and quote these statistics, and my remarks upon them, and yet totally misapprehend their character? What does he mean? Who is he? Will somebody lend him a pair of spectacles?

A Ayrshire man took his child to the minister to be baptized, who asked him: "Are you prepared for so solemn and important an occasion?" "Prepared?" he echoed, with some indignation. "I have a firlot o' bannock baking, two hams an' a gallon o' the best Highland whisky; and I wad like to ken what better preparation ye expeck frae a man in my condition o' life?"

Mr. Montgomery Blair is credited with telling this story: "Van Buren said to me in St. Louis, when I told him his son, Smith Van Buren, had been married: 'I thought he had given that girl up. Well, he's ruined. She is very rich.' Now he'll give up his profession of the law, where he had great ability, and become really a rich man—the least useful of human things. Poor Smith!"

"It is a beautiful starry night, and the seniors are out studying. First senior, who studies astronomy: "Look up there and see how beautiful Orion looks." Second senior, who does not study astronomy, but who has a streak of Irish blood: "Is that O'Ryan? Faith, then, there's one Irishman in heaven, anyhow!"—Cornell Era.

—Five missionary societies of Great Britain are now planting mission stations on Lakes Tanganyika and Nyanza.

—The question of the use of instrumental music in public worship is hotly discussed by the Presbyterians of Ireland. It is certain to come up in the next General Assembly.

—The number of vacancies in Catholic parishes in Prussia has reached 700. These, however, could readily be filled by idle priests if the church would conform to the May laws.

—The Christian Catholic Church, of Switzerland, numbers 55 congregations, 17 associations, and nearly 80,000 adherents. Since his consecration Bishop Herzog has consecrated nearly 2,000 persons.

—The Irish Episcopal Church has benefited financially by disestablishment. In its ordinary parochial contributions there has been a steady increase. Last year the contributions to the sustentation fund were increased by $55,000, and over $8,000,000 has been received for the fund since 1870.

—The work of colportage is making progress in Ireland. A gentleman proposes to give $1,500 to the Bible and Colportage Society if twenty new colporteurs be started within three months. If only ten be started he will give $500; and if the offer of $1,500 be claimed, he is likely to make a further offer for the extension of the work.

—Two temperance clubs are now sustained in Toledo—one of the Murphy order, the other quite similar, but dropping the distinctively religious element. Both have fitted up rooms and are working to save men. The latter—the Toledo Temperance Reform Club—was addressed on a recent Sunday evening by the Rev. I. C. Bilbun, of Plymouth church, Adrian, Mich., on "The Adder's Nest in Christian Civilization."

Income from all sources, $2,099,850. The synod of the church has just been in session at Glasgow. Rev. Dr. J. C. Moffat was present as the corresponding delegate from the Presbyterian General Assembly of the United States.

—The Baltimore Methodist Episcopal Conference, at its recent session, adopted a protest against the proposed appropriation by the City Council of $25,000 to the St. Mary's Industrial Institute for Boys. They object to it on the ground that the institute is a sectarian institution, under the authority of the Archbishop of Baltimore, and Roman Catholic worship is conducted; to the exclusion of any other, and that the act would be the creation and partial endowment of a State church.

—Three years ago a Society for Providing Nurses for the Sick Poor was formed in Belfast, Ireland. The third annual meeting was held in that city, May 25, 1877. The mayor, John Preston, Esq., occupied the chair. Several distinguished gentlemen took part in the proceedings. The society employs five nurses, who are under the direction of lady superintendents. During the past year 498 patients have been attended, and in special cases money and clothing were distributed. The value of such a society to a population largely composed of working people is incalculable.

—The work of the missionaries in Japan is full of encouragement. A Presbyterian missionary in Yokohama writes that he never expected to see what he now sees as the fruits of a few years of work. There are connected with the mission, he says, eight churches and two ordained native clergymen. There are three native churches in Yokohama alone, and in one of these seven were baptized December 1. He adds: "I wish you could drop in among us on Sunday morning about half-past ten o'clock. What a pleasant surprise it would be to you! A room about fifty-five by thirty, full of quietly-behaved Japanese—men, women and children; an organ played by a Japanese, a medical student of mine, and a lovely Christian. You would hear some of our sweetest old tunes sung very well, indeed; to hymns in Japanese, the Bible read, a prayer made, and a sermon preached, all in the native language, to an eager, listening audience."

—A correspondent of the New York Observer in a letter from Natal, South Africa, quotes an account from a Kaffarian paper of the establishment of a mission among the Bavuals. The Banyais are a savage race, living in Momomdapa, just south of the Zambesi river. In the neighborhood of Mpemle A French missionary, M. Coillard, with his wife and a small party of native evangelists, have arrived in Banyailand, after a long and dangerous journey. On the route they were almost constantly followed and surrounded by crowds of savages, and their arrival in Banyailand, though attended with a pleasant reception, was followed by very disagreeable consequences. Chief Masonda presented the company with a fat ox, with so many expressions of friendship that they had no hesitation about accepting and slaying it. They gave in return a fine blanket with which the chief was much pleased at first. But he wanted powder, and by degrees stiffened his request for it; until, with a crowd of his savages, he endeavored to take by force what he could not get by coaxing. They surrounded the party, took the oxen from the wagon, and began to plunder the goods, when M. Coillard, proceeding with great coolness and good judgment, and refusing to fire upon the crowd, succeeded in getting the oxen again and saving nearly all the goods. An ox was given to Masonda for the one received from him and the party were permitted to proceed to their destination without receiving or inflicting personal injury. They have settled at Nyanikoe.—Independent.

MYSTERY.

BY MRS. JAMES A. FIELD.

What is this in a golden case,
Holding its little hands up in the air,
Going tick-tick, tock-tick, tick-tick-tick,
Never too slow and never too quick?
Right it up to the baby's ear;
Tick-tick-tick—does the baby hear?

Like the ticking of a golden case
The world is a strange and beautiful place
On the border land of eternity,
Its sweetly wonders wind time away to.
For, what is a watch's narrow rim,
It is only a tick-tick-tick to him.

The "Gold Dime."

DEAR CHILDREN: Let me tell you about a sweet little girl four years old, and what she did. It may be that some of you, after reading this, will see that you, too, can do the same. In the northwest corner of the Alabama Conference there is a pleasant little village called Eutaw. In this little town live many sweet little girls, who love the church, the Sunday-school and the preacher. I can't tell you about all these little girls, but must tell you something about one of them. Little Anna Mat is certainly as sweet a little girl as ever pressed a child's pure kiss on the lips of a Methodist preacher or anybody else. Well, I was at her papa's house one day, and among other things the condition of the Publishing House had a place in our conversation. The little girl's father, who, by the way, is an editor, and a good man, and the superintendent of the Sunday-school, was not present, and the conversation was held with her mother. Little Anna Mat sat near in her little chair, listening with as much attention apparently as if she appreciated everything that was said. Her mother, perhaps observing the attention which she paid, and her apparent appreciation of the condition of things at the Publishing House, turned to her and said: "Daughter, would you not like to give your gold dime to Bro. P. for the Publishing House?" At this her eyes brightened, and the light of a sweet smile played over her face, and, inclining her head gently and gracefully to one side, in her own peculiar and inimitable way, she said: "Yes, mamma. Please get it for me." "Not right now, daughter, wait awhile." A few days afterward the "gold dime" was placed in my hands, and it proved to be not ten cents, but two and a half dollars in gold. A week or two later, under "Collections for Relief of Publishing House," appeared the name of Miss Anna Mat Monroe, eight years old, $2.50. She was then only a little more than four years old. She was not eight, as it is stated in the "collections." In the evident pleasure with which she even thought of giving the dime to the house was seen an illustration of the doctrine taught by our Savior: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." And now, little girls and boys, how many of you are willing to give a "gold dime" for the Publishing House? How many mothers are there who will suggest to their children that they give something, and then place in their hands something to give? A gold dime will do.

From Our Little Friends.

MOSS, LA., [illegible]

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a constant reader of your valuable paper. We have no Sabbath school in our neighborhood any nearer than eight miles. It seems as if the little boys and girls all take any interest whatever in getting up a Sabbath school. I love to go to Sabbath-school very much, and would go every Sunday if we lived near enough. Bro. Bradley is our pastor this year. We like him very much. I joined the church last August. I have been trying to live for God ever since. From your little friend,

MR. EDITOR: Elisha plowed with twelve yoke of oxen. The king of Ai was hanged on a tree. As soon as the sun went down Joshua had his carcass cast in at the entering of the gate of the city, and raised thereon a great heap of stones. Ten plagues were sent upon the Egyptians. The first was the turning of their waters into blood; the last the death of the first-born in every family. I like the ADVOCATE very much.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: As I have never seen a letter from this part of the country I thought I would write you one. I live so far from a church that I do not attend church often. I have five sisters and one sweet little brother. He is the pet of the family. Tell Dosia Andrus that David was not allowed to build the temple because he shed blood; it is found in First Chronicles xxii. 8. I will ask a question: Where was Joshua buried?

The Legend of the Star-Fish.

Many, many years ago, before this world looked as it does now, when the oceans were very large and the dry land exceedingly small, it happened that high up in the heavens there was great trouble and excitement among the stars. They had always been very quiet and peaceful, loving one another, and never longing for anything that was beyond their reach; but at this time a new star was born, and he had an entirely different nature from all the others. He was selfish, dissatisfied, and altogether disagreeable.

One thing that troubled him much was that he belonged to the family of the Fish. Now you know that there are so many stars in the heavens that they are divided into families; there is the family of the Lion, of the Crab, of the Dog, and so on; and this wretched little star was foolish enough to hanging that his family was not quite so aristocratic as some of the others, so he fretted and fumed, making himself and others very uncomfortable.

His kind and peaceful neighbors bore with him as long as they could; but at last he became intolerable, so the Fish-stars held a meeting to see what could be done with their unruly brother. They asked him why he was so unhappy and cross, and he answered that he had rather never have been born than have had to associate with the common people he had seen all his life. There were other families much more aristocratic, where he could have passed a happier life.

His relatives were sorry to hear him talk so, and told him that all the families in the great heavens were equal, and that the kind Father who placed them there would be sorry to find any one unhappy; and then the Queen Lady of the Fish stars bade him be good and quiet, or else he would be banished from the beautiful blue heavens. They allowed him a year for improvement, but there was no change in the star's behavior; he quarreled as much as ever, and made every one most unhappy. Then he heard the startling news that he was to be sent hurling through the air, down to the earth below him. He begged; he pleaded, he promised to be good, but to vain, the verdict had been passed, and could not be recalled.

So, on a cold and cheerless night, downward through the bitter air sped the wretched star. Where he was going he knew not; behind him the ghosts had hidden the stars, his only friends, and before him was a darkness that could be felt.

Hark! A voice, from amidst the blackness, he heard as a whisper, and it said: "Those who have always despised the family of the Fishes shall become one in reality!"

And the star-fish may often be seen on sea-shores, among the crevices of rocks, alone and deserted, sadly gazing upward to its old home and friends.—White Jacket.

Tamerlane and the Ant.

All who have read the history of Scotland know the story of the brave king, Robert Bruce, who, when he was hiding from his enemies, and had almost given up all hopes of setting his country free, because he had tried six times and not succeeded, was comforted and encouraged to try again, because he saw a spider that had tried in vain six times to make her cobweb. She determined that if the spider tried the seventh time and succeeded, he would try a seventh time to drive away the enemies of Scotland. The spider did try a seventh time, and succeeded—so did the king. A story very much like that is told of a brave Eastern king called Tamerlane, or Timur Lank, who lived as much as five hundred years ago. At the beginning of his wars he was so closely pressed by his enemies that he had to hide himself among some ruins. He was making up his mind to give up trying to conquer, when he saw a little ant trying to lift a grain of wheat—perhaps, indeed, what Tamerlane took for a grain of wheat was the ant's egg as these little insects have eggs very nearly as big as themselves, and so like grains of corn as to be often mistaken for them by those who do not watch them closely—as big as herself, up a hillock. Every time the ant neared about to drag her grain up the mound she fell back, and had to begin her work all over again. Again and again did the persevering ant try, and each time in vain, till at last, at the sixty-ninth time, she succeeded in dragging her grain to the top of the hillock. Tamerlane was so encouraged by seeing her that he determined to persevere, and he became a great conqueror. A greater king than Robert Bruce or Tamerlane has said: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise."

The only way to be faithful in anything is to be faithful in everything. The only way to be faithful in great things is to be faithful in small things. When I was in college I engaged a country man to bring me a load of wood in November, of a certain price. November came, and the price of wood had risen. But on the appointed day my man arrived. I congratulated him on his punctuality. "Yes," he said, "I could have had two dollars more per cord for my wood a home. But I had promised to bring it to you, and so I said I shall be a poor sort of a fellow if my word is not worth two dollars."—James Freeman Clarke.

"Poor boy," said a lady, as she took out her purse to give the little beggar some change. "Yes, I am a poor boy" said the young rascal, squeezing a tear out of his eye, "and have four sick mothers to support." The lady put back her purse, shook her head and walked sadly away.

Haste usually turns upon a matter of ten minutes too late, and may be avoided by a habit like that of Lord Nelson, to which he ascribed his success in life, of being ten minutes too early.—Bore.

The Whole Armor.

The emphasis is upon "the whole." The danger is from the wiles of the devil. Ability to withstand in the evil day depends upon the completeness of the Christian's armor. The several things are truth, righteousness, peace, faith, the hope of salvation, the word of God, and watching unto prayer. If a Christian at all, these various gifts, graces and experience are present in some measure in the heart and life. But they may not be equally present. Our knowledge of the word of God, and its skillful use, may be defective. Righteousness, so far as it describes uprightness, integrity and perfect honesty, may have fallen into a subordinate place. And, on the other hand, these have been magnified somewhat at the expense of faith, peace and hope. The armor may be put on in part, and just in proportion as we fail to put it all on is our peril. The soldier who wears only a helmet may keep a whole head, while for the lack of a breast-plate he is thrust through and slain. If any part is without protection the devil will be sure to find it. Ignorance of the word, negligence in prayer, looseness in regard to business contracts, are points which the tempter is not likely to overlook. His keen eye is sure to detect the weak places, and his assaults will be directed accordingly. The soul may be girded with truth—that is, with perfect sincerity and unswerving loyalty to the truth—and yet it may be overcome if the shield of faith is not vigorously handled.

The reason of the overthrow of the soul is in the failure to put on the whole armor of God. There is a defect somewhere in the Christian character, in the preparations for the attacks of the enemy, and in neglecting those safeguards which the infinite mercy would throw around us. A partial apprehension of doctrine and experience is always dangerous. The religious hobbyist is necessarily weak, and most liable to be overcome. While his forces are concentrated at one point the others are uncovered and defenseless. Where the attention is directed exclusively to some special doctrine, or to some special aspect of the spiritual life, there is a corresponding withdrawal of thought and study from other phases of duty and experience. A healthy religious life is that in which all the graces blend together, and in which the entire development is uniform and symmetrical. The specialist endangers his standing by thus giving his strength and study to a part, while the divine order is to build up and fortify the whole man. Every soldier must be completely armed in himself. An army composed of soldiers, some of whom wear only helmets, others only greaves, and others only breast-plates, while swords only are put in the hands of others, would be a very vulnerable body. The effectiveness of the whole depends upon the completeness of the armor of each individual. In fact the armor of God is a unit. The several pieces have a certain correspondence, and each part contributes to the effectiveness of the whole. Abstractly we can, of course, think of faith as something distinct from truth, and righteousness as different from peace and love; but as these exist in Christian character they are abreast of each other if the development be sound and healthy.

The care of the Christian will be to give to each its due emphasis, and to see that each has its due importance in his experience. He will not lose himself in the study of a single piece, and so give himself up to it, in the spirit of a special pleader, as to make the rest of little moment. He will rather dwell upon every feature in the gracious panoply, and aim at perfection in the whole. And this also will be the endeavor of the wise Christian teacher. Paul's direction is eminently judicious and right: "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil." The pastor and teacher will declare the whole counsel of God. Precepts, doctrine, experience, practical duties, will be presented in equable and harmonious proportions. Repentance, faith, holiness, will engage the attention, and the old Wesleyan advice to awaken, to build up and to comfort will enter into the staple of nearly every sermon. The aim will be to so preach Christ as to warn and teach every man in all wisdom, and to "present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." A one sided and badly balanced religious character results from partial conceptions of the inspired teachings and from the habit of magnifying one aspect of doctrine and experience at the expense of others. The shield and the breast-plate and the helmet are each of such importance that neither can be dispensed with, and with these put on, it will not do to overlook the girdle and the shoes.

The perfect Christian is he who puts on the whole armor, burnished and honored in every part, and with no open joints exposed to the arrows of the adversary. In these days of bankruptcy and business disaster there is complaint that the churches do not sufficiently emphasize practical righteousness. It may be so. Never was the breast-plate of righteousness and the girdle of truth more needed than now. The armor should be strong all around, and especially at the point most assailed. But to be strong at all it must be so at every point. The devil's wiles change with times and circumstances, and unless the whole armor be put on we shall fall in the evil day. And it is necessary not only that we may be safe, but also that we may be useful. Religion is a war of invasion and of attack. To wield the sword of the Spirit effectively, and to prevail in prayer, much depends upon the wholeness of our Christian armor. Partiality and incompleteness in religious doctrine and experience are not less a weakness in attack than in defense. He both stands and conquers who puts on the whole armor.

The Sons of Zeruiah.

Christianity has frequently been charged with availing itself of the help of unscrupulous men, and afterward of disowning these men, and repaying with ingratitude their services. Very rarely in the political-religious history of any great man do we find all the actors upon the stage of a pure character; and frequently we find intimately connected with the most glorious causes men of the most unscrupulous life. In the history of David, the character of Joab cannot be omitted. In the history of the Reformation Henry the Eighth figures almost as conspicuously as Luther or Zwingle. Christianity in earlier ages had many bad men, who patronized it for their own ends, or from reasons which had no connection with the principles of religion. They used the forces which this religion afforded them for their own enslavement; and even could it be shown that religion did the same with them, it would only prove that they were beaten at their own game.

But shall we admit the charge without proof, that such is the tactics of religion? By reference to David's history, as well as to the Reformation, we find abundant proof to the contrary. We find two points in common in the situation of David and the sons of Zeruiah. They were klansmen, and outlaws. Whether they were outlawed together because they were kinsmen, or whether Joab and his brethren had been guilty of some crime against the crown, is not stated. Let us, then, assume the most charitable hypothesis: that they were outlaws simply because they were the near kinsmen of David. This being supposed, the bond which existed between them and David must have been very intimate and strong. However different in temper, neither party could ignore the necessity of union in their common perils. When the fight was for life to all, David could not stop to ask Joab whether he was fighting for truth or whether he was seeking revenge for his wrongs. If David killed his man in battle, merely because he had no alternative to kill or be killed, he had no time to stop and ask Joab what spirit predominated in his breast as he killed his man. But we do know this much of David, both as to his instructions and example: He was for defending his remaining rights and achieving the lost by as strict an adherence to law and as uniform reverence for the established authorities as possible; while Joab and his brethren acted upon the maxim that "all is fair in war." We know that David repressed, as much as possible, this lawless and vindictive spirit.

This fact of itself is proof that David was not using these men merely for his own aggrandizement, with the intention of throwing them off when he had accomplished his ends. His enemies and theirs happened in these cases to be the same, and what they were doing was of their own accord; and consequently he reaped the benefit of what they did, not because they were working for him but for their own ends. By and by the prowess and success of these desperate clansmen so increased as to defy the restraints that David had for a long time exercised over them. Yet his own interests were in a precarious condition. The dynasty of Saul was still reigning. The only member of that family that had ever shown him any friendship had fallen upon Gilboa's heights. The only men whose fidelity to him had been tested were these same sons of Zeruiah and their companions in arms. Others had proved themselves more treacherous and not less cruel. There was no one to execute punishment upon them when he might pronounce it, and all that he could do as a man was to protest against their cruel perfidy and leave God to visit their iniquities upon them. David doubtless foresaw the final consequences of this lawless spirit. No one of his penetration could fail to see that each act of lawlessness would embolden the perpetrators more and more, until they would openly defy his authority. Even after he was settled upon the throne of united Israel he was unable to throw Joab off. The appointment of Abner to the command of the army was followed immediately by his murder at the hands of Joab. David could only protest. There was no man that he could nominate but Joab, who already held the army under his control. The next effort of David in appointing Amasa was equally unsuccessful. Hardly had Amasa taken command before he was murdered, with less excuse on the part of Joab than was Abner. David was helpless. There was no man who would undertake to arrest the assassin, or who dared assume command of an army that adhered to him, because they knew he was bold and skillful in war. Very little do soldiers care if they know they have a general who is willing to share their privations and dangers, and if he has proved himself a good fighter. Joab had done this. He was as bold as unscrupulous, and had been as successful as bold. His influence over the army is indicated by his language to David, when he was weeping over the death of Absalom: "For I swear by the Lord, if thou go not forth, there will not tarry with thee one this night."

It has frequently happened in the history of the world that the good have been outlawed, just as was David. These have necessarily been thrown among the outlaws, and by the help of the outlawed they have finally regained their rights. But the real outlaw remains such after he comes back to his home. The good man has been warring against a government that has itself become an outlaw by its acts of oppression and cruelty. He avails himself of the help of that outlaw who happens to be on his side. He is from the first openly seeking the establishment of justice. This he proclaims alike to lawless partisan and oppressive government. His lawless partisan follows his fortunes, until the time comes when lawless government succumbs. Then his native lawlessness displays itself in defying the equitable rule of the good. Frequently the lawless elements of society have so gathered around this leading partisan that now an equally long struggle must go on between rightful authority and them before they are finally repressed; and, as in David's case, a life time may be too short to dislodge and punish the great leaders of violence and fraud. We may have to leave, as our dying charge to our children, the punishment of many a man who helped us to secure righteous government.

T. A. S. A.

The Mind in Christ.

The "mind that was in Christ" was to know no will of his own. Of his own accord he abdicated in favor of another. All his life and all his teaching was in reference to the rule of the Father. The will of the sent was lost in the will of the sender. It was voluntary. It was complete. There were no reservations. It was cheerful. It was a patient continuance. It was benevolent—for the good of others. It was disinterested—not with sinister motives.

This is the supreme factor in human life. In the life of God on earth it was illustrated for man. Subordinate only to the work of redemption, the example of Jesus, as a son, as an elder brother, as a servant, is important to the world. The will of the Father is to be our only rule. Our life must be modeled on his life. We are to walk as he walked. There must be a paramount desire to know his will. There must be a determination to do it when known; and this, too, at any and all cost. If it is to the scourgings, crown of thorns, the cross, no matter. If it is to the lions' den, or the fiery, burning furnace, still our deliverance—our resurrection to true life, our compact with raging wild beasts, or amity with fierce burnings—is found only in having "this mind."

Involved in this, the "mind in Christ" was the mind to serve others. This was the Father's will. He illustrated his own teaching—that it was "more blessed to give than to receive." By mere teaching this truth possibly could never have been impressed upon the world. In the example of the Son it is not merely stated, but demonstrated. We have a living lesson, in living flesh and blood. Argument can be met with argument, and statement with statement. Demonstration stops all controversy. The king, from his throne and palace, can talk beautifully of a life of sacrifice and the sweet beauty of benevolence. The philanthropist, never feeling the pain of want and hunger, not knowing the horrors of thirst, of nakedness, of imprisonment, of buffetings, of agonies and sweats of blood, can write gaudily of service to others, and a life of sacrifice. But only when the king descends from his throne and comes out of his palace, and surrenders all his possessions, and even his will, to another, will there be power in his teachings. "Sell all, and come follow me," applied to the tender hearted philanthropist, and he would doubtless turn away sorrowful.

In the mind of Christ the theoretical is lost in the practical. The mere theory is the whited sepulcher. The lesson taught humanity in "this mind" is this: that the only true service of self is a true service to others; and that this service of others is to be done without a thought of self. A thought of self, or reference to the will of man, is to destroy the virtue of the act. The rule would then be changed, and read: It is more blessed to receive than to give. All this strongly contravenes human wisdom and human thought. It is not because the truth is not truth. It is not because God is not upright. It is only because man is out of plumb.

As a matter of duty and of safety it is important that we know the mind of Christ, and that we have this mind. The mind of men—of philosophers, of the wise, of the disputer of this world—can avail as nothing. These are an empty will, without an inheritance to bestow. To have any other mind, any other model, any other example than that of Jesus, is very sorry philosophy and worse religion. It not only avails nothing to oppose ours to the will of God, but brings no comfort and solace in the season of trial. To think only of our own, and not on the things of another, is to live only the life of a superior sort of animal, and fail in the object of our being.

Fairly Stated.

Several of the Methodist Episcopal Church papers have expressed themselves, with no animus that cannot be mistaken, against the majority report of the Senate committee giving our Publishing House $150,000 damages. The organs of the Northern Church at Atlanta, New Orleans, Pittsburg and Chicago have been particularly bitter and violent in their denunciations of the majority report. This is what we expected of them, knowing their real spirit toward everything that is Southern and Southern Methodist. On the other hand, it is refreshing, and helps us toward a feeling of respect for Northern Methodism, to find the following in Zion's Herald, Boston:

We are indebted to the special Washington correspondent of the Advertiser for a copy of the majority and minority reports of the Committee on Claims upon the petition of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church for remuneration for the use of their property in Nashville, Tenn., during the civil war. The claim was for $288,000. The majority of the committee recommended the payment of $150,000. The argument upon which this result is reached is purely a legal one. It is not allowed because the institution is a charitable one. It is not denied that the agents and the editors were in hearty sympathy with the rebellion; but when the city of Nashville was first occupied by the Northern army, protection to all the citizens in their various trades and professions was promised by Gen. Buel. The Methodist Book Concern was never formally confiscated, but was taken possession of by the military department of the district as a military necessity, and its admirable facilities were used to the great advantage of the government throughout the war. Its ownership, in the estimation of the majority of the committee, by any legal act, never passed out of the hands of its proprietors. When the military rule ceased, the property was given up again to the original agents. Its petition for remuneration is based upon injury to building, to machinery, the use and loss of stock, rent, etc., and has been largely signed by leading Northern men, and by the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The minority report, which affirms that there is neither moral nor legal obligation resting on the government to make good the losses of the claimants, and therefore recommends that the claim be disallowed, bases its decision upon the disloyalty of the agents and editors, as shown in the literature published (among other issues, a book of military tactics for the Southern Confederacy) and in the official paper issuing from its presses; and also from the fact that a portion of its machinery and facilities were used for the manufacturing of arms for the Confederate States. The minority hold that the seizure, being the property of active enemies to the government, was legal, and that upon its surrender after the submission of the States in rebellion no ground for a legal claim could be urged. Both reports are well written and strongly argued. The majority is the more elaborate, and presents, with great force, a tenable ground upon which such a claim might be urged and granted, without necessarily opening a door for the admission of a thousand other less substantial and deserving petitioners for the incident damages falling upon individuals and corporations in the Southern States during the war.

Grave of Rev. John Wilkinson.

MR. EDITOR: A beautiful marble slab has recently been placed over the remains of Rev. John Wilkinson. Miss Lucy Somerindyke and Mrs. Emma Abbott collected the required amount by personal solicitation. The slab, raised perhaps eighteen inches or more above the ground, is supported upon brick-work, cemented and gracefully slanted. Of pure white marble, the slab bears the following inscription:

In Memory of
REV. JOHN WILKINSON,
Who was born in Parsonstown, Kings county, Ireland,
August 17, 1831,
And finished his course
April 7, 1875,
In Baton Rouge, La.,
Where his unexampled labors
Will never be forgotten:

So Jesus slept; God's dying Son
Passed through the grave, and blessed the bed:
Rest here, blest saint, till from his throne
The morning break and pierce the shade.

Break from his throne, illustrious morn:
Attend, O earth, his sovereign word;
Restore thy trust; a glorious form
Shall then arise to meet the Lord.

The Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker, in his memoir, read before our Annual Conference, says: "Bro. Wilkinson's next and last field of labor was Baton Rouge. Here he was the same blameless Christian, diligent student, faithful pastor, son of consolation, and popular preacher that he had ever been; only all this was magnified and intensified by constant growth in every spiritual, social and ministerial excellence." The grave of such a man should have had a stone upon it long ago, and we are glad that loving hearts and hands have put it there. It is to me a most pleasing duty to send information that the spot where the cherished form of the saluted Wilkinson awaits the resurrection dawn is marked by a marble slab, suitably inscribed.

J. T. SAWYER.

NOBLE BENEFACTION.—The Rev. S. A. Steel writes to Dr. Kelley, Richmond, Va., March 6: "Several days ago I received a letter from Walter, which, in part, was about a mission press. I am happy to inform you, as I have written him, that a liberal member of Broad Street station—our brother, J. N. Wilkinson—has given me $300 to procure that press. On the twenty-first of April next Bro. Wilkinson will be sixty-four years old, and this is the way he will celebrate the day. The money will be forwarded to Shanghai on that day as his thank-offering to God. We pray that it may be acceptable in his sight, and that the divine blessing may make the press the means of giving light to thousands that now sit in darkness." We chronicle this act of liberality with peculiar pleasure, and congratulate "Walter" on his good fortune. We are glad to hear that he and "Daisy" are well, and doing well in Shanghai. God bless them!—Nashville Christian Advocate.

The European and Eastern complication seems no nearer settlement than for weeks past. We still hope for peace. The decision of the question would appear to rest with Bismarck and Germany. The astute German chancellor develops his views and plans slowly and partially.

The brethren who handed their names and subscriptions for the Nashville Advocate to Bro. Werlein, at the last Louisiana Annual Conference, are requested, in case the paper has not been received, to communicate with Dr. Redford, agent.

The Arabs, who have many good proverbs, have one which is found true and truer the more experience we have of life. "While the word is yet unspoken," they say, "you are master of it; when once it is spoken, it is master of you."

BISHOP BOWMAN AND THE HOLINESS.—Bishop Bowman, says the New York Christian Advocate, in that part of his recent address before the Kansas Conference which discriminates between the true scriptural (and Wesleyan) view of sanctification and the erroneous teaching of some modern would-be reformers on that subject, is reported as saying:

"The higher life sanctification is drifting into the sermons of ministers of late. It is a practical error, and places them in danger of a division or secession from a large wing of the church. These errors should be corrected. There are those who make a hobby of this doctrine; grow fanatical—are almost crazy over their exaggerated ideas upon the subject, and, under the name of evangelists, travel about the country to hold revivals. In nearly every place where they have worked they have succeeded in greatly injuring the churches, and have driven good Christians from their places of worship."

Rings have been frequently used as receptacles for poison, and the signet-ring of the Infamous Cesar Borgia is still extant, with the stide within which he carried the poison to be administered to unwelcome guests. Key-rings are for all of all ages; and one of these, poisoned in the handle, is said to have been employed with fatal effect by Pope Alexander the Sixth. The story, quoted by Mr. Jones, of an amateur in Paris who nearly met his death through poison infused into the system by an antique Venetian ring, which he had just purchased, is a warning to lovers of bric a brac.

A REGULAR BRICK.—The Bank of France owns a brick for which 1,000 francs in specie were paid. It was taken from the ruins of a burned house, and the image and figures of a note for 1,000 francs, and printed on the surface, transferred by the heat from a real note. This brick the bank redeemed on presentation, as if it were the note itself.—Pictorial World.

The simplicity of a rural courtship was never better illustrated than by the following anecdote: "I'm gaun to be marrit, Peggy," said a lind to a servant lass whom he had been in the habit of visiting. "Ay, are ye? And to whom, gin I may be allowed to speir?" "To yersel', Peggy." "Are ye?" said Peggy; "I wish I had heund it sooner."

The three whom Christ raised from the dead were an only son, an only daughter, and an only brother.

THE COMFORTER.—One mistake which really good and pious people commit is that they think the Holy Spirit of God to be merely, or little beside, certain pleasant frames and feelings, and comfortable assurances in their own minds. They do not know that these pleasant frames and feelings really depend principally on their own health; and then when they get out of health, or when their brain is over-worked, and the pleasant feelings go, they are terrified and disheartened, and complain of spiritual dryness, and cry out that God's Spirit has deserted them, and are afraid that God is angry with them, or even that they have committed the unpardonable sin; not knowing that God is not a man that he should lie, nor a son of man that he should repent; that God is as near them in the darkness as in the light; that whatever their own health or their own feelings may be, yet still in God they live and move and have their being; that to God's Spirit they owe all which raises them above the dumb animals; that nothing can separate them from the love of him who promised that he would not leave us comfortless, but send to us his Holy Ghost to comfort us, and exalt us to the same place whither he has gone before.—From Rev. Charles Kingsley's "All-Saints' Days and Other Sermons."

The Christian must stand in a posture to receive every message which God shall send, whether it be by his word spoken through the preacher, or any other. He must be so prepared as to be like one who is called to set out on a sudden journey, and has nothing to do but to set out at a moment's notice; or like a merchant who has goods to send abroad, and has them all packed up and in readiness for the first sail.—R. Cecil.

A load that any man would like to carry—a silver lode.

WATTS, MILBURN & CO.'S LINE.—This line of steamships now running between this port and Liverpool, a pair of fine steamers, recently fitted up with all the modern improvements and appliances necessary to safe, rapid and pleasure and to success in navigation. They are officered and manned by thorough and efficient sailors in every respect, and will bear comparison with any line of steamers in the Atlantic Ocean. The Colombo leaves on Saturday next, the twelfth inst., direct for Liverpool. Accommodations are first-class, and the fare but $75. Messrs. French & Co., 28 Union street, are the gentlemanly agents. Parties thinking of going to Europe soon had better hurry their intended departure to the twentieth instant, as the Colombo has for its officer the experienced Capt. Young, who is known as one of the most skillful and careful of men, and a thoroughgentleman withal.

GEORGE E. STRONG, successor to E. A. Tyler, has enlarged his stock of watches, clocks, jewelry of all descriptions, silverware and everything to be found in a first-class store in his line. Mr. Strong has an excellent knowledge of all classes of jewelry, is thoroughly up to date in all new modes and patterns, is perfectly reliable, and will sell nothing which he will not guarantee. Fair dealing, quick sales and satisfaction to purchasers is his motto. See his advertisement in another column. Read it carefully, and then call and see the largest stock and one of the finest stores in the South.

STEWART STOVE.—Our friend, J H. Chapman, again has an advertisement in the ADVOCATE of the celebrated Stewart Stove. Housekeepers cannot go to a better store to purchase than that of Mr Campman. The Stove, of which a cut will be seen in the advertisement, is said to be one of the best now in use. We recommend Mr Campman to our readers, with the assurance that he will do justice to all his patrons.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and home-like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well regulated establishment. To Pulse Bipeds, it recommends itself as a popular hotel, offers an opportunity seldom found of so thoroughly a first class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3.50 per day.

T. W. BOFFICK, the popular undertaker of Canal street, is prepared to furnish all the shortest notice every article needed in his line and at very reasonable prices. He is thoroughly reliable, and an excellent gentleman. Read his advertisement and bear it in mind.

J. A. BROWN, at 181 Canal street, has a fine assortment of novelties, such as Japanese and Chinese goods, which he proposes to sell as low as, as the interest in the city. Anyone wishing to purchase such goods as trinkets should give him a call.

WILLIAM MYERS, near the Ninth Street Market, will supply families, hotels, and others with ice on the most reasonable terms. Those in the Fourth and Sixth Districts especially should patronize him. See his advertisement.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT.—Articles for sportsmen at the reliable store of R. Bishop, 78 Charles street. Country orders promptly attended to, and at reasonable prices.

SITUATION WANTED.—Any one wishing the services of a governess should read the card of Jessie, on this page.

QUIETING AND HANDLING BEES.

Huber says that it is not for attack, but only for defense, that bees, wasps, and all insects of the same order, are armed with a poisonous sting; if it were otherwise, the globe would be uninhabitable for all animals. The fear of the sting of the bee is one of the principal causes which prevent many from keeping bees; but whenever it shall be known that they can be managed without danger, many will join in this culture, and will not only keep them as a remunerative recreation, but as a source of pleasure.

Smoke is the best and most harmless thing which can be used to quiet bees. Formerly, for the purpose of smoking bees, dry rags were wound and sewed together in the form of a sausage; but a few years since Mr. Quinby invented a smoker, which is a tin tube attached to a bellows worked with one hand. Lately this smoker has been greatly improved by Mr. Bingham, of Michigan. Dry rotten wood, old rags, in fact anything which will burn and make smoke, can be used in this smoker and it will burn for a long time, giving an abundance of smoke. This rubbish is put in the tin tube, and the smoke driven by the bellows to the exact point where it is wanted, and in the quantity desired.

Whenever we wish to open a hive for examination or other purpose we have only to blow some smoke at the entrance and wait a few minutes to give the bees time to gorge themselves with honey, which will quiet them; then we can take the cover off, and in raising the quilt, if the bees show any disposition of being cross, we blow a little more smoke in at the top, which will make them yield to our wishes; then we take out the frames, and we may shake them and tumble them down if we wish, without receiving a sting.

We ought not handle our bees on a rainy or cloudy day, but do it, if possible, on bright days, and generally between the hours of eight A. M. and five P. M. When approaching the bees we ought to do it in a calm way, and prevent as much as possible all quick motions, as this generally excites their anger.

When bees are busily engaged in storing honey they can be handled without smoke, especially if they are Italians; but at other times they are cross. Novices at first should protect their faces with a vail, made by sewing a piece of black tarlatan in the form of a bag, about eighteen inches long, and wide enough to pass over the rim of a common straw hat; both ends should be gathered by an elastic cord, so that one end draws the vail closely to the crown of the hat and the other end to the neck over the shirt collar.

I will not advise the use of gloves because the apiarist ought never to wear them in handling bees. It is not impossible, but very difficult, to manipulate a hive when wearing gloves, and the few stings that we may get once in awhile on the hands will help our system to become accustomed to the poison of the bee. Several years since, when I first started bee keeping, whenever I received a sting on the hand it used to swell wonderfully, but now a hundred stings would not begin to show any sign of swelling.—Paul L. Viallon, in Our Home Journal.

BREAD.

"How do you manage to have your bread so uniformly moist?" asked a neighbor, the other day, who had taken tea with us when our bread was six days old. "Potatoes," I answered. Her look of surprise was such that I feel justified in giving to the Rural readers our simple plan for having moist, wholesome bread without the need of baking every second day. The first thing is the yeast, which is made with hops, a small handful boiled and stirred into flour with a little salt, and sometimes a little ginger and brown sugar. This we make every Wednesday—keeping a fixed day—and for this extra care we are rewarded by never having sour bread. To set the sponge the flour is sifted carefully, and into the center is poured the yeast, thoroughly mixed with water and salt and about a peck of finely-mashed potatoes is added for baking a dozen loaves of medium size. This mixture is made thoroughly fine and the ingredients, when mixed about new-milk warm in summer and a little warmer in cold weather, poured slowly upon the flour and made into a batter. It is at night which is our rule; the first thing in the morning it is again worked and set to rise, before breakfast, so that by dinner time our large baking is finished. The potatoes, without doubt, keep the bread moist, are a healthful addition, and where heaps are with us, effect a saving in flour of no small importance.—Mrs. A. L. Jackson, in Rural New-Yorker.

CREAM CAKE.—One cup of white sugar; two eggs well beaten; one tablespoonful of butter; one half cupful sweet milk; one half teaspoonful soda and one of cream of tartar; one and one half cupfuls flour; a little salt; beat thoroughly, and bake quickly in five or six round tins. One and a half cup of sweet milk; one heaping tablespoonful of flour rubbed smooth in the milk; one beaten egg; half a cup of white sugar. Boil the whole together, stirring all the time until quite thick; when cool, flavor with lemon or any extract preferred, and spread between each layer.

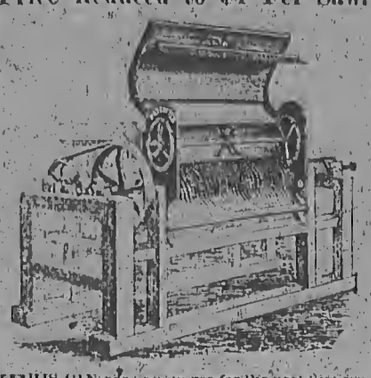
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past five seasons and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work with the same time, while requiring less steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved Gin, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 10 bales ginned. A BRAN NEW BREECH LOADING RIFLE FOR $

"The biggest bargain we ever offered,"

And they are just as they come from the maker's hands,

BRAN NEW, PERFECT AND GOOD SHOOTERS,

GUARANTEED. This rifle cannot be beaten, and cannot be replaced for the price. Every failure of the owners, and the enlargement and sale of their stock to us, is the only reason for the sale of this elegant rifle at the present low price. They are very finely finished, with engraved locks, blued steel mountings, and polished black walnut stock.

BARREL IS OF THE BEST STEEL, FINELY RIFLED.

The lock and graduated rear sight are of the latest, handsomest and most reliable kind in use in the United States for rifles of this class. The trigger pull is a clear, sharp action, similar to the most costly rifles. Every rifle is warranted in this country who needs a rifle should purchase one of these guns for

TARGET SHOOTING AND HUNTING.

Or Trade, they are worthy of your attention. A CHILD CAN NEVER BE DISAPPOINTED. We have furnished several Rifle Clubs with rifles, and have yet to hear of a single shooting gallery in the country that does not want our New Eaton Rifle. Let us hear from you. Remember that these guns are Brand New, cost the manufacturers over $15 apiece, and we guarantee them as represented. We do business with honor, and will refund the money if goods are not satisfactory, and duplicate express charges by mail.

Supplanting.

Who ever saw the last flickering of the spark of life, or heard the sound of the handful of dust cast down into the grave, who did not wish from his heart that the evil word had never been spoken, the evil thought never entertained, the evil deed never done, the evil never repaid with evil; that the intercourse of life had been carried on in love, and the dealings of the world sweetened all along by mutual forbearance and gentleness? Who doth not wish it, long for it? Alas! we cannot pray for it; for even prayer avails not to undo the past. If a man would not then forego all he ever gained if he might be again as he was in the days of his youth, whenever he thinks of some ungentle, unkind, unforgiving, unduteful, unseemly act of later life.

If over the grave of an Isaac or an Esau such thoughts have arisen in the heart of one who hath been what he was to them, let him remember that to supplant or deceive is a bitter root, and must trouble a man in his after-days. But to forgive and be forgiven is a blessedness that can be gained only while life lasts, the hand can clasp hand, and eye can meet eye, and words of kindness be exchanged. The grave closeth, and all is silence never to be broken save in empty dreams and the ashes poured forth over a world in vain. Therefore let us take heed, while kind and pleasant offices can still be exchanged, and the varied interests remain, that we may call forth the best affections, that we may plead zeal and fervor in our souls and our fellow-men for a day of God cometh, in which there is no longer space for these dispositions to grow.—Robertson.

Travelers in South America have wonderful stories to tell of a tree poisonous to that part of the world which during certain parts of the year continually "rains," or sprinkles the earth beneath by showers of water. The mystery has been at length solved by the distinguished botanist Dr. Spruce, who finds the tree to be Pithecolobium Saman. It not only showers, but, he finds, not dew. But large insects, similar to the summer locusts, have a special likeness for the tree, and the "rains" are nothing but the fluid excreted by the insects!

BREECH-LOADERS.

WE take this opportunity of informing customers and friends that the best installment of our 12 stock of these goods, the steamship delayed a few weeks, has arrived and is ready for inspection. The Breech Loading Shot Guns alone now assorted in our Store comprises upward of 50 different styles, and patterns ranging through every desirable grade. These great importations could be profitably handled were they not overbought, owing to present low rates of gold and sterling exchange, while a fourteen days' stock had been marked down to meet the shrinkage in value from decline in gold. You take our word for it, but call and see for yourselves, with the full wish to buy now or not. FILSOM BROS.,

We have the best In-Jation Gold Watch in the market. The metal is a composition of the hardest, most closely resembling Gold that the best judges find it difficult to detect, except by actual test, and it has just the appearance required to make it the best substitute for gold now in use. Genuine American movements, Engraved Hunting Cases and equal in appearance to a GOLD WATCH THAT COSTS from $65 to $200. If you wish a watch for your own use, or to make money on it, this is your chance. Owing to our large sales we are enabled to reduce the price of them to $8 each, with an elegant Gold plate Chain attached. They are used on railroads, steamers and by manufacturers, and where accurate time is required, and give general satisfaction. We send them by mail or express, on receipt of $12, to any part of the country, or it will be sent C. O. D. when the customer desires and remits $3, on account. These elegant CHAINS weigh about Fifty Pennyweights; and the same pattern in pure gold would cost $50. We sell these Chains at 8 each. But we sell the Watch and Chain for $12, sent by mail in a registered package, postpaid, to any postoffice in the United States.

WE SELL THE WATCH WITHOUT THE CHAIN FOR $10.

MILK OF MAGNESIA

IS THE best preparation known to all diseased conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHE, caused by acidity of the Stomach. The pleasant taste and mildness of the Milk of Magnesia preparation renders it very valuable for infants, requiring no purgative to be taken with it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will act as a laxative when used as directed. It is also a positive antidote to laudanum. The only difference of this preparation and its sort or substitute are made fully apparent in their drastic properties. They respond a test which separates the one from the other at once. The first is a prolonged Magnesia taken with water. The second, the Milk of Magnesia, now offered. The difference between these is most striking, for on the dissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness. The Milk of Magnesia on last, all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the objectionable precipitates, in fact perfectly dissolved.

Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none else. It is entirely different from all other preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing

COMMERCIAL.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
NEW ORLEANS, Tuesday, April 16, 1878.

Business generally is rather dull, and there is not much hope of improvement before fall. Confidence, however, seems to be somewhat restored, and the uneasy feeling in regard to mercantile paper has abated to a great extent. If the commercial community can get through the summer without any more serious failures, in all probability the business of the coming winter will exceed that done for several years previous.

Money is still plentiful and the rates of discount low. Exceptional paper is quoted at 7@8 per cent.; A1, 9@10, and loans on collaterals 6@8. One or more of the banks, we understand, will hereafter pay gold for their circulation. The Germania Bank, we believe, leads off in this. State consols have not advanced since our last report, but are steady at 77@77½. Premium bonds have declined slightly, as is usual after the series drawing. They are quoted at 31½@31¾.

COTTON.

The Democrat reports the cotton market as follows:

The offerings are of poor quality, and not such as buyers are in search of; consequently the movement was confined to 1,200 bales. The tone of the market is easy, owing to the unfavorable news from abroad.

The following is the official closing of the Cotton Exchange:

	To-Day.	Yesterday.
Low Ordinary	7¼	7¼
Ordinary	7¾	7¾
Good Ordinary	8¼	8¼
Low Middling	9¼	9¼
Middling	10¼	10¼
Good Middling	11	11
Middling Fair		Nominal.

Sales to-day, 1,200 bales. Market dull and easy.

The term "rink" has a curious history. It has for ages been applied in Scotland by curlers to the place to be swept clear of snow, on which they practice their games. From Scotland the word was exported to Canada, where it was given to the sheets of smooth ice, under cover, on which to skate in their long and windless frosts, such skating feats as are seldom seen in this country. The "rink" traveled all over the United States, from New York to San Francisco, as the best possible term for the courts with flooring that looked just like ice touched with hoar frost, where the new pastime of skating on wheels was enjoyed. It crossed the sea again, and now in England is in every body's mouth.

Chang, the Chinese giant, has recently been received into the Baptist church at Shanghai, where he is now living with his English wife. It may not be known that Chang's height is seven feet eight inches; but this is never to eight inches taller than himself, and the whole family—father, mother and four brothers—hyat him in height.

That may be right which is not pleasant, and that pleasant which is not right; but Christ's religion is both. There is not only peace in the end of religion, but peace in the way.—Matthew Henry.

It is as self-adjusting as the die. It has no noisy cog wheels.
It uses very little thread or needs. It runs on a complicated shuttle to thread.
It is a new one hinge with straight needle. It always the work to run back from the operator.
It will not break the thread if the needle is allowed to run off the goods when sewing.

DAFFODILS.

BY MARCH ELLINWOOD.

Oh, ye graceful daffodils,
Nodding in the sun,
Glance a moment downward,
Where the crystal waters run.
Are you frightened at the beauty
That the sun has given to you?
Well you may be, for the glory
Of the great King shineth through you.

Oh, ye graceful daffodils,
Waving in the breeze;
While your beauty brightens
All the wind swept leas;
If the wonder frightens you,
Gaze forever at the sky,
And forget your own weak selves,
In the glory wide and high.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NASHVILLE, April 15.—It has been definitely ascertained that fifty-seven houses were destroyed by the Clarksville fire, including the best buildings of the city.

Policeman Phillips shot and killed a negro named Seat, while resisting arrest, on Saturday. This aroused a feeling among the blacks, who threatened to mob Phillips. The latter was placed in jail for safety.

It is supposed the fire was the result of the recent lynching of a negro for attempting a rape on a white girl named Seat's death.

Fifty special police patrolled the streets of Clarksville last night. Nine hundred hogsheads of tobacco were destroyed by the fire and rain. The list of houses embraces all kinds of business, and among them a newspaper office, court-house, bank Central Hotel, hook and ladder house, two jewelry stores, two dry goods stores, eight groceries, two public halls and ten residences.

DES MOINES, IOWA, April 16.—The National Bank is redeeming its circulation in gold.

A special from Gunnell says that the First National Bank of that place is redeeming in gold. The Citizens' National Bank of this city has ordered gold from New York to redeem its circulation.

NEW YORK, April 16.—The compilation between Nicaragua and Germany has been adjusted.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—The following is the text of the bill reported by the Senate Finance Committee:

"To amend an act to provide for the resumption of specie payments, and for other purposes.

"1. That from and after the passage of this act United States notes shall be receivable in payment for United States bonds, now authorized by law to be issued, and on and after October 1, 1878, the said notes shall be receivable for duties on imports; said notes, in the volume in existence on the first of October, 1878, if not be canceled or permanently boarded, but shall be reissued, they may be used for funding other lawful purposes whatsoever, to an amount not exceeding in whole the amount then in circulation and in the treasury; and the notes, whether then in the treasury or thereafter received under act of Congress, and from whatever source, shall be again paid out; and when again returned to the treasury they shall not be canceled or destroyed, but shall be reissued from time to time with like qualities; and that part of the act of January 14 [illegible] entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," authorizing the retirement of eighty per cent. of United States notes, is hereby repealed and become inoperative and after said October 1, 1878.

"2. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act shall be and are hereby repealed.

ATLANTA, April 17.—The International Sunday School Convention assembled at the First Baptist church. About four hundred delegates were present, representing all the States, Indian Territory and Canadian provinces. The convention was called to order by Rev. George A. Hall, of New Jersey, president of the last International Convention. Addresses of welcome were made by Gov. Angier and Gov. Colquitt; responses by Rev. John Potts, of Toronto, and Gen. Clinton B. Fiske, of New York.

The Committee on Permanent Organization reported unanimously in favor of Gov. Colquitt, of Georgia, as permanent president, and one vice-president from each State.

Brief reports of the Sunday school work in each State were made. They indicate a great increase in the number of schools, pupils and teachers.

The Executive Committee and statistical secretary made full reports.

Last night the International Sunday School lessons were considered and the report of the committee read.

Addresses were made by Dr. John Hall, of New York, and Dr. J. H. Vincent. The attendance of visitors was very large and great enthusiasm prevailed.

The convention will be in session until Saturday.

ATLANTA, April 18.—The second day's session of the International Sunday School Convention was marked by an increased attendance of delegates and visitors, and by most interesting proceedings. The morning was occupied with the discussion of the true basis of Sunday school work and assistant agencies. Addresses were made during the afternoon and evening on Sunday school work in the various churches. Four hundred and fifty-seven delegates are present.

WASHINGTON, April 18.—The action of the Judiciary Committee of the House to-day indicates an early concurrence in the Senate bill repealing the bankrupt law.

ATLANTA, April 19.—The third day's proceedings of the Sunday School Convention was marked by several very interesting incidents. The morning session was occupied in the discussion of a general theme of promotion of Sunday school work.

Dr. Plummer, of Columbia, S. C., made a fine address on the condition of the negroes in the South, urging their claims upon religious care.

The Massachusetts delegation requested the honor of shaking hands with the speaker. The following were reported as the International Lesson Committee for the next seven years: Rev. John H. Vincent, D. D., New Jersey, Methodist; Rev. John Hall, of New York, Presbyterian; Mr. Benjamin F. Jacobs, of Illinois, Baptist; Rev. Warren Randolph, D. D., of Indiana, Baptist; Prof. Philip G. Gilbert, LL. D., of Illinois, Methodist; Rev. Richard Newton, D. D., of Pennsylvania, Protestant Episcopal; Rev. B. M. Palmer, of New Orleans, Presbyterian; Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, D. D., of Tennessee, Methodist Episcopal Church South; Prof. Austin Phelps, D. D., of Massachusetts, Congregationalist; Rev. John A. N. Broadus, D. D., of Kentucky, Baptist; Prof. S. Baugher, D. D., of Pennsylvania, Evangelical Lutheran; Rev. James A. Warden, of New Jersey, Presbyterian; Rev. D. H. McVicar, LL. D., of Quebec, Presbyterian; Rev. John Potts, D. D., of Ontario, Methodist.

A new Executive Committee for the next three years was appointed, with Franklin Hall, of New York, chairman.

To-night, after an address from Dr. Leftwich, of Atlanta, and several voluntary speeches on the promotion of the Sunday school work, the convention adjourned sine die.

There will be a grand children's jubilee to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—The river and harbor bill passed under a suspension of the rules amid turbulence. It gives James river $70,000; Appomattox, $30,000; Great Kanawha, $22,000; Cape Fear river, $85,000; Norfolk harbor, $20,000; Savannah harbor, $70,000; Charleston harbor, $5,000; Cedar Keys, $20,000; Chattahoochie $18,000; Alabama river, $25,000; Tombigbee and Black Warrior, $40,000; ship channel, Galveston, $75,000; Mississippi and Arkansas rivers, $180,000; entrance to Galveston harbor, $125,000; Sabine Pass, $30,000; Matagorda Bay, Texas, $250,000; Yazoo, $25,000; Red River raft, $25,000; mouth of Red river, La., $50,000; snags, Red river, $25,000; Cumberland, above Nashville, $60,000—below Nashville, $15,000; Tennessee river, above Chattanooga, $15,000—below Chattanooga, $30,000; Coosa river, $75,000; New Orleans harbor, $50,000; Mississippi river at Vicksburg, $40,000; Neuse river, N. C., $20,000; Currituck Sound, N. C., $20,000.

The bill leaves it discretionary with the Secretary of War whether the work shall be done by contract or hired labor. It also appropriates $150,000 for surveys of rivers.

The Committee on Commerce of the House agreed to allow $70,000 for the New Orleans harbor, $100,000 for Red river and $10,000 for Bayou Lafourche.

The Committee on Weights and Measures agreed unanimously to report the Senate bill for the New Orleans Mint, appropriating $75,000 for putting it in operation.

Senate.—On motion of Mr. Bailey, of Tennessee, it was ordered that the Senate bill for the relief of the book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South should be taken up as soon as the objected cases on the calendar should be disposed of.

GALVESTON, April 22.—The News publishes a special from Fort McIntosh, stating that the Indian raiders from Mexico have killed many people, and carried off two white boys named Taylor.

The correspondent expresses the belief that these raids are incited by supporters of Lerdo for the purpose of bringing about a misunderstanding between the United States and the Diaz government.

NEW YORK, April 22.—Hon. William Orton, president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, expired this morning at seven o'clock, of apoplexy, with which he was stricken at eleven last night.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, April 15.—The Telegraph's Vienna correspondent says Turkish works are again stopped in consequence of Russian remonstrance. The same correspondent states he hears that Russia will occupy Roumania and disarm the army as soon as an Anglo-Russian war appears inevitable. If Count Andrassy's views prevail, Austria will resist such a step.

The state of affairs with reference to the Eastern question remains substantially the same. There is no change in the attitude of the powers. The mooted point between England and Russia is still unsettled. While this is the case the prospect of a Congress and a peaceful arrangement of the whole difficulty is as far off as ever. There is a strong feeling in both countries that war is inevitable. At St. Petersburg the belief is stated to prevail that England's willingness to continue negotiations is rather for the purpose of isolating Russia than arriving at an understanding. Some influential persons believe England will not go to war alone; hence earnest efforts continue to satisfy Austria. Some moderate men in official circles have begun censuring Russian generals, diplomats and newspapers for pushing the government into a position where the issue between Russian independent action and European control is unavoidable; but a majority of the public continue to declare that the government has been too conciliatory, and the press opposes any concession. Germany's efforts to bring about an understanding continue, but the task is rendered difficult by the intimate relations between Germany and Russia. Prince Bismarck is reported to have said recently, in reply to a suggestion that he should mediate: "We cannot offer counsel to Russia, for advice on our part would almost look like a menace."

HAVANA, April 16.—The City of Merida arrived with city of Mexico dates to April 7. Congress has assembled. Diaz's message gives an encouraging view of home and foreign relations. With respect to the United States of America, pending questions, of which Congress is already informed, have not been settled. He makes no further allusion to American affairs. Minister Foster has arrived, and everybody is expecting a speedy recognition.

RAGUSA, April 16.—All Turkish regular troops in Bosnia and Herzegovina have been ordered to concentrate at Mitrontza, whence they will rerire to Salonica, and from there to Constantinople.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 16.—The trial of Suleiman Pasha has commenced. Condemnation is regarded as extremely probable.

BERNE, April 16.—Switzerland has accepted the proposal of the United States to participate in the International Congress to fix the relative values of gold and silver.

HAVANA, April 17.—Prominent merchants and planters are generally of opinion that the reports that the deficiency in the sugar crop will amount to fifty per cent. are entirely wrong.

Receipts since the first of January to date show only a deficiency of one-third compared with those for the same period last year, while plantations are over-stocked with sugars awaiting transportation. Some think if the rainy season commences late the crop will equal and even be superior to last year.

The hot and dry weather continues.

A sugar-cane disease in Porto Rico, produced by a certain worm, has spread so rapidly that a royal order has been issued for an investigation into its cause and character, and the means of prevention. The disease thus far appears to be confined to Porto Rico.

VIENNA, April 17.—The New Free Press learns from Berlin that Russia may ostensibly agree to England's demand to submit the entire treaty to the Congress. If this course is adopted it would show that Russia had agreed with the other Continental powers.

LONDON, April 18.—Nine thousand operatives are idle to-day at Burnley. The spinners are willing to accept a reduction, but the weavers refusing, all struck. Labor at other points is unsettled.

MONTREAL, April 19.—Several encounters between the Orange Young Britons and Irish Catholics occurred to-day in this city. As the Britons were marching to the church this forenoon a Catholic attempted to cross through the procession. He was pursued into Notre Dame Catholic church, where some fighting occurred. Charles O'Hara, who attempted to shut the door on the intruders, was badly beaten.

There was more rioting at eleven o'clock to-night in Victoria square, by stone-throwing and pistol-shooting. A posse of police quelled the disturbance. An artillery volunteer named Cole received severe wounds, and Policeman Martin was dangerously wounded in the head. Several plate glass windows were broken.

ROME, April 20.—At the Easter reception of Cardinals Pope Leo dwelt upon the strength and vitality of the pontificate. He said the war which has been declared against the papacy from the earliest times continues with undiminished fierceness. Trusting in God, we are ready to carry on the warfare and to uphold the rights of the church. The Roman pontiff concluded by expressing the hope that the erring children would finally submit.

PARIS, April 20.—Papers here publish a telegram from Berlin, dated to-day, stating that England and Russia have agreed to the principle of the simultaneous withdrawal of the British fleet and Russian troops from the neighborhood of Constantinople, but the points to which they will withdraw are not decided upon.

TIFLIS, April 20.—Gen. Melikoff will start for St. Petersburg to-morrow. The Circassian army corps will be disbanded.

LONDON, April 22.—The Times correspondent says: The aspect of affairs is neither better nor worse. The course of negotiations makes it more and more apparent that Russia has not meant to make any concession relative to a Congress dependent on the sole arrangement as to the relative position of her own and the English forces.

The fact that the Russians did not reject the idea of withdrawing to Adrianople, and that negotiations have been pending on that basis, shows that they would set great value on the withdrawal of the British fleet beyond the Dardanelles. Still, as Besika Bay is only about twelve hours' sail from Stamboul, while Adrianople is at least a three days' forced march distant, the Russians thought they would be placed at a disadvantage.

"Hail? gentle spring," says Tomson; and gentle spring hailed, and snowed too.

Gossip About the New Pope.

The French correspondent of the Paris Nineteenth Century has been making some observations on Leo the Thirteenth. He finds him very respectable, very much respected, but without the usual possible addition of being a bore. He is not the least in the world tiresome. But it was a little singular that he should like the name of Leo. Leo the Twelfth had many virtues, and his cat is still talked of in Rome; it was the chief personage of his reign. The father shut himself up with this favorite, to partake with it the excellent polenta, the specialty of Spolete, their native place. When he died the cat was cleared out of the apartment for four days, but it was found by Chateaubriand, the French embassador to Rome, who adopted the waif; it peaceably ended its life on the lap of Madame Recamier at the Abbaye-au-Bois, and is buried under a willow in the garden, where pilgrims can visit the tomb of the cat of a pope.

But it is not now the matter of a cat which agitates the Noah's ark of the Vatican. "Noah's ark" is the word. It was by the goodness, not to say feebleness, of Pius the Ninth that the Vatican became a refuge for all those who declared themselves frightened by the rising wave of modern ideas. The Vatican is vast, it has many apartments, and there, attached directly or indirectly to the papal establishment, but regularly paid, were collected a great number of people, who lived en famille, who lived inviolable from modern ideas, from conscription, from taxes and from the police. If one had the good fortune to be himself to some monsignior, or some scullion of the pontifical kitchen, he was in paradise—he had soup, sweetmeats, and other things not named. These arrangements were a burden on the pontiff's treasury.

When the present Pope, for a brief time, was camerlengo he looked unfavorably on this snugly-housed colony. He had the daring to call before him the head groom of the stables and demand an account of the horses and carriages, which were still renewed, although the Pope had not used them since 1870. He demanded an account for the morrow, since the groom did not know how many horses there were. The grand ecuyer was stupefied at this indiscretion. It was a detestable symptom. No doubt if the Pope had been chosen by popular vote, as in former times, Cardinal Pecci would have stood small chance of an election.

At the first news of the election of Leo the Thirteenth half these rats of the Vatican decamped in haste with their baggage. Half of the remainder only wait till their title to remain shall be demanded; the other half awaits its fate without any illusions. The bourgeois of Rome are not a little scandalized at these goings-on, and perhaps, from old jealousy, smile a little at the scamper from the ark.

"We live on the goods of the poor; let us not forget that," were the astonishing words from the secret lips of Leo the Thirteenth. But the unlicensed inhabitants of the Vatican are not the only victims of the new regime; there are others and more illustrious. In coming from the Sistine chapel, after the ceremony of kissing his feet by the cardinals, he saw awaiting him in the sala regia the garde palatine—a body of two hundred soldiers. "Oh, oh," said Leo, "behold an army! However, I have no intention of making war in person." Judge how these words ran through Rome. Gen. Kanzler, the Swiss, who directs the strategic movements of these troops, was summoned to the presence, and thanked for his past services, and told that the Pope had no need for a general. He went back to Switzerland.

In this action the pontifical marine saw its fate. The marine? What is the marine? But it exists. The admiral who commands it is not a Swiss, but an Italian named Cialdi. There are sixty marines on the roll, commanded by an admiral. The ship of the navy is laid up, undergoing repairs, in the port of Toulon, and has been ever since 1870. The name of the vessel is L'Immaculee Conception. Its crew is twelve men, who are relieved every three months.

Besides the garde palatine and the marine apostolique, there is the gendarmerie pontificale. The Pope thinks that the garde nobile and the Swiss halle bardiers are sufficient for a service of honor. But the garde nobile are not satisfied. Heretofore, on election of a pope, they have received rolls of silver for guarding the cardinals. Pope Leo the Thirteenth thanked them!

And the Cardinal Caterini, who announced to the people from the balcony (only the people were absent) the new election, what did he receive? By usage he should have had a "compliment" of about 130,000 francs. He has not yet seen it; perhaps there is nothing in the treasury; perhaps it remains in the pockets of the holy father, together with the douceur to the secretary of the conclave.

Besides, the new Pope neglects his family. He has a nephew—also a volunteer in the Italian army. Instead of making him a cardinal, according to the usage of the last age, he sent for this nephew and gave him his benediction in the Italian uniform.

These eccentricities make talk. Leo the Thirteenth begins to be popular. The people are aware that they have now a living Pope. And he is very much alive. He dispatches a couple of hundred pilgrims before breakfast. And how are those pilgrims received? Pius the Ninth was wont to receive without display of ecclesiastical dress, to even entertain with anecdote and familiar talk, never permitting one to kiss his slipper. Now the pilgrims, in two lines on each side of a hall, await the Pope, who is borne in on his chair; they prostrate themselves. He pronounces a few words, then descends and walks through the line; they hasten to throw themselves to the ground as he passes, and kiss his feet and the hem of his trailing garments. When the promenade is over the Pope remounts his throne, blesses the pilgrims, and disappears, backward, like an idol. But these receptions swell the coffers of the Vatican.

There is indeed a great change. It is believed that the Pope has been seen outside the Vatican; certain he has been out in a close carriage.—Hartford Courant.

Railroad Arrangements for the General Conference.

We publish for the convenience of the delegates to the General Conference the following arrangements that have been perfected with the railroads. Some of the roads addressed have not yet responded, but will do so, doubtless, in time to meet the necessities of the case.

Jacksonville, Pensacola and Mobile Railroad.—From Tallahassee and local points to Live Oak and return, for one and one fifth fares for round trip.

Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad. This company will issue round-trip tickets to delegates attending the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Atlanta and West Point Railroad. One fare for round trip.

On Western and Atlantic railroad and branches, when delegates buy their regular local ticket to Atlanta, the agent will furnish them with certificates, to be signed by the secretary of the Conference, which will return them free.

On Memphis and Little Rock get round-trip tickets from Little Rock for one fare from April 25 to June 1.

On Magnolia route, get one fare, round trip; free return on certificate from the secretary of the Conference.

On Texas Pacific railroad, Marshall to Atlanta, round trip, one fare.

On Port Royal railroad, from Charleston and Savannah and local points, free return tickets.

On Alabama and Chattanooga railroad, three cents per mile each way until June 5.

On Wilmington and Weldon, and Wilmington, Columbia and Augusta railroad, three cents per mile each way. Good from April 27 to June 10.

On Missouri Pacific railroad, three cents per mile each way.

On Florida Central railroad, one fare for round trip.

East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroad, three cents per mile each way.

Brunswick and Albany railroad, one fare for round trip.

Georgia railroad and Macon and Augusta railroad, one fare for round trip. Get return ticket at time of purchase.

Rome railroad, one fare for round trip.

Central railroad, one fare for round trip.

Macon and Brunswick railroad, one fare for round trip.

ATLANTA.—Hotel Accommodations.—Bro. Parks writes us, says the Southern Christian Advocate, that there has been some misapprehension, at this point, of the meaning of the card issued by the ministers' meeting at Atlanta. It was not designed to intimate that there was any deficiency of public accommodations, except as such were at the disposal of the committee for the gratuitous entertainment of guests. There are ample accommodations, at reasonable rates, for all who will pay their way, both in hotels and private boarding-houses. As many as choose to come on these terms will find ample room.

The members of the Mississippi Conference are requested to forward their collections for the Marvin Monumental Association at once, as it is desired that full reports be made by the first of May.

A New Catechism.

It is with very great satisfaction that we learn that a catechism on church government, by Bishop McTyeire, is already in press at the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, and will be ready for delivery by the first of May. It is a catechism on church government, but with special reference to that of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Several sections of the work have appeared from time to time in the Sunday School Visitor. From those samples we have formed a high opinion of it. It is a work we have long needed, not only for the instruction of our children, but for the information of all our people. We have not taught our young people Methodism with any degree of accuracy or thoroughness, and the ignorance of our members on the subject of our government and denominational peculiarities is very great. Every one of our Sunday schools should be supplied at once with this catechism, and every family should have it. Our pastors cannot do a better thing for their charges and for the general advancement of Methodism than to see that a copy be put in the hands of every member, and that some others not connected with the church be furnished with it. The catechism is a 16mo. of 128 pages. Twenty-five cents a copy, or $2.50 a dozen. Orders can be sent at once to the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. That our readers may see the particular scope and design of the work we give the contents of the last three chapters:

Sec. 3. Connectional Ties—Incidental.
Sec. 4. General Reflections.

THE HORSE AND HIS RIDER.—In the history of Rome it is related that in 361 B. C. a great chasm opened in the middle of the Forum, which it was found impossible to fill. The soothsayers said it would close when it contained what Rome possessed of most value, and then the State would be perpetual. A noble youth, named M. Curtius, demanded if Rome had anything of more value than arms and valor. He mounted his horse, richly caparisoned, and, amid the silence of the people, spurred him over the brink of the tremendous precipice (Liv. 1, vii, 6.) I have seen a striking picture of this somewhere. It represented the horse and rider after they had passed the brink and were descending to the unknown depths. There was a remarkable contrast between the fright of the brute and the unruffled self possession of the man. The limbs of the horse were tightened to his body, and the muscles of his neck drew his head to his chest, and a shuddering terror expressed itself in the flash of his starting eyes. The rider was serene and calm, with a solemn expression of majesty on his face, as of one who lived with high thoughts. If I were set to spiritualize this picture, I should say that it was no mean representation of a ripe Christian departing this life. The horse is the body, and the rider is the spirit. Flesh shrinking, spirit steady and calm and solemn. Flesh dreading the terrible shock, and spirit wrapt in the glory of action, descending that it may ascend.—Cook.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE DAILY ADVOCATE.—Price, $1.—The General Conference Daily Advocate will be published during the session at Atlanta, Ga. It will contain the proceedings of the body, including the reports of committees, speeches of members, and the plans that may be adopted for the extension of the kingdom of Christ.

We have published the price at $1.25; but, after making our contract for its publication, find that we can furnish subscribers at $1. Persons who have already sent us $1.25 will be credited with twenty-five cents.

We request all persons who expect to subscribe for it to do so at once.

NASHVILLE, TENN., April 1, 1878.

At a wedding recently, when the clergyman asked the lady, "Wilt thou have this man to be thy wedded husband?" she, with a modesty which lent her beauty an additional grace, replied: "If you please."

The Southern Presbyterian General Assembly will meet at Knoxville, Tenn., May 16. The General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church will meet in New York city, May 15.

LINES TO AN INVALID FRIEND.

BY ELLEN E. REDDIN.

"I am used to suffering and privations, and am willing to live or die."

Dark clouds had hung all o'er the sky,
And driving rain had rushed earth;
A rift and sunbeams sparkled nigh
A letter came, to tell thy worth.

O Christian faith! how near divine!
How like the bow across the cloud,
Which says grief's storms, that once were mine,
Shall not for aye thy path enshroud.

Earth has its tempests—sunshine too;
And spirit knows its own deep throes;
Yet God still lives, and o'er is true,
And never wades of changing knows.

O Rock of Ages!—faith sublime!
Still ever let me cling to thee;
While tempests lash the shores of time,
Still point me to eternity.

"Thy weakness is the strength" for thou
Hast backbit thy heart to trust in God;
O'er thy sick couch thy soul can bow,
Then walk the paths that angels trod.

In life or death "Thou still art his";
"Will in the hollow of His hand";
He holds the being, source of bliss;
"I don't dye or die at His command.

Such faith had Abram—Enoch too;
Such hope Elijah, when there came
A chariot-fire for chariots drew,
To bear him in the sacred flame.

Rest in His God "O forget of mine"
Thy Savior stands upon the shore
Of death—round Him a glad throng shall
Of angel-guards to bear thee over.

He can arrest the surging waves,
And calm their stormy fury to peace,
Whose bulwark towers old Jordan laves,
Where there shall weep no more, no more.

Sketch of Rev. B M. Drake, D. D

NUMBER V.

The last twenty years of Dr. Drake's life so abounded in labor and incident that it would require a volume and a skillful and practiced hand to do him justice. In the present attempt his compositions have greatly suffered; for though his own language has been given, the frequent omissions necessary to condensation have injured the flowing style and rich variety of thought which pervade his writings.

He was ardently attached to his relatives, and when in their vicinity never omitted an opportunity of visiting them, generally making previous appointments to preach while there. His last visit was made on the way to Petersburg, in 1846. He writes from thence to his children that he arrived at his mother's in a week after leaving Natchez, and was surrounded by crowds of relatives; that he found her too feeble to meet him, as usual, but her pleasure at seeing him and having so many of her descendants around her gave her strength to ride with him in the neighborhood and to preaching. "Sheziz," he said, "one of the ripest Christians I ever saw. Not at all childish, and seems pleased with all around her. I rejoiced to be able to give her such comfort. Shall I have children to cheer me when life is ebbing out? I felt grateful that I had such a mother, and such a blessed religion. When I parted with her she said: 'My dear son, I shall see you no more till we meet in heaven. If I get there before you, I shall look out for you. If you get there first, be sure I am coming.'"

On the eighth of May he describes the site of Petersburg, Va., its factories, and his pleasant home at Bro. Thrift's; says a number of delegates were delayed by a heavy storm off the capes of North Carolina, but all arrived the second day. "Bishop Soule gave in his adhesion to the Church South, and was received with great enthusiasm." "Yesterday, after solemn prayer, we proceeded to elect two additional Bishops—Drs. Capers and Paine. I have never seen an election conducted with so much decorum and so little management. It might be compared with the election of Matthias. Last Sunday I preached six miles in the country, in an old Episcopal church, to a large congregation, which the venerable Devereux Green used to preach. Yesterday evening I visited, in the environs of this place, the ruin of one of the oldest churches in the land. Its walls and portions of the roof are standing, but almost overgrown with ivy and creepers. It dates back nearly a hundred and fifty years. It is surrounded by an extensive burying ground. Some of the inscriptions now legible are a hundred years old. The landscape is peculiarly fine. I selected a beautiful rose and some ivy for Jane's herbarium." He expresses much gratification from a visit made him by his uncle, M. Collins, of Raleigh, N. C., and three of his children, and says the principal difficulty before the Conference was the arrangement of the Book Concern. He preached in Richmond, Light street, etc.

In 1847 the degree of D. D. was conferred on him, which he appreciated as an evidence of the esteem of his friends, and as coming from Centenary College. In September of that year he heard that his oldest son, returning from Yale College, was taken dangerously ill on the boat, and had stopped at his uncle's in Vicksburg. He immediately started for that place, and on arriving wrote as follows to his wife: "I came up with a palpitating heart; but, on Leonard hearkening to my knock, learned that W. was better. In a moment I was in his room, found his hand in the dark, and was happy once more to greet him."

Delegated to the St. Louis General Conference in 1850, he embarked on a new boat—the largest, he said, on the Mississippi—on which were more than seven hundred passengers—a number of delegates—and more than five hundred stowed among the machinery—some in the dark, and cholera on board. He relates to his daughter, May 2, some thrilling cases of suffering—one of a young Presbyterian missionary, whose wife died, leaving him with two little children; another of a poor Irishman, whose wife and child were taken. Bringing his remaining little daughter for medicine, with the hope that she would be spared, she was found to be already in collapse. He said his hostess, Sister Poillin, promised to nurse him well if sick. "I am well through mercy. May we meet again, and finally to part no more." Later he writes of Mr. Bascomb's election to the bishopric, and that he seemed deeply to feel the great responsibility. The session was considerably shortened by the alarm of the cholera. This and the preceding year he served the Washington circuit.

In 1852, for the improvement of his wife's health, his own also suffering, Dr. Drake spent several weeks of June and July on the sea-coast. A kind gentleman, Mr. James Brown, came to the hotel for them, and they were hospitably entertained at his home—Orange Grove. While here he preached at Handsboro, and aided in all the meetings near that place, and also wrote an address, which he afterward delivered to Mrs. Jones' senior class in Jackson, La., and from which the following sentences are taken: "I have long accustomed myself to feel a deep and abiding interest in what concerns my race. I am an integral part of the great whole; and, small an atom as I may be, I am taught to believe that every other atom in the universe is more or less affected by my conduct. 'No man liveth to himself,' and in some material sense every man is his brother's keeper. That golden chain which binds us to the throne of God, with a felt responsibility for all our actions, links us in indissoluble fraternity with the whole brotherhood of man. If, to use the beautiful language of Mrs. Sigourney, 'one ink drop on a solitary thought has stirred the minds of millions, or brief human breath has disturbed the surrounding atmosphere so as to communicate itself to the entire system of the universe, how careful should we be that the impulse we give be in the right direction.'"

Being on the Natchez district this year, he writes from Jackson, La., in November, of a revival, mostly in the schools, and says: "There were forty at the altar last night. Among the brightest conversions was George Clinton. A. Cage is at his usual work of taking the lads to the grove, where he had two conversions night before last." Next he went to Bayou Sara, then to the Franklin plantations and home.

In August, 1853, himself and Bro. Curtiss were building a camp meeting tent near Fayette. On a morning when he was to go up he sent his son Fred and with hands, excusing himself for the following reasons: "I am almost sick with fatigue and loss of rest with Bro. Nash. M. and Aunt Se to be taken care of, the sick, annoyances on the farm—troubles thicken. But Abraham had some bright revelations after the horror of great darkness was over him." At this meeting there were twenty-seven conversions. His son Willis was of the number. The closing service was a sunrise address, which he made specially to Christians and young converts. At its conclusion there was much feeling, and members pressed forward to speak to him. "What I would give," said a friend, "to be beloved as Mr. Drake is!" Returning homeward, they found that a panic in consequence of yellow fever in Natchez was causing the inhabitants to fly in every direction. Every vacant house was occupied, but it was only to scatter the disease through the country. For this reason Dr. Drake omitted one round on the district, and gave attention to the sick and dying. The year 1854 was one of the most laborious of his life. His district work occupied the early part of the year. In April he left for the General Conference, accompanied by his daughter, arranging his route to Columbus so as to visit his brother John, who had been left in North Carolina in 1809, and since then had seen none of his father's family. They called on his sister, near Nashville; passed Chattanooga mines, which were causing much commotion; the Stone Mountain, through South Carolina to Robeson county, N. C. Writing from Columbus, April 30, he says: "My meeting with my brother was very interesting to us both." He speaks of the numerous descendants there to meet him, and of seeing old friends of his father, and says: "I preached in the pulpit from which I first heard the gospel—made partly by the hands of my father, and often occupied by Bishop Asbury—from: 'The fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live forever?' It was to me one of the most interesting services I ever performed. I saw the spot where I was born, and prayed near the place where I first said: 'Our Father, who art in heaven.' * * * * Now here we are at Col. Holt's, most pleasantly located on a beautiful eminence a mile from the city."

"May 11.—We are just through the settlement of a very exciting question—whether we should have a printing and binding establishment, or have the work done by others. We finally got a vote to print.

"May 22.—The location of the Book Concern was determined after a long debate. * * * The Bishops elected—Pierce, Early and Cavanaugh—are all good men and true."

Returning by Auburn, Ala., they called on his uncle, J. H. Drake, aged eighty-four years.

In June he was hastily summoned to Jackson, La., to attend his son, who was suffering with hemorrhages of the lungs, and found his family also sick; staid till they were able to come up the river, and attended them as far as Natchez on their way to Waterproof. The trustees of Centenary had expected Dr. Barker to supply the place of the president, who had resigned, and, being disappointed—some of the professors also leaving—they urged Dr. Drake to accept the situation. In view of the exigency he consented to serve till January, meanwhile corresponding in various quarters with the hope of securing a president.

A summary of his labors in the fall, selected from his letters, is given, as follows: He attended the Bethel camp meeting from the first till the fourth of October, and reported a number of accessions and conversions, some of them children of his intimate friends. Reached Jackson the night of the fourth, and attended a faculty meeting. The next day attended prayers twice in the chapel, held another faculty meeting, organized classes, received students, looked over lessons and wrote letters before retiring. Thought he saw a field for usefulness. His quarterly meeting for that place was the best he had held that year. Says his health was improving. On the eighteenth reports his engagements as new and very arduous. Heard three recitations a day, and had to study as much as the students; had to patrol the town and college on Tuesday night; attend prayer meeting one Wednesday night; hear forensic discussions or compositions on Thursday night; meet the faculty on Friday night, and attend quarterly meeting on Saturday and Sunday. Conference came on in November. He was appointed to Jackson district. A young preacher—W. Booth, staying at Prof. Magruder's, who was appointed to Washington circuit, including Dr. Drake's residence—was ill and finally died. In addition to his other duties he assisted in nursing him and watching with him, and writes that he was much exhausted from that, much walking, and other duties; longs for rest and home. He had desired lighter work, the next year, but yielded to the wish of the Bishop. He said: "The Conference is the very best we ever had. About sixty have joined the church. We Wall is of the number. If I consulted results, I should think I was here in the order of Providence. Poor Washington! May God undertake for her. If God permit I will try to do something for Union chapel."

There were one hundred and fifty students received in the college in October. Dr. Drake remained there to the close of the year, having meanwhile made a hasty visit to his family.

Change and Finance.

MR. EDITOR: From the expressions of many writers, and the action of some Conferences, the Methodist Episcopal Church South is certainly drifting toward a change in the present plan of the work of our presiding elders. To some of us such a change seems to touch the principle of our general itineracy as a power in our Methodism to "spread holiness over these lands." It is a step backward, and not forward. The plan of enlarging districts to twice their present size, and requiring the presiding elder to make but two rounds during the year, would certainly reduce the efficiency of that department of our economy to something less than half its present capacity for good. With the present order of that office, I can name instances where a visit of the presiding elder was needed on the charges of young and inexperienced preachers, between the times of his quarterly visits, to give the weight of his influence to settle difficulties agitating and troubling the church. For more than twenty-five years I have been in charge, and have traveled circuits from first down to third-rate, and from third back to first-rate, and then down to third, and during slavery times was for years together in charge of colored missions; and now I am planning to secure an extra visit from the presiding elder to aid me in the settlement of a difficulty, in which case judgment is plain; but his decision, backed up by the weight and authority of his office, I hope will save two or more persons to the church, whom, my decision alone may dismember forever. From every point of observation it is clear to me that the present plan is far more effective for good than enlarged districts, with half the number of visits. If actual change for the sake of change is not the thing aimed at, the enlargement of circuits, even if two or more preachers must be placed on one charge, would meet the necessities of the case without a word of legislation on the subject. The passage of an advisory resolution by the General Conference might give those oppressed with a speech on the subject an opportunity to work it off.

The question of finance has certainly borne its part in raising this presiding elder's district issue. "Can't support" is the cry. Our system has ever contemplated the plan of going forth as Abraham did, who went "not knowing whither he went." On this principle districts, stations, circuits and missions have been supplied. Preachers have gone forth not knowing anything of the geography of their new charge, nor of its financial capacity, asking no guarantee of money, nor expecting any; working missions into organized circuits, and circuits up to the paying or supporting point, when a demand for more preaching and for more Sunday service have required a division of circuits; while the training in spiritual life and the training in finances went on. During the terrible ordeal of the war, and the hard, hard times since the war, this trusting, sacrificing and training went on. The church has been moved up to a certain point. There is a strain and sacrifice to keep it going. Some say: "There is a screeching in the machinery. Let us reverse it and run back a little." Now we of twenty-five and fifty years' service have grown to the straining position. To ease off and straighten up with a backward movement would hurt us.

For quite a number of years finances and financial plans have occupied the councils of the church. Radiating from the General Conference, the Annual Conferences have laboriously discussed the subject. District Conferences have expatiated upon it more, perhaps, than upon any one subject. Quarterly and Church Conferences have tried to forge out a plan, altering, changing and welding to suit the peculiar habits, tastes and customs of the people. It looks and sounds as if we were trying to run the church more by finance than by faith—more by money-power than by the Holy Ghost. I think that to every reflecting and spiritually-minded person it is plain that our financial system was founded upon the principle of a life of trust. This was long before Muller was born, and a half or three-fourths of a century before he founded his orphan asylums, or obtained an item in his history for his "Life of Trust." If there was more prayer, more humble trust, our machinery would work easier and run with far less friction than without this prayer and trust, and with so much financiering and so many financial plans. When Muller pushed off from the world, and steered out into space, so far as worldly plans were concerned, it was cried after him: "Wild visionary!" When Paul was showing that he had the religion taught by the prophets, a man of eminence said: "Mad! Beside thyself?" Some have read Muller, and cried: "Fanatic!" Our Savior says: "Ask" (that is what we are to do) "and ye shall receive." That is his promise. He did not mean it to tantalize us. He did not say it in jest. He meant that we should receive. We have asked the people for bread, and they have given us a stone. We have asked them for clothes, and they have said: "Be ye warmed." But go to God and ask. He has promised, and the people's money will burn them until they give it. He will turn their meat and bread to husk in their mouths until they feel that they can, they must, they will give some for the sake of the gospel. He whose the gold is has promised.

The plan of two sets of stewards—one for the preacher in charge, and one for the presiding elder—I have seen working on a small scale. It made things unpleasantly perilous between brethren—our set of stewards going to the more liberal and money-paying members, and leaving the other set to gather up what they could get. From such a curse, "good Lord, deliver us." If some law could be enacted graduating the claim of the presiding elder to a per cent. on all moneys collected for the support of the gospel, it would seem to make the matter between the preachers more brotherly, working together and receiving their money in copartnership. Indeed the present system of the presiding elder's claim is paid him upon the plan of percentage, in some connection with the awkward workings of the district stewards' meeting—a fifth wheel in the machinery. Many of our people feel it to be a delegated body only in name. The time of the meeting of this body is often in the dead of winter, when bad weather, worse roads and swollen streams prevent the attendance of a majority of the delegates. There is something pleasant in this pro rata division in feeling that your brother has a proportional share with yourself; and, again, that he would not have fared so well but for your strenuous efforts to keep the interests of the charge alive.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names.

Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral-services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verse, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

NATHAN SMITH was born in All Saints' parish, S. C., February 24, 1826. His early education at advantages were quite limited, and during his boyhood and youth he was accustomed to hard labor in tilling the ground. In 1851 he came to Chattanooga, Tenn., where he engaged in business. In 1858 he removed to Aberdeen, Miss., where he remained until 1865. He then came to Mobile, Ala., where he soon afterward engaged in the wholesale shoe business, in which he continued until his death, March 15, 1878. He was a man of fine natural mind and sterling worth of character. By diligent attention to business he was successful in the accumulation of this worlds goods; yet he was in no sense selfish or avaricious. He was the friend of the poor, and a liberal supporter of the church. His charities were generally conducted upon the principle of not letting the "left hand know what the right hand doeth."

In the prime and glory of his manhood he was cut down by a disease which, though long hidden, was, when fully developed, swift and most fatal in its effects. The closing days of his life were marked by scenes of thrilling interest. When he was stricken down he acknowledged that this was "the Lord's doing." In the most solemn manner he declared that he had made one great mistake through life—trusting in his own morality, rather than the religion of Jesus, to save him. Earnestly he warned those near and dear to him against this dangerous mistake, and urged upon them immediate obedience to the doctrines and demands of the gospel. His prayer for himself was: "O spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more." The Lord heard and answered him. He found perfect peace in his Savior. He was received into the St. Francis Street Methodist Episcopal Church South, and with tearful eyes and grateful heart he joined with loved ones in partaking of the emblems of Christ's body and blood. He retained his mental consciousness almost to the minute of his death, and his last intelligible utterance was: "The blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin."

Our friend, our brother, has gone to his everlasting rest. We will miss him here, and his beautiful earthly home seems lonely without him. Yet we believe to know that it is not a desolate home, for the whole family have found comfort in God, and are looking to a reunion in heaven.

FELIX R. HILL.

MISS FANNIE HARRIS was born October 8, 1851, and died at Allenton, Wilcox county, Ala., January 14, 1878.

In the stillness of midnight the subject of this notice was so severely burned that she died from the effects in about two weeks. The facts and circumstances surrounding this burning were of the saddest nature. While my dear deceased friend was filling up and mending the wants of her sick mother it became necessary to go to the mantle-piece for some medicine, and while there, reaching for the vial, she suddenly caught and felt with part of her clothing in the fire. The poor sick mother was powerless to do aught save raise her feeble voice of alarm and distress. This, combined with the writhing and struggling of the helpless sufferer, now enveloped in flames, aroused the sleeping inmates of the adjoining rooms; but too late, alas! too late, for the flames had done their terrible work. Here was indeed a melancholy scene. The invalid mother, the fainting daughter covered over with the fiery dead, and the wails and cries of the distressed household!

In my sad musings there was the soft whispering of reproach in my ear, that we had been guilty of a great indiscretion. The faithful "watcher" ought not to have been left alone at the bedside of the mother. Others of us, at a small sacrifice of a little sleep, could have prevented such an untimely fate. But it is all past, and I am sure her pure spirit, long since beyond the fires and the floods, forgiving all errors, admonishes us to forget the past in the absorbing interest in our struggles to meet her in the glory-land.

The death of our friend was a sad loss in our little town. No Sabbath school ever gathered around the grave of a sweeter, more dutiful and enthusiastic worker; no family ever bid a last, long farewell to more humble, patient, Christian-like character. We look at her death as a bereavement felt, sharply felt, by all.

Many will be the changes, and years, years will roll by before the curtains of oblivion will begin to fan away the memory of the beauty, the graces, the virtues of our lamented friend. To you who knew her life strive to emulate her example.

LILLIE J. PARKER.

IT BECOMES my painful duty to announce the death of Mrs. SALOME RICHARDS, consort of W. W. Richards, and daughter of E. G. and E. E. Pon.

Mrs. Richards was born in Autauga county, Ala., May 10, 1859. At nine years of age with her parents, she removed to Pensacola, Fla., where the remainder of her life was spent. She was received on profession of faith into the Methodist Episcopal Church South January 15, 1873, and became an active worker in the Sunday school, manifesting much interest in the church of her choice and the prosperity of the Master's cause.

Having previously given her heart, her hand was given in marriage to W. W. Richards, May 24, 1877, and she breathed her last of fifteen minutes past five P. M., May 12, 1878, leaving husband and relatives, with many friends, to mourn their loss. She was accompanied by the heart-crushed husband and relatives, and a great concourse of mourning friends, from the church where buried her and her little daughter in hope of the resurrection morn.

PENSACOLA, FLA., March 26, 1878.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, It hath pleased almighty God, in his inscrutable but wise providence to remove from our midst the soul of our deceased sister, Mrs. SALOME V. RICHARDS, And Whereas, The deceased was for many years a faithful and devoted teacher in the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Pensacola, as aforetime,

Resolved, That while our hearts are made sad by this dispensation, and while we are slow to think that her voice will no more be mingled with ours in the praises of the sanctuary on earth, we bow in meek submission to the will of God, who is too wise to err and too good to afflict, feeling assured that our loss is her eternal gain; and though removed from the church militant on earth she has joined the church triumphant on high.

Resolved, That our Sunday school has lost one of its most efficient and faithful teachers, whose punctuality and devotion to her charge were worthy of all emulation.

Resolved, That we will ever cherish the memory of whose beautiful life exemplified the truth and power of our holy religion, and that we will aspire to follow her as she followed Christ.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved husband and relatives our most sincere sympathy and condolence, and mingle with theirs our feelings of deepest sorrow and grief, remembering, at the same time, that we sorrow not as others who have no hope.

Resolved, That a page of our Sunday school record be devoted to her memory.

W. B. DAVIS,
C. J. COIT,
Committee.

MRS. HULDA HUDSON departed this life on the second of February, 1878, at the residence of her son-in-law, Thos. S. Bowman, in Catahoula parish, La. Her maiden name was White. She was born in North Carolina, January 20, 1809, but removed with her parents, when an infant, to middle Tennessee. She was afterward brought to the State of Louisiana, where she was left an entire orphan when quite young. She was united in marriage to Alfred Hudson in 1831. They spent their married life in Tensas parish, La., where her husband, by industry and economy, provided her a good home, and surrounded her with the comforts of life. In the year 1872 the strong arm of her husband was palsied in death, and she was left alone to devise ways and means to meet the varied wants of time. The burden of life was lightened and sweetened by two daughters, who were a comfort and consolation to her during her widowhood.

She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the year 1811, and at the time of her last illness was firm in the faith. In her intercourse with others there was manifested no bright, sudden flashes of Christian light, but yet there was a steady, unflickering flame, and evidence that the fire was always burning upon the altar, and that it "never went out." She was a woman of deeds rather than words, and often has she kept the barrel of meal from wasting, and the cruse of oil from failing, and many a little has the heart of the servant been made glad by her kindly and thoughtful ministrations.

Something over a year ago she was stricken with an affection which gave evidence to her that her end was approaching. She dreaded not death, but yet she wished to live a few years longer for the sake of her children. It is hard for a mother to say "Good-bye" to a child; and yet how hard for a child to say "Farewell, mother," for, though old and infirm, with dim eye and tottering step, none can love as mother loved.

As the day of her departure drew nigh she girded herself and made ready to depart, and was found watching, aye, waiting and ready to answer the call ere the summons came. "Be ye also ready."

A. M. WALL.

An eminent clergyman in Trenton, N. J., sat in his study some time since, busily engaged in preparing his Sunday sermon, when his little boy toddled into the room, and, holding up his pinched finger, said with an expression of suffering: "Look, pop, how I hurt it." The father, interrupted in the middle of a sentence, glanced hastily at him, and with just the slightest tone of impatience said: "I can't help it, sonny." The little fellow's eyes grew bigger, and as he turned to go out he said, in a low voice: "Yes, you could; you might have said, 'Oh!'" There was a sermon in miniature.

Nothing looks more awkward and confused sometimes than honesty unjustly condemned. It is out of its element, and almost sure to commit itself.—Victor Hugo.

THE LORD IS OUR REFUGE.

"Flee unto thee to hide me."—Psalms cxliii, 9.

From sin's unwearied temptings,
From satan's deadly lies;
From all the world's vain pleasures,
That charm my foolish eyes,

I flee to thee to hide me,
Thy terror-stricken child;
Forsake me, I have ill agreed,
By wayside flowers beguiled.

The foes are drawing round me,
They throng on every side,
And, trembling lest they stop me,
I flee to thee to hide.

No only from foes outward
Do I for shelter cry!—
O save from self, my Father,
The deadliest foe of all!

That, like a mighty mountain,
Towers ever in my way:
Oh, self-"Rock" that's "Higher,"
I flee to thee to-day!

The wayside dust has blinded
My eyes, I cannot see;
But yet there is a Refuge,
And, blindly, there I flee.

O blessed, blessed Refuge,
How safe now are those in thee!
No fiercer foe can shelter
From every poisoned dart!

Here, here, in peace and safety,
Thou'lt make me to abide;
From all my sins and vampires
I flee unto to hide.

Children's After-Supper Science.

BY W. H. WARREN.

We live at the bottom of an ocean seven-five miles deep. We are not drowned therein, but feel like the fishes. We are not crushed although thousands of pounds are heaped upon us. The water ocean has storms only on the surface, the depths being in perfect calm. The air ocean has gulf streams and tempests from below.

Firing the nuisance of a pop gun has only served to startle people, we will put it to some use by showing the nature of our ocean. Observe that the popcorn and the cork driven out before the piston disappear in. What drives out the cork? Why, the air. Then the air is a substance. Put it in a rubber balloon and you may sit on, or kick into a foot ball, and even may ride over your opponents' heads. Now that in driving in the piston the cork does not come out at once, would if there was a stiff click between the cork and piston. How it is springy or elastic. How fortunate it would be for the toes that kick the foot ball and found it filled with solid dirt, or for the houses in the wind a mighty miles an hour as it does now while I write, it would be worse than a dozen rail-roads striking a house at once! Now the cork in where the pistol is. Then try to draw it out. How it holds, and when you let go, quick it flies back! Why? Simply because the weight of air on the top side of the piston is more than on the bottom. Take out cork and let the weight be on both sides and it pulls easily enough. Put a dish full of water, and put a saucer over the top to hold it there and turn it quickly. You see the gob remains full of water. Why does it not run out? Because the weight of the air presses on the water in the saucer and drives it up into the empty glass. If you tip the goblet a little and let some air in, there will be room or empty space to press the water and it runs out. Fill a bottle with water; hold a bit of paper over the mouth. Reverse it. Remove the hand. The water is held in the bottle by the air pushing from below. A bottle may be sheeped with a goblet. If the hole is small, no paper will be needed.

Fill a plate with water; set a tumbler in it. Invert over this a large glass fruit-jar. Top candle burns part of the air, making a partially empty place, and the outside crowds the water from the plate up several inches into the jar. Put a straw or any tube, put the end in water and suck out the air. Now the air drives the water up into the empty place. Suck out more and more is driven up. Now the pump. The air ocean presses the water to your lip.

Why one's head is hurt under water if not because the heavier water goes to it and crowds it up? It has no way to rise itself, as you see if a drop is in air. So anything heavier than air is driven up when we are in the air ocean. Warm air is lighter than cold. Hold a candle near to and round the top of a door and open; the flame screams out as the warm air flies. Hold at the bottom and it streams in with the cold air. Now your warm breath into a warm bubble and it rises taking its envelope with it. Put a whole ball of hydrogen, that is only one-fifth as heavy as air, into a bag and it is crowded up aloft carrying men with it, over land and sea.

Now that air is heavy by the pound pushes us down the street on a windy day, and drives ships over the ocean. A block of air 10 inches wide weighs as much as 85 cents. Take a tube 3 inches square and a piston that slides air tight in it. Take the air from under the piston, and the outside air bears down as heavy as if a man weighing 2,000 pounds stood on it.

Freeze the air on a cold window. It is filled with water. The goblet of water in summer is covered with dew that has taken from the air.

How much water there must be in the air many miles of air. Forty-five inches of water falls as rain in Pittsburgh every year. Three millions of tons to the square mile. In some places six and a half times as much has been known to fall. Water is 815 times as heavy as air, yet the minute clouds bring all the rain from the air and pour it on the land. All the rivers are kept full, and all the lagoons are kept full, and all the air carries equally large load the other way. "All the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full. Unto the place whence the rivers come, thither return they to go again."—Christian Union.

The Death of Nero.

Nero wandered out into the streets of Rome, knocked at the doors of friends; none would answer or let him in. He came back to his bedroom, called for Spicillus, the gladiator, to kill him; but Spicillus was gone. "What!" said he to Epaphroditus, his secretary, who had now joined him, "have I neither friend nor foe?" And he rushed out again to throw himself into the Tiber; but his courage failing him and his reason growing clear once more in the face of appalling calamity, he wished for some quiet place where he might consider his strange and sudden position, and collect his thoughts for death. With his head muffled up, and covering his face with a handkerchief, dressed only in a tunic, with an old soiled cloak thrown over his shoulder, he trudged along barefoot in the gloom of early twilight, accompanied by Phaon, Sporus and Epaphroditus. As these four slunk out of the Nomentane Gate together, like common wayfaring men, they could hear the soldiers in the Prætorian camp, on their right, cursing Nero, the beast, and hailing Galba as father of his country. "They are in pursuit of Nero," said a man as he passed them. "Any news in the city about Nero?" asked another. There was no time to spare. They found him a broken down horse, which he mounted, and they hurried on. At last they reached the villa of Phaon, parched with thirst. The Emperor lapped up some water with his hands from a running tank, with the bitter jest: "This is Nero's distilled water!" He crept quietly into the house on all-fours, through a hole in the wall, and threw himself on the first mattress, prostrate with anger, misery and fatigue. Then he ordered a grave to be dug before his eyes, for he refused to die. He bade them to pave the pit with marble, and, weeping theatrically, he prepared, surrounded by his only remaining friends, to play his last act. "Whatsoever artist is now about to perish!" he exclaimed; but ere the words left his lips a dispatch from Rome arrived, which he snatched out of Phaon's hands. He read it and shuddered. He had been condemned by the Senate to be beaten to death, and dragged by the heels, and flung into the Tiber. Seizing two daggers, he felt their points. Greek verses occurred to him, and he began to recite. He begged Sporus to set up a wall for him—to kill him—to kill himself first. At this moment the tramping of horses and clash of armed men were heard below. He broke out in reverse from the Iliad: "The noise of swift-footed steeds assails my ear." In another moment he would be taken alive. "Come, then, courage, man!" he cried, and feebly pushed the point of the dagger into his throat. But his nerve was gone, and Epaphroditus came to his help and pressed it home. The guards burst in, and would have seized him. "Is this your fidelity?" he murmured, and expired, with staring eyes, to the terror of all who beheld him. It was his last pun, and as the end of such a life, it could not have been outdone. "Is this your fidelity?" "He had never made a better remark," writes M. Renan. "Nero uttering a melancholy platitude over the wickedness of the age, and the disappearance of good faith and virtue! Let us applaud, as the drama is ended and the curtain falls. Once in history, O Nature, with a thousand masks, thou hast had the wit to find an actor worthy of such a role."—Good Words.

Attacks on the Bible.

A library made up of all the books which have been written solely in defense of the Bible would be an imposing spectacle. Almost a century and a half ago the great Eerbert gave, Catalogue Raisonné, of all the books that took been, directly or indirectly, evoked by Christianity down to his time. Though not exhaustive some pages also being occupied with other subjects, it forms a quarto of more than seven hundred pages. I apprehend that by this time, a similar work would extend to at least three times the bulk.

Equally striking, in some respects would be the spectacle of all those works which have been written more or less against the book in general condemnation of its claims, or against some of its principal facts and evidences. The volumes thus written for the purpose of corrupting men's reverence, love and veneration for it, exceeding in the hypothesis as merely human origin—showing either that it is substantially incredible, or like other books, a mixture of wisdom and folly, would form a library of no inconsiderable bulk.

If all these books were placed in one library, and this single one set on a table in the midst of it, and a stranger were told that this book, attributed to the far the most part, the work of a number of unlearned and obscure men belonging to a despised nation called the Jews—had drawn upon itself, for its exposure, confutation and destruction, this multitude of volumes, I imagine he would be inclined to say: "Then I presume this little book was annihilated long ago; though how it could be needful to write a thousandth part so much for any such purpose I cannot comprehend; for if the book be what these authors say, surely it should not be very difficult to show it to be so, and if so, what wonderful madness to write all these volumes!" How surprised he would then be to learn that they were felt not to be enough; that similar works were multiplying every day, and never more actively than at the present time; and still to no purpose in disabusing mankind of this same frenzy!

But the volume itself survives both friends and foes. Without being able to speak one word on its own behalf but what it has already said, without any power of explanation, or remonstrance in deprecation of the attacks made upon it, or to assist those who defend it—it passes along the ages in majestic silence. Impassive amidst all this tumult of controversy, in which it takes no part, it might be likened to some great ship floating down a mighty river, like the Amazon or Orinoco, the shores of which are inhabited by various savage tribes. From every little creek or inlet, from every petty port or bay, sally flotillas of canoes, some seemingly friendly and some seemingly hostile, filled with warriors in all the terrors of war-paint, and their artillery of bows and arrows. They are hostile tribes, and, soon turning their weapons against one another, assail each other with great fury and mutual loss. Meantime the noble vessel silently moves on through the scene of confusion, without deigning to alter its course or to fire a shot; perhaps here and there a seaman casts a compassionate glance from the lofty bulwarks, and wonders at the hardihood of those who come to assail his leviathan.—Rogers' Superhuman Origin of the Bible.

Mother-Comfort.

This beautiful expression occurs in Isaiah lxvi, 13: "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."

It was Luther who spoke of God as being our father and mother.

Whatever there is in the universe has been first in the mind, in the heart, in the nature of God. Even sex seems to be there. He calls himself our father, and now he speaks of himself as our mother.

All human relationships seem to be intended to show us God. We could never reach to the conception of the fatherhood of God if we did not have human fathers, and there are loves in the recesses of the nature of God which we can only reach through our knowledge of the heart that is in our mothers.

We have just as much right to say "Our Mother, which art in heaven," as "Our Father, which art in heaven." The study of mother-love gives us an idea of God's love for us. Nothing is so close to a man as his mother. His first life is a life hid in her. His first sustenance taken by his own motion is drawn from her. And so it is of the soul and God.

"In him we live and move and have our being." "All my springs are in thee." We are his off-spring. Each one of us is his off-spring. It is important to recollect that.

Her many children never become confounded in a mother's heart. She not only knows all—she knows each; she knows his peculiarities of bodily constitution and of temperament, and his mental peculiarities. She knows how to reach him and what to do for him. The wife may be as foul as wife can be, but she does not know what kind of babe or boy her husband was; but his mother knows it all. So the Lord "Knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust."

In its little hurts, disappointments and distresses, no one can comfort a child like its mother; for no one will allow for it and be tender to it, even when it is naughty and bad. So God comforts us with the comfort which each one needs.

He can comfort us all the more if we will recognize that he is verily our spiritual mother, if we can call him as the Psalms do: Our own God. Another man's mother may be best for him, but my own mother is my best comfort.

A mother's love never fails her child. Ordinarily as long as he lives, though he himself should become an old man before his mother dies, she is tender toward him. In his infancy, in the night, when others weary, she wakes and watches and yearns over him, and that yearning goes out to him through his career of life. She loves him with an everlasting love, and the Lord says to each one of his children: "I will love thee with an everlasting love."

A mother sacrifices ease, comfort, pleasure, for her child; devotes her days and nights to the wearied, the sick or disabled child. Just as she fondles, consoles, forgives and cheers her child, so the Lord does his child. You will readily recall a passage of Scripture to suit each word in the preceding sentence. But nothing can make you ever think tenderly of God, nor feel too fondly toward him who has said to you: "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."—Rev. Dr. Deems, in Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

SOMETHING TO RING BELLS FOR. The Rev. Dr. Day, in a recent sermon at Plainfield, N. J., told this simple story: A town not far distant, a few years since, two Christian young men, brothers, were doing a prosperous business, assisting many noble enterprises, and each living in a beautiful home. A combination of disasters suddenly rendered them insolvent. What did they do? They did not consult the law to see how much of their property might be kept from the creditors, but at once surrendered to them homes, factories, assets, all; and promised, if possible, the balance should yet be paid to each creditor in full. Resuming business, poor in means, but strong in character, living in cottages in which their noble wives did the house work, still, by economy and industry, the last dollar of the old indebtedness was paid, with interest. The day on which this was completed the bells of the churches were rung in honor, and the whole town joined in the expression of grateful joy—a triumph of character such as the bells of any church might celebrate, and any community delight to honor.

A gentleman, who was a good shot, lent a favorite pointer to a friend, who had not much to accuse himself of in the slaughter of birds, however much he might have frightened them. After firing at several partridges which the old pointer had flushed for him without bringing them down, the dog turned away in apparent disgust, went home, and never could be persuaded to accompany the same person afterward.

Religious Intelligence.

—Trinity Methodist Church South, at Atlanta, Ga., has issued bonds, payable in five years, to pay its floating debt of $13 500.

—The report of the government commission upon the schism in the Reformed Church of France will be published soon. It is said to favor the synodical or orthodox party. One in every ten of the pastorates in the church is vacant.

—The New York City Methodist Church Extension Society has now under its care 15 churches and chapels, with 2,119 members and probationers, and 1 000 Sunday school scholars. The church property held is valued at $431 000, on which there is an indebtedness of $127 000. Fifteen pastors and assistants are employed.

—The Pope, on receiving the parish priests recently, recommended them to preach Jesus Christ, his life and his teachings, and to guard their flocks against the infidelity and immorality so generally prevailing, the result of a corrupt press. The Pope in all his exhortations avoids mention of the Virgin, with the purpose of discountenancing Mariolatry, which his predecessor so long encouraged.

—In the Northwest there is a very strong body of Swedish Lutherans, known as the Swedish Augustana Synod. The synod embraces 118 ministers and 37,000 communicants, and has a college and theological seminary at Rock River, Ill., where ministers are being trained to preach both in the English and Swedish languages. The synod has lately undertaken a mission among the Indians.

—The United Presbyterian Church of Scotland contributed to foreign missions $91 720 in ten and a half months, ending November 15, 1876—a falling off of $21 555 from the receipts of the same period in 1875. There was, however, a very handsome bequest, amounting to $54 235, which more than made up the deficiency. The church was, nevertheless, called upon to raise at least $100 000 by the end of the year.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church has won over another bishop, this time from the Free Church of England. The seceder is the Right Rev. Bishop Sugden. He has been appointed coadjutor bishop to Dr. Gregg, who now holds jurisdiction from the Reformed body in England. The English Free Church being a small denomination—numbering not more than forty churches—the affair has but little ecclesiastical significance.

—The missionary of the American Baptist Missionary Union at Zeegong, Burmah, Mr. George, writes that he has organized a new church of forty-two members. The congregation is growing so fast that his house has become too small to accommodate it, and he expects to build a chapel. His experience, he says, is new to Burman missionaries. As a general thing, converts come in one or two at a time, so they can be taught without difficulty; but he has over a hundred disciples, all ignorant and widely scattered.

—The fifty-second annual meeting of the Basle Missionary Society was held recently. The receipts for 1876 were reported at $172 208, the expenditures at $152 702. All of the thirty stations of the society show an increase of native members. China, although receiving smaller appropriations than India or Africa, is the most fertile of the three fields. The number of European missionaries in the service of the society is 108, besides 57 European woman missionaries, and 227 native helpers of both sexes. The institute at Basle had during the year 96 pupils, and it furnished six new missionary agents to whom will shortly be added seven young men who have just completed their studies.

FRANCE.—Dr. de Pressense, in a recently published letter, gives an intelligent outline of the state of Protestantism in France. There are, he says, in the Protestant Church three distinct parties. The first, known as the Orthodox Right, which desires to be recognized as the sole representative of the Reformed Church on the ground of its adherence to the Confession of Faith as interpreted by the synod of 1872; the second, the Orthodox Left, which declares that Protestantism is not pledged to any confession of faith, and that the State cannot exclude any section of the church from patronage because it has not accepted the scrupulous decisions; the third, the Right Center, which, as to doctrine, holds substantially with the orthodox party, but would not coerce the Left. The three parties have in turn carried their grievances to M. Bardoux, the new minister of public worship, who finds the contradictory opinions very perplexing. Dr. de Pressense declares that he himself knows of "no adequate and decisive solution of the present difficulties" except the entire separation of the Church from the State."

—At the meeting of the Reformed Episcopal Synod in New York the principal business was the adoption of a constitution, providing: 1. That the synod shall be under the jurisdiction of a bishop to be assigned by the General Council of the Church. 2. That each congregation shall be entitled to two lay representatives in meetings of synod and one additional for every thirty communicants; all representatives to be chosen by the representative congregations. 3. That regular meetings of the synod shall be held in October and February of each year. For the ensuing year Bishop Fallows was elected president of the synod, and Stewart L. Woodford vice-president. Bishop Cheney, in an eloquent sermon, reviewed the history of the Reformed body and its relation to the Protestant Episcopal Church, concluding with this emphatic expression: "The evangelical element in the Protestant Episcopal Church is as dead as the mummies of the Pyramids. It stultified itself by holding back when the one opportunity came for which it had been praying for years, and God does not give such an opportunity twice in a generation."

Our Young People

IMPORTANCE OF PUNCTUATION.

Let young readers consider the following lines closely and see if they are not sense or nonsense according to the punctuation:

I saw a pigeon making bread;
I saw a girl composed of thread;
I saw a towel one mile square;
I saw a meat with the air;
I saw a rocket walk a lofty;
I saw a pony make a flea;
I saw a blacksmith in a box;
I saw an orange kill an ox;
I saw a feather made of steel;
I saw a jew-knife dance a reel;
I saw a sucker saw ten feet high;
I saw a bugler in a pie;
I saw an apple fly away;
I saw a sparrow making hay;
I saw a farmer like a deer;
I saw a puppy pulling gears;
I saw three men who saw these too,
And will you find what I tell you.

From Our Little Friends

MADISON STATION, MISS., Feb. 15, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years of age. My papa takes your paper, and I like it very much. I thought I would write a letter to you. My papa is a local preacher of the Methodist Church South. I am a member of that church, and I hope some time to come to your great large city and see you and Mr. Harp too, as he sent us some nice school-books, for which I am very thankful. Rev. P. C. Langford is our pastor for this year. We like him very much. I am sorry to say we have no Sabbath school. I will ask the children a question: What damsel danced before the king and caused John the Baptist to be beheaded?

From your little friend,

LAURA EUGENIA ALFORD.

WASHINGTON PARISH, LA., Feb. 2, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a Methodist girl, and live far away in the country. We have no Methodist church near us. All our neighbors are Baptists. We love them very much. I think they are good Christians. Tell Miss Tenny L. Simmons that it was Elijah who sat under the juniper-tree. He was fed on cake baked on coals and water. Now I will ask some questions: Where is "parched corn" found in the Bible? Where is "mustl dishes" found? In what part of Eden did God make the garden of paradise?

I remain your friend,

FLORA E. HARVEY.

KEARNEY, LA., Feb. 5, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old, and go to Sunday school every Sunday. I love to go. We regretted very much to give up our superintendent, Dr. Beazly; but I am thankful to say we have another one, whom we love very much—Capt. C. J. Foster. I hope we will always have him—he is so good.

Your little friend,

IDA V. M. SAMPLE.

Little by Little.

"Uncle," said Tom one day, "it seems to me your things don't look as well as they might." They were in the garden and "the things" to-ward which his eyes were the current bushes.

"I don't expect they do," replied his uncle; "I'm no great hand at a garden. Well, sir, what can you improve?"

"I can try on the currants," said Tom. "They want to be trimmed out and the wood cut off, and the right suckers trained. Don't you never dig around them, and put ashes on the roots?"

His uncle had never done these things, and did not know that they ought to be done. "I thought," he said, "currants took care of themselves."

"But they can be cared for," said Tom, "and do all the better."

"Suppose you try, boy," said his uncle.

His uncle did not believe much would come of it, but he had reason to change his mind. Much did come of it. All at once it seemed to him, for time goes fast to an old man, his bushes were loaded with fruit. Fine large currants, such as his garden had not seen for many a day, if ever before. People, when they walked into the garden, exclaimed: "What splendid currants you have!"

"That boy knows how to take care of his gold-dust," said his uncle to himself, and sometimes aloud.

Tom went to college and every account they heard of him he was going ahead, laying a solid foundation for the future.

"Certainly," said his uncle, "certainly. That boy, I tell you, knows how to take care of his gold-dust."

"Gold-dust?" Where did he get gold-dust? He was a poor boy. He had not been to California. He never was a miner. Where did he get gold-dust? Ah! he has seconds and minutes, and these are the gold dust of time—specks and particles of time, which boys and girls and grown-up people are apt to waste and throw away. Tom knew their value. His father or minister had taught him that every speck and particle of time was worth its weight in gold; and his son took care of them as if they were. He never spent them foolishly, but only in good bargains; "for value received," was stamped on all he passed away. Take care of your gold-dust.

"By little and little" is the true secret of gaining knowledge.

A very busy man, who had very little time for reading or study, was asked by a friend how it happened that he knew so much more than other people. "O!" said he, "I never had time to lay in a regular stock of learning, so I save all the bits that come in my way, and they count up in the course of a year."

One sometimes observes an intelligent boy who is always on the look-out to learn what he can. While waiting in a newspaper office for a package he will notice how a mailing machine is made to do its work; and if he is sent to the florist's he will be able to tell you many things which the modest there. In these and a hundred other ways such lads are educating themselves.

The same rule of "little by little" is equally true in the accumulation of a fortune. Rome was built of single bricks piled up one by one. The little coral insect seems too small and weak to accomplish much, and yet it labors on, and at last rears those great reefs which serve as break-waters against the mighty ocean.

Not only are all good things secured to us "little by little," but people accomplish their ruin in the same way. It is by small concessions to evil and slight indulgences that the final destruction of life is accomplished. The child who steals lumps of sugar and apples will go on to steal bigger things.

In one of Gulliver's tales of his fabulous travels he tells us of being pinned down to the earth by pigmies no bigger than his thumb. But they came upon him by thousands. They bound him as fast as if he had been tied with cables and fettered with iron.

In a Carolina forest of a thousand acres you can scarcely find a tree that is not dead and crumbling to decay. No fire has swept over it, nor lightning scathed those naked, bleaching pines. This ruin was wrought by a little insect's larvæ no larger than grains of rice. What a hundred ax men could not accomplish by years of hard labor this seemingly insignificant insect sent its feeble offspring to perform. One alone could have but little power. It is true. But millions were marshaled and all the skill of man could not stay their course.

Such is the power of little sins. By performing the same act over, for even two or three times in succession, the habit is formed, from the dominion of which it is hard to deliver one's self again.

A Fable.

A tall elm tree was blown down by the east wind in a storm. It had been the home of hundreds of katydids and fire-flies and lady-birds, and by its destruction these were driven out of doors. It had been the council-room of the birds and, by reason of the myriads of insects in the bark, had been a storehouse and larder for the sparrows, and the hunting-ground of the woodpecker.

Like the destruction of a city, its fall fell involved all of its inhabitants in ruin.

The robin, bright and cheery, was the first to encourage the sufferers. He sat on a neighboring tree and thus he sang: "Do not let us be discouraged; let us go to work and help ourselves and help each other. Who will not do this is not worthy of help."

The mosquitoes, who are the reporters of the insect tribe, came buzzing around, singing and annoying every one under pretense of getting the news of their family for the public.

"The katydids would do no work, but were very loud and noisy with their contradictory assertions and their presumptuous claims for help from others.

The locust's loud voice could also be heard, but it was rather in denunciation of the rest with them in any suggestions for the benefit of the whole community.

The wasps who had been inspecting the elm with a view to building a nest on a dead limb, chuckled on a neighboring tree and congratulated each other that they had not already begun their work, but not a word of comfort had they for the sufferers.

Above all the complaints and selfish cries for help from others, the robin's voice was heard in encouragement, and the robin's example was seen in helpfulness. He helped to feed the young birds in the nest, and ever as he worked he sang cheerily: "Let us try to help ourselves and help each other; who is not willing to do this is not worthy of help."

The song of the robin is the moral of my fable. In seasons of suffering there are those who are loud in their denunciations against the trouble; there are those who try to spread the news of sin or suffering, and there are those who are always calling upon others for help. But the true voices, the world's true comforters, are those who endeavor to remedy the wrong by working themselves for others, and encouraging others to work for themselves.—O. L. H., in the Appeal.

A tutor of one of the Oxford colleges who limped in his walk was some years after accosted by a well-known politician, who asked him if he was not the chaplain of the college at such a time, naming the year. The doctor replied that he was. The interrogator observed: "I knew you by your limp." "Well," said the doctor, "it seems my limping made a deeper impression than my preaching." "Ah, doctor," was the reply with ready wit, "it is the highest compliment we can pay a minister to say that he is known by his walk rather than by his conversation."

The Double Crucifixion.

The cross in which Paul gloried had crucified him unto the world. It had disgraced him in the eyes of the world. He was degraded in the esteem of Jews and Gentiles by his espousal of Christianity. He was as one ignominiously put to death, as a dead man whose memory was hateful. The scandal of the cross and the reproach of Christ fell upon him. He was no more accounted of in the world in which he had previously moved. His old associates and friends had forsaken him, and become his enemies. Is there any such effect of the cross in the world's present estimate of the Christian? Does the modern disciple become crucified unto the world by embracing the religion of Jesus?

A parallel to Paul's experience is found in the heathen countries of today. It is the greatest obstacle to the conversion of men in India, China, Japan, that their acceptance of the gospel brings upon them the contempt of their fellows, and often leads to violent persecution. The same is true in Roman Catholic countries, as in Spain, Italy, Mexico, where an adhesion to Protestantism is sure to excite aversion, enmity and violent opposition. Under such conditions the cross still crucifies unto the world, disgraces its adherents, and cuts them off from their old associations and friendships. The native converts know well what the apostle means by being crucified unto the world. They are accounted as ignominiously separated from society and as dead. The world to which they once moved, and by which they are surrounded, no longer cares for them. They are cast out, and in permanent disgrace.

How does the Christian stand in the estimate of that mottled world of Christian civilization in which he lives? What does this sort of a world think of him who is faithful to Christ? There is the world of mammon, bent on money without regard to principle; the world of pleasure, that has no scruples about the means of promoting gayety and mirth; the world of lust and appetite that scouts all restraints of temperance and virtue; and the world of indifference and infidelity, that treats religion as an imposture and a delusion. Are not spiritually minded people held as nothing in the estimate of this sort of a world? There cannot be dangerous persecution, and such is the strength of Christianity that a certain respectability must be accorded those who profess it; but nevertheless the earnest and worldly mind holds the strict and zealous Christian in anything but high consideration. Let the young man forsake the walks of pleasure for Christ, let the fashionable young woman give up dancing and the opera, let the man of the world turn his back upon his old associates in cards and drams, and something of what is meant by being crucified unto the world will be manifest.

The trimmer between the church and the world may find nothing of this Pauline experience in his religious history, but the faithful follower of Christ will find that his very fidelity cuts him off from the sympathy and esteem of worldly-minded people. The devoted Christian will have the support and appreciation of those who are like-minded with himself, he will command the respect and confidence of those whose consciences are alive to the truth, but he will be crucified unto the world. Hence the temptation to compromise, and to seek some medium ground by which we may retain our Christian hope and not lose the esteem of the world. As a rule, we may say that if the cross has not crucified us unto the world—killed us and disgraced us in the world's opinion—we know as yet but little of what the cross implies.

The cross not only kills us in the eyes of the world, but it kills the world in the estimate of the true Christian. While the world thinks nothing of him, he cares nothing for the world. The world is crucified unto him. It is as something dead and out of mind. Its honors, pleasures and wealth are of comparative indifference. The love of these things were once the supreme objects of desire and pursuit. Happiness consisted in the gratification of pride and appetite, and the end of life was to secure honor and riches. What the world would say, what it might think, was of more moment than the approval of God. The world was the god of the soul, the object of worship, the golden image before which the heart bowed down. The world of worship, pursuit and desire is crucified unto the true believer. It is to him as a degraded and executed malefactor—an object in which he no longer finds satisfaction or pleasure. Such is the effect of the cross on the believing heart. It crucifies the world—kills it—so that it no longer absorbs the affections and engrosses the thoughts. Henceforth the treasure is in heaven, the ambition is to secure the honor that comes from God, and the love of Christ fills the heart and expels the love of the world.

Worldly minded professors would do well to ponder this confession of the apostle: "The world is crucified unto me." Perhaps they have found no antagonisms in the world, no loss of its friendships, no withdrawal of its favor, and the reason may be that they have really never come out from the world. The cross has not as yet done its legitimate and true work in them. It has not separated and distinguished them from the world as it should, and it has not overcome that love of the world which is inconsistent with and in opposition to the love of the Father. We doubt whether a faithful Christian ever lived who could not affirm of the cross as Paul did: "Whereby the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." We have reversed the order of the apostle's statement in our meditation, but the statement is in the order of experience. To genuine conversion the world is crucified unto us, it loses its attractions and its power, and our crucifixion unto the world follows as a consequence. When we get clear of the world the world will soon get clear of us. The repulsion is mutual, and the separation wide and absolute. This outcry of worldliness in the church, of a rage for unlawful pleasures, and of a general tendency to throw off all disciplinary restraint, can have but one explanation. The crucifying power of the cross has not been realized. The import of the gospel as embodied in the cross has not been apprehended; there has been no experience that leads men to glory in that which crucifies, and because it crucifies.

Let it be understood, then, that the cross crucifies, and that any profession which does not embrace this distinctive experience is a sham and a delusion. The desire to make a fair show in the flesh is as strong now as it was when the apostle wrote to the Galatians. The cross has lost none of its offense to the carnal mind, and now, as then, there are those who are willing to accept Christianity provided the cross be left out. They would connect themselves with the church provided they need not clash with the world. The world is not crucified unto them and they would not have themselves crucified unto the world. Such people are as far from the discipleship of Christ as darkness is from light. A genuine conversion always involves this two-fold crucifixion: Dead to the world, and the world dead.

This aspect and import of the great symbol of our religion cannot be too much insisted on. It would save thousands of souls from the fatal delusion that they are Christians when they are steeped and saturated with worldliness, and in the broad road to destruction. And it would give us sounder conversions, more edifying religious examples, and a church more entirely devoted and animate with spiritual power. For, after all, the great conflict of the times is between spirituality and worldliness. It is whether the cross is in Christianity, and whether the cross crucifies.

The Fellowship of Christ's Sufferings.

St. Paul puts this theme high in the curriculum of the Christian school. And rightly. To understand the nature and cause of suffering in general has been a serious question with the scientists and philosophers of all ages and creeds. As a fact, unwelcome as it may be, it has forced itself upon the attention of the philanthropist and misanthrope, producing the self sacrificing care and exertions of the one, and the ravings and uncharitable conclusions of the other. To assume an explanation of the cause is not to solve all the difficulties connected with suffering. To harmonize the various forms and degrees of suffering with any known or assumed cause is more difficult than even to answer the first question; for here an hypothesis in the first must tally with facts in the second. Nor is the difficulty over on a successful solution here; for then the sufferings in their various degrees, and their patients, of almost infinite variety of size, order and character must be harmonized with one another. Then not only must harmony of cause, application and purpose be shown, but there must be shown to be a harmony of sympathy pervading all the beings that suffer.

This question has nothing speculative about it. However much soi-disant practical people hoot when the subject is presented to them, not suffering, they are most vociferous in their inquiries when "it toucheth them." Why do the unsinning suffer? Why are the purest and bravest patriots sacrificed on their country's altars? Why should a Decius be swallowed up in the vortex, while ten thousand villains in Rome should live? What is the connection between suffering and the glory and stability of government and the advancement of the world? "Haec etiam fortasse meminisse juvabit" said the Trojan hero to his despondent followers—certainly not merely a vain-glorious boasting of having endured, but having endured for a purpose worth the pains and privations.

From this we naturally turn to the sufferings of Christ, whose purity is apotheosis. What is "the fellowship of his sufferings?" Here Paul has passed the points of Christian experience that relate to personal faith to justification. He has passed the point where "a dispensation of the gospel was committed unto him." He has left behind the varied experience of an arduous life and is looking to steps which are yet before him. He would win Christ, as well as he won by him. To the passive under a sense of pardoned sin, to merely work as an agent employed by Christ is not enough. While he would win for Christ he would win Christ himself, "and be found in him." Christ was in him "the hope of glory;" Christ was in him "working to will and to do;" but he would be "found in Christ." What for? "To know him." Says one: "I know that man—he saved me from drowning." No that is not knowing the man—nothing but his act of saving life. The motive, the aim of saving life is unknown. You are yet a stranger to the emotions of joy pervading his breast. What is their nature? their intensity? their constancy? their solicitude for the future? We know very little. We cannot get into his heart to know. But "the power of his resurrection" brings us to knowledge that is too high for human science or philosophy. Vital force is a mysterious phenomenon when studied in its operation through organs normally performing their functions. But a preternormal exercise of functions startles us out of our wondering reveries over the normal which we cannot satisfactorily explain. Can we reach that knowledge? If so, then we prepare for the study of the "fellowship of his sufferings." Those sufferings must have some sympathy with the power of the resurrection. How it may be necessary that suffering should furnish stability and glory to kingdoms we have already suggested. A further analogy is seen in the throes of all creation in parturition. Each of the natural progenitors might say to their offspring: "Death worketh in us; but life in you." In an infinitely higher sense it must be true that the power of Christ's resurrection was intimately connected with his sufferings—not to restore him to life, but to "quicken our mortal bodies." The Savior himself might have led a life free from pain, and might have died without a throne, and yet have risen and ascended into heaven. But the "fellowship of his sufferings" being lost to us, "the power of his resurrection" also would have been lost. "It behooved him, in bringing many sons to glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through suffering." The power of the resurrection is transmitted to man through the fellowship of the sufferings.

But the study of the fellowship of suffering is a study in itself. The divine will can be communicated by revelation and the monitions of conscience. Parts even are understood in some degree through nature. We may reach a very high standard of Christian knowledge and grace in the study and practice of those theological questions and duties which arise from a knowledge of our relations to God as creatures and servants, as once lost, but now redeemed. We may know much of faith, both theoretically and practically, and perfection may in some sense be ours; but completeness of knowledge must advance from this righteousness by faith to a fulness by experience of the sufferings of Christ—a theme which angels desire to look into. That the angelic world itself is in some way dependent upon this fellowship of suffering can scarcely be doubted, since we cannot think that mere curiosity ever prompts angels to study any subject. If, then, this inference be correct, we find in the curriculum of the Christian school studies that rise above the angels' ken. Unsinning and unsuffering, excellent in strength, and of knowledge almost infinite, they yet are unable to enter into one study by which Deity is to be more fully revealed than by any other. Through this fellowship of suffering the universe is to be more closely and firmly bound together; its moral equilibrium is to be re established, and its material splendors, to be restored and retouched in indelible colors.

The fellowship of his sufferings is not to be a merely diffusive general experience of the mass of Christianity; it is direct, and a part of each individual experience. It is the only means of securing companionship everywhere and at all times. The society and sympathy of pleasure is variable—at one time overflowing, at another dry as a desert. But he who has entered into the fellowship of sufferings with Christ can find at all times One to whom he can go for sympathy. The external form of suffering will then pass unnoticed, while the principle of life and joy that flows through them to the immortal life and blessedness beyond the grave will become a power, conforming him to the death of his Redeemer, and enduing him, even in the midst of earthly dejection and weakness, with an armor of glory and strength which will enable him "to count it all joy" "not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake;" for to suffer with him is to be glorified together.

Scriptural Preaching.

If a lawyer, conducting a case involving fortune, character or life, should attempt to do so with very slight use of legal authority, it would be symptomatic of a bad case, or a weak and inefficient counsel. The strength of the lawyer is the law. If he has no law he has no case, and must fail. So a physician, no matter how fine his address, or how well he talks, if he shows no clear knowledge of physiology, anatomy, and the chemical character and power of remedial agents, he cannot succeed as a doctor. These attainments are essential.

The preacher's authority for preaching is the inspired Scripture. His matter must be drawn from the Bible. No matter how deep in science how polished in belles-lettres, how rich in imagination, or philosophic in vocabulary, graceful in action, or sweet in intonation, if his sermon shows a want of Scripture it shows a radical defect, which nothing else can supply. The church must be fed with the "sincere milk of the word, that it may grow thereby." Man, as a moral and spiritual being, does not "live by bread alone, but by every word of God." The overwhelming majority of those who hear the preacher believe that the Bible is the word of God. It carries more authority and exerts more influence than any other teaching. It is the "sword of the Spirit." God says of his word: "It shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." The psalmist says that the "entrance of God's word giveth light." It is a light to the understanding in the things of salvation far brighter than any of the poets or philosophers.

When we read the prophets we find them quoting and adducing the law. When we read the inspired biographies of Christ we find them constantly quoting the Bible, and no other written book. In his memorable and tremendous conflict with satan he meets that great fallen archangel—Intellect—with no appeal to science or human learning, with nothing less and nothing else than: "Thus it is written." No blade but one of heavenly temper keen could have pierced his shield or given the mortal thrust. Human science and poetry would have been thrown away on him who could "turn himself into an angel of light."

The sermons of Stephen, Peter and Paul were energized, illuminated and made powerful by the word of God. All the apostolic epistles—which were inspired written sermons—are built upon and sustained by the Old Testament scriptures. Let the preacher be assured that no flight of fancy, no splendor of description can do the real execution which "the sword of the Spirit" can. Let him feel that in all his well-furnished armory he has no weapon equal to the "word." It has an adaptation, a directness, and, above all, an authority that no other form of truth can have. God says if we honor him he will honor us. Let preachers honor God by a copious, judicious and frequent use of his word, and God will attend that word by the light and power of the Spirit who inspired it. Paul, Luther, Wesley, all the most eminently and permanently useful preachers have, like Apollos, been "mighty in the Scriptures."

W.

"Pupil" ought to know that the word "usury" in the Bible simply means interest, and that the law of Moses prohibiting usury or interest was limited to transactions between Jews. The Jew might exact interest of a foreigner. The Jewish law concerning usury does not apply now to us, for if it did it would be unlawful to receive any interest whatever. Mr. Watson says: "As the law of nature does not forbid the receipt of moderate interest in the shape of rent, for the use of lands or houses, neither does it prohibit it for the loan of money or goods." The fixing of a certain rate of interest by law is based upon other reasons besides that of preventing exorbitant demands. It is a convenience and almost a necessity in business, in litigation, and in the settlement of estates, that some rate be recognized as uniform and legal. As a preventive of unreasonable interest the law is nearly useless, as it is easily evaded. It seems to be the settled conviction of the business and commercial world that the value of money, like that of other commodities, should be determined by the law of supply and demand. Would our correspondent sell his cotton for ten cents a pound if he could get twenty five cents or his corn at one dollar a bushel if he were offered two dollars? If he has land that will rent for ten dollars an acre would he rent it for five? What profit a country merchant should charge on provisions and other goods, in order to do a safe business depends upon the risks. There is usually a certain per cent. of loss by deterioration of goods, bad debts, and from other causes. Where the risks are great there must be high interest on money, and high prices for goods. What is a fair compensation must be determined by every man for himself; but all are bound to be merciful and just. The rich must not oppress the poor, nor take advantage of their necessities to wring from them extortionate prices. God requires that we do justice, love mercy, and walk humbly with God. Extortion is one of the great sins denounced by the word of God. He who is guilty of it is expressly excluded from the kingdom of God. Paul places the extortioner in the same company with thieves, adulterers, drunkards and idolaters. But this word as it occurs in the New Testament, probably means one who manifests his greed of gain in robbery and plunder, or one who resorts to oppressive and unjust measures to secure gain. It is probably true that the subject of honesty and mercy in business dealings does not enough engage the attention of the pulpit. It is not ignored by the preachers in this section, but it may be elsewhere. The Christian who does not carry his religion with him in his business is, we believe, a deluded man. If, being rich and prosperous he oppresses the poor, and exacts from them more than is just, he cannot hope for mercy at the hands of a righteous God.

The discussion of the presiding elder question has occupied more space in the papers than any other that is likely to come before the General Conference. There seems to be a pretty general demand for the removal of the present limitation of the size of the districts. We think this change will be made—placing the limitation at say twenty pastoral charges, or leaving it out altogether. It is thought that the enlargement of the districts will lighten the financial burden of the charges, and secure a better support to the presiding elder. The size of the districts must, however, be determined by the territory in which they are located, and by the general character of the work. It can be safely left to the discretion of the Bishops. If, however, the number of districts is to be greatly reduced, it will be advisable to change the present basis of lay representation in the Annual Conferences. That representation is not large now, and we should not care to have less. As to the method of raising the presiding elder's salary, the present one seems to us to be the best that can be devised, provided it is insisted that a living salary shall be raised. As to the election of the presiding elders by the Conference we hope that matter has been settled. The presiding eldership is vital to our itinerant system, and we must be careful about measures looking to its modification. Some writers favor a limitation of the appointing power so that no one shall serve in the office more than four years consecutively. In some Conferences this would somewhat embarrass the Bishops; in others it might be a relief to them. The work would be benefited in some cases; in others injured. With no stronger reasons for the change than those we have seen with, we are disposed to think that it is hardly called for. If, however, any curtailment of the appointing power be deemed advisable, it would be less objectionable than any other.

The anniversary exercises of the New Orleans Methodist Sunday School Union took place at the Carondelet Street church on Sunday afternoon, April 21. Rev. Felix R. Hill, of Mobile, and W. H. Goodwyn, Esq., of Baton Rouge, delivered capital addresses. Better judges than we are pronounced the singing unusually good. Certainly we enjoyed it much, and the German song most of all. All of our schools, American and German, were well represented, and the house was filled with the children and their friends. An excellent feature in the exercises was the reading of a carefully prepared report by the secretary of the Union, exhibiting the comparative state of our Sunday school work in 1877 and in 1878. We congratulate Bro. S. Ross, the president of the Union, and the officers and teachers of our schools on the great and good work they are doing. We were glad to notice the presence of W. H. Foster, R. L. Robertson, William Sherry, D. Parker, J. G. Parham, and other veteran superintendents and teachers. Capt. Robertson has passed his eighty second year, and still superintends the Morean Street school.

We believe the Southern Presbyterian General Assembly resolved at its last session to conduct its correspondence with other religious bodies for the future by written communications, instead of by personal representatives. Would it not be well for our General Conference to adopt a similar measure? There would be a large saving in time and expense; and communications to other churches, prepared by a committee, would have the advantage of being reviewed and approved by the body from which they emanate. A personal messenger in his address may not accurately express the views and sentiments of the General Conference. A written communication prepared by a committee, and adopted by the General Conference, would perfectly reflect the mind and opinions of all concerned. It would be cheap, safe and expeditious way of conducting our fraternal correspondence.

Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, pastor of St. John's church, Galveston, writing to the Texas Christian Advocate, says:

The series of meetings recently held at this church were a source of spiritual pleasure and profit to those who participated in them. Eight persons professed conversion, and several members were added to the church. Some earnest seekers for a clearer and fuller religious experience were lifted above doubt and into certainty, into the clear light of blessed assurance. The faithful Christian workers, who used these "means of grace," testified to an enlarged experience, and an elevation to a higher plane of religious life; and all "thanked God and took courage" to work for him. We have good reason to believe that some for whom earnest prayers were offered, and for still being offered, have had awakened in them a growing desire for the joy and hope of the Christian. May the Spirit of God increase these desires until they reach the point of a full and happy experience of pardon and peace in Jesus.

Rev. Felix R. Hill, of Mobile, preached at the Carondelet Street church, in this city, on Sunday last at eleven, A. M. Bro. Hill's visit to New Orleans has been much appreciated by our people, and we hope he may find it convenient to come again. He informed us that his charge—St. Francis Street, Mobile—is being blessed with a good degree of prosperity. Congregations are large, accessions nearly every week, and financial matters well up and in advance.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States will meet at Knoxville, Tenn., in the First Presbyterian church, on the third Thursday (sixteenth day) of May, 1878, at eleven o'clock A. M. The opening sermon will be preached by the Rev. C. A. Stillman, D. D., moderator of the last Assembly.

Periodicals.

—The Southern Review for April, 1878, is equal to any of the previous numbers in variety and ability. We have waited, thus far in vain, for opportunity to read each article carefully. We have found time only to sample the rich staples of thought and information, and for the present must be content to give the titles of the articles. The conduct, editing, and much of the writing of the Review now devolves upon Mrs. Herrick. She is certainly one of the most gifted women of the day, and we owe her a large debt of gratitude for continuing the Southern Review. The articles are: 1. The Christian Canons. 2. Mrs. Abigail Adams. 3. Christian Liberty. 4. Edwards on the Will. 5. Charles Kingsley. 6. How Gettysburg was Lost. 7. The Creeds of Christendom. 8. Dr. Dabney and Dr. Bledsoe. 9. Notices of Books.

—Blackwood's Magazine for April published by the Leonard Scott Publishing Company, 41 Barclay Street, New York) contains an unusual amount of light reading. The serial, "Mine Is Thine," is continued, and another, called "John Caldigate," is commenced, and there is, besides, a short story or sketch, showing how a turn of the wheel of fashion revives an old style and makes it new again. Several pages are devoted to Martin's Translations from Virgil, and there is also a little poem by Austin Dobson, "To Ethel, who wishes she had lived in the days of hood and hoop, or while the arch was worn." There is a long and interesting review, with numerous quotations, of "The Moor and the Loch," by J. Inn Colquhoun, which describes salmon fishing, and shooting of all sorts of game, even seals and eagles. Part II of "The Queen in the East" is a discussion of events of the war, which were capitulated last month. The closing article discusses the probability of the meeting of the Congress.

THE COMPLETE PREACHER Vol. 2.—New York: The Religious Newspaper Agency 1878. The Complete Preacher is issued in monthly numbers, and this is the numbers from October, 1877, to March, 1878, bound in book form. The publication contains sermons by the most eminent preachers of the day and a work of value. The present volume contains thirty-two sermons, and makes a book of 335 octavo pages. Price, $1.50.

The Complete Preacher for April is: Why Christians Believe the Doctrine of Future Everlasting Punishment, by Henry J. Van Dyke, D. D.; The Judgment Day, by Carl Braun P. Eddon; The Misery of Man, by Adolph Monod D. D.; Aaron's Rod—Life's Review, A Test for Honest Self-Examination, by Theodore Christlieb, D. D.; The Falsehood—A Reply to Canon Farrar, by Justin D. Fulton, D. D.

Sunday Afternoon for May, has: Twinkle, by Edward Eggleston; Sacred Morals, by C. F. Ewing; Reminiscences of Washington Allston, by C. S. Henry; The Alexandrian Schools, by George A. Jackson; The Constitution of Boy Societies, by Howard Wrisley, and numerous other articles of merit. Sunday Afternoon is a monthly of great literary excellence. Published at Springfield, Mass. Price, $3 a year.

Scribner's Monthly for May is exceptionally fine number of this popular magazine. Among other excellent articles we note: Merry Days with Bow and Quiver, illustrated; Camps and Tramps About Cadiz, illustrated; Bird Architecture, illustrated; The New York Post-Office, Illustrated; Camping Out; The Grange; Concerning the Use of Flags at Geneva; Bohemian Nights.

St. Nicholas for May abounds in pictures, and fresh and entertaining articles. All the young folks, from the very youngest, will find something to please and instruct. Indian Children; The Peterkins Besieged Children; The Peterkins Besieged to Move; Where Mumby Made; The Story of May-Day; The King and the Hard Bread, are titles of some of the articles.

The periodicals reprinted by the Leonard Scott Publishing Company, 41 Barclay street, New York, are as follows: The London Quarterly, Edinburg, Westminster, and British Quarterly Reviews, and Blackwood's Magazine. Price, $4 a year for any one, or only $15 for all, and the postage is prepaid by the publishers.

The Sunday School Times' Scholars' Quarterly, second quarter, 1878, has been received. It contains the lessons, with notes and helps, of the International series for the second quarter, ending June 23. A valuable publication. Published by the Sunday School Times, Philadelphia.

Wide Awake for May, has: Sipping Corn; The Child Tollers of Boston Streets; Classics of Baby Land; The Story of English Literature; Poets' Homes; Galileo's Tower; Discoveries in the Moon, and many other fine articles, and pictures without stint.

—Lippincott's Magazine for May has: A Mountain Holiday, Illustrated; In Roumanian Land, Illustrated; A Predecessor of Tennyson; Old York, Illustrated; A Counter-Blast at the Married Folks; Hints to Designers; A Tragedy of Sedan, and other articles.

—Appleton's Journal for May has: Rapid Transit in New York, Illustrated; Unpublished Correspondence by Edgar A. Poe; Stanley's African Convert; French Pictures for the Paris Exhibition, and other articles.

At the session of the New York Conference, says the Pittsburg Christian Advocate, Bishop Andrews refused to ordain a woman as a preacher. It seems that the refusal has got him into trouble. An appeal has been taken from his decision as to the teachings of the church touching the question involved. We are glad that the Bishop has refused to ordain a woman to the ministry, because we believe his action right, and we are glad that the question is to be carried up to the next General Conference in a way that will command the attention of the body and compel a decision. It is time the matter was settled; one way or the other, so far as church order is to be regarded as of any value.

MARRIED.

DAVISON—McMILLAN.—At the residence of the bride's father, Malcom McMillan, by the Rev. Joseph C. Johnson, Mr. James M. Davison to Miss Sarah C. McMillan, all of Dallas, Ala.

HARVEY—GRIMER. April 2, 1878, at the residence of the bride's father, near Whistler, Ala., by the Rev. A. W. Langley, Mr. James Harvey and Miss Emma Grimer.

GLENN—FULLER.—April 18, 1878, at the residence of Dr. C. Hart, in Hurtsville, Russell county, Ala., by Rev. D. M. Banks, Mr. Clarence Glenn, of Eufaula, Ala., to Miss Lucy Culler, daughter of the late Rev. James D. Culler, D. D., of the Alabama Conference.

MITTENIGHT—WIRTH.—At the residence of the bride's father, near Whistler, Ala., January 22, 1878, by the Rev. W. S. Wade, Mr. C. C. Mittenight to Miss Josephine Wirth.

Publisher's Department.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Every week we receive letters from correspondents who do not state their postoffice. Some of these letters contain money, some are orders to change, and some to discontinue papers. Many send us a book that we think ought to be in our subscription-books, but it is a trouble to find the name, and sometimes valuable time is wasted in search through several thousand names, and many instances it is impossible to find either.

The names of the subscribers are ranked under their respective postoffices, and when these are given we have no difficulty in attending to the correspondence. We would earnestly request our friends to be as explicit as they can when writing to us.

Another request we would make, which we have had frequent occasion to make before. When we receive letters in the book agent and the publisher of the Advocate.

SINGER'S SEWING MACHINE.—This celebrated machine, known the world over, has kept pace with the rapid progress in improvements, and yet is now offered at prices so far below those which are forced upon a too confiding public. All persons needing a machine should, before purchasing, examine the various machines, and the work they can perform, and in this way you will pay no more perhaps for a machine, and secure something worthy your money. The Singer will stand the test, and be the machine of your choice four times out of five. Salesroom, 81 Canal street.

The address of the president of the New Orleans Pacific railroad will be found on this page. All who can do so should go forward and subscribe at once for the stock. The payments will be in monthly installments of ten per cent upon the instalments, and cannot therefore press the subscribers, as they will have ample time to prepare for each amount falling due. The success of this road and that of the commerce of this city rests the question of almost identical. Books are now open at the office of the company for the reception.

Those who may be suffering from affections of the kidneys should read the notice which appears in the Buffalo Lithia Springs Water. In cases of this kind it has proved beneficial for several diseases, and the proprietor Col. Goode, is a responsible man, and in some instances we have even seen him to deliver parties entirely. We would advise any of our readers interested to write to either Col. Goode, or to Mr. I. L. Lyons, of this city.

The air of perfection, cleanliness and home like comfort which is so apparent at the American House, it seems to us, is the chief feature of that well regulated establishment. To those who wish to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found in a first class house, having reduced the rates to $3 and $4 per day.

SOUTHERN BELLE.—The above paper is published by that excellent gentleman, D. P. Perry, 86½ St. Charles street. Every lady should subscribe for it. It is very apt to fashion, instruction and amusement. Sent, post paid, for fifty cents per annum. Mr. Mandeville, will and universally known to a great many of our readers, is the business manager.

WE REFER parties needing steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., to the advertisement of H. Dudley Coleman & Bro., No. 12 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well established reputation.

PARTIES contemplating going to Europe this summer had better see the agents Messrs. Stockmeyer & Co., 6 Union street. No safer ships cross the Atlantic than the North German Lloyd steamers.

A GOOD WATCH can be had for $10 from J. Bride & Co. Clinton Place and No. 11 Eighth street, New York. This gentleman is reliable. See advertisement.

MILLINERY.—F. R. Hardin's, 27 and 29 Chartres street, is one of the best places to get anything in the millinery line. Read carefully his advertisement.

HAIR STORE.—G. T. Schilling, 159 Canal street, is one of the most reliable dealers in his line in the South. Country orders promptly attended to.

NICOLL, THE TAILOR.—When you can get your clothing cut fashionably, with no greater expense than a third rate tailor, would charge you, you certainly would not be wise in being careless. Nicoll, the tailor, in the Crescent building, 118 Canal street, and also at 100 Canal street, will guarantee a perfect fit, latest style, in all garments you order from him. Mr. C. F. McCarthy, the manager of Mr. Nicoll's business in this city, thoroughly understands its every branch, and has the goods and their prices down to a hair. Pants made to order for $5, and suits for $20, in the latest style, are among his novelties. Call and see for yourselves at 100 and 118 Canal street.

MORE TESTIMONY TO THE BLANCHARD FOODS.—Dr. Egbert Garnsey, 18 West Twenty-Third street, says: "From the practical tests I have given the Blanchard Foods I think they will prove of great value to the invalid, and they should be thoroughly indorsed by the medical profession."

These foods are concentrated liquids with which to build up the whole physical system, especially the nervous system and the digestive organs.

Samuel F. Moore, corner of Canal and Royal streets, New Orleans, is agent for the Blanchard Foods.

PIANOS.—Mr. Burchardt, at 633 Magazine street, will pay particular attention in tuning and repairing pianos. He has had much experience in this work, and will guarantee satisfaction to those who patronize him. Parties in the Fourth District will find this establishment very convenient.

FOR BARGAINS in carriages write to the honorable gentleman, Henry Timken, 1059 St. Charles street, St. Louis, and get his catalogue of prices.

EXHILARATING.

The fragrance of Dr. Price's Floral Riches, the sweet odor of his Pet Rose, and his charming perfume, Alpha Hempel produces an exhilarating effect upon the mind. They are as fine and sweet as the fields in hay-making time. None have used the last to adore.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

NEW ENGLAND CABINET ORGANS.—These organs are more strongly recommended than any others, by dealers and artists generally, for tone, touch, elegance of finish and change for less money than first-class ones. They are popular to complete pieces of equal excellence in all the large and are rapidly taking front rank in the South and West. They are less expensive and more appropriate for use in small churches and rooms than the bulky pipe organs of late, said a lady the other day, "I seem to want in volume of tone; while for variety of musical combinations and real, genuine and exclusive, the New England cabinet organ has no equal. Two gold medals were awarded to them, after a long and impartial trial with their most eminent rivals. They are durable because perfectly made in all details, by trained experts in each department, and of the most carefully selected and thoroughly seasoned materials. The above achieved an unparalleled extent of sales within seven years from its origin, and even in England are pronounced "the best." There, as in all our States, commanding ready sales and permanent favor.

The new grand models, for 1878, are fast supplanting pianos, because they have so much in the way of tone colors, even "moan and vox elect," and are best adapted to their instrument, and thereby possessed of a peculiar, yet serene power, the human voice. They are quickly responsive to the touch and in clear definition more easily heard when to play high the piano. The remarkable low prices, convenience of their cases in any part of a room, and tasteful ornaments are very much in their favor. Several peculiar surpasses them in all-round attractive superiority. Clergymen, Sabbath school workers and others interested in securing cheap instruments for the use in the lecture room or parlor, can have them sent on trial to all parts of the country by the New England Cabinet Organ Company, 250 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

Parties will have a chance to examine and test the superior qualities of these organs at Philip Werlein's, 74 Canal street, New Orleans.

DR. HARTER'S ELIXIR OF WILD CHERRY, being entirely free from mineral, and depending entirely upon the native properties it contains for its curative powers, is the best remedy in the world for children suffering from whooping cough, as it is pleasant to the taste, and prompt in its action. Sold by druggists.

DR. HARTER'S LIVER PILLS have proved to be of the greatest benefit in relieving and curing obstinate and dangerous diseases where other remedies have failed. For sale by all druggists.

THE BEST people for the first time in New Orleans patronize Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder. It is the most reliable and full strength in the world, as the testimony of New Orleans chemists, to the Hon. Washington Hunt, ex-Governor of New York, shows. Use it and be convinced.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

To the Citizens of New Orleans.

WITH a view to secure to the people of this city the exclusive and permanent control and direction of the New Orleans Pacific Railway, so that it shall not pass into alien hands, or be controlled to the detriment of the trade and commerce of this place, or to the injury of our agricultural interests, or to prevent or delay the speedy development of Louisiana, by discouraging immigration, but used to strengthen and uphold the credit of the State and city by making their bonded debts secure and reliable beyond possibility of a failure, and to popularize the enterprise still more with the mass of our fellow-citizens by offering eligible inducements to them to subscribe for the stock of the company, the direction now addresses you. To float successfully the five millions of first mortgage bonds to be issued by the company for the construction and equipment of the road, the direction deem two proceedings precedent both wise and necessary: First, to fix the total amount of stock to be issued at one and a half millions of dollars until the line has been open for five years to traffic; and, second, to give by local subscriptions encouragement to purchasers of bonds to repose implicit faith in their absolute safety as an investment. The first has been done, and the second the people are now loyal to in favor and complete, as follows:

The stock of the company is now offered to subscribers on the following terms to wit: Five per cent. in cash of amount of subscription at time of subscribing, and the balance in notes payable monthly, as follows: Ten per cent. January 1, 1879; 10 per cent. February 1; 10 per cent. March 1; 10 per cent. April 1; 10 per cent. May 1; 10 per cent. June 1; 10 per cent. July 1; 10 per cent. August 1; 15 per cent. September 1, 1879.

This liberal plan, it is hoped, will meet the approval of every one, and on Monday, the twenty-second inst. the books of subscription will be opened at the office of the company.

It is proposed to issue stock untransferable on the books of the company for the amount subscribed by each person, which will entitle the holder to vote at all elections of the company, but not to claim transferable stock until his subscription has been paid in full in cash.

The president of the company can exercise his discretion in accepting or rejecting subscriptions.

By order of the Board of Directors,

E. H. WHITLOCK, President.

STONE IN THE BLADDER

RELIEVED BY THE

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER.

AFTER THE LIFE OF THE PATIENT WAS DESPAIRED OF BY HIS MEDICAL ADVISERS. THE STONE DISSOLVED IN THREE HOURS IN A GLASS OF THE LITHIA WATER.

CASE OF MR. C. WOLFF, of Point Couper, La.

POINT COUPEE, LA., April 3, 1878.

MR. THOMAS F. GOODE: By request I give you the following history of my case: Two years ago I began to suffer with severe pain in my kidneys, and to have perpetual attacks—about one a week—which caused the most excruciating agony, from which I was habitually relieved by the discharge of a stone from four to six grains in weight. There was never entire freedom from the pain in the kidneys. In eighteen months I discharged seven large stones, besides quantities of smaller stones and gravel. As the result of this protracted and great suffering my general health was reduced to so low a condition that my physicians advised me that I had nothing to hope for from medicine—that my case was hopeless—and I took to bed to die. In this state of things, about six months ago I was advised by Mr. I. L. Lyons, a druggist of New Orleans, to try the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, Spring No. 2. A week after I began to use it I had a slight attack, in which I passed two small stones. Placing one of these in a glass of the Water, in three hours I found it dissolved to a fine dust, which gave me confidence, and I persevered in its use. I have had no attack since. The pain in my kidneys has entirely disappeared. I have regained my usual weight, and my general health is perfectly restored. I very cheerfully acknowledge my indebtedness for my life and the comfort which I now enjoy to this great healing-giving Water. Respectfully, C. WOLFF.

This Water, in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, can be had at the Springs, and of I. L. LYONS, Wholesale Druggist, 42 and 44 Camp street, New Orleans, La.

MUSCOVY DUCKS.

Muscovy, as applied to this duck, is a misnomer. The proper name is Musk duck—sometimes called Sheldrake. It is a native of South America—not a Russian bird, as some suppose. It is a distinct species from all others we know of in this country, and the cross blood with any of our ducks is a mongrel—no longer fit for breeding, but very fine for the table.

The plumage of the Muck duck is generally a very dark combined black and green, with a portion of pure white. There are a few pure white; and I am now breeding mine to a lead color, which is more admired than any color in my flock.

They are entirely different from our other ducks in several respects: 1. They have wattles at the base of the bill, which become very prominent late in the spring, and for high color will vie with the face of any old toper. 2. They are fond of perching, a thing that I never saw any other duck do; these two characteristics, with their other oddities, make the Musk duck unmistakable.

Their flesh is far better than that of any domestic duck I ever ate, and some rank it next to that of the turkey. They are remarkably gentle in their nature, easily trained to fixed habits—returning to the same roost at night; excellent nurses, good layers and the best of sitters. They generally lay 18 eggs and set 35 days, and generally hatch all their eggs if undisturbed. I had a duck this summer that set on 24 eggs and hatched 23 ducks. They are no trouble among other poultry except to get some of their food—a quality we should commend. If they are kept tame (which should be done with all poultry) they are very docile and easily managed, but very cross and combative if kept wild.

THE BEST WAY TO MANAGE THEM.

Different kinds of poultry should be kept separate—to avoid trouble and perplexity, and to insure success. I have no running water near by, so I have to use a trough filled from my pump. I have a duck-yard adjoining my pump (80 feet long and 30 feet wide is large enough), the fence 5 feet high; cut two ditches lengthwise to keep it from flooding from heavy rains; have one ditch 7 feet from the fence, so as to have room to make a rough, cheap shed, of any material that will break the heavy rain; cut the other ditch near the other fence, and throw the dirt of both ditches along the center, so as to round it some.

When your ducks are hatched, make a pen with four broad, high (15 inches) boards on the center strip, and in this pen place a coop to shelter the ducks from sun and rain; and put the mother duck and young in the pen and keep them there until they are large enough to jump out, allowing the mother to go in and out at pleasure.

The trough for water should not be more than two inches deep; the water should be changed three times daily.

BEST FOOD.

The best food for ducks (or chickens either) is the whole wheat offal, mixed with one-quarter or one-fifth Indian corn meat. Feed and water them three times daily, often shifting the coops to keep them from being foul.

When the ducks are four weeks old they can be doubled on to one mother, who willingly adopts all you put in her pen. I then put from 30 to 60 to one duck, and she has them under care and leadership until they are old enough to eat or sell.

When you take the ducklings from the mother, confine her from sight or hearing of them for a week, and she probably has forgotten them; she soon lays and hatches another set. In this way you can raise three sets in a season—the last maturing from the first to the middle of December.

It is best to have your pens so the ducks can have sun and shade; an orchard is the best for the yard and pens.

Duck eggs will not hatch well under the common hen—the hen sets too close, consequently killing the young with too much warmth and want of air.—William J. Scofield, in American Farmer.

FACTS FOR THOSE WHO BURN KEROSENE.

Kerosene oil is one of the products derived from refining crude petroleum as it comes from the well.

The oil is always more or less dangerous, according to the amount of volatile gases left in it.

Every lamp filled with the fluid is liable to explode after burning several hours.

But no explosion will ever happen with the lamp full.

The danger comes from the constant generation of an invisible vapor in the confined space above the oil. This vapor, which is inflammable, is caused by the heat of the burner communicated to the oil; but it will not explode unless exposed to flame. The metal attachments on lamps often become forty degrees warmer than the oil, which is itself sometimes as high as two hundred degrees. Hence kerosene, to be entirely safe, should be near one hundred and fifty degrees proof.

But very little of the oil used is as good as this. Of sixty-three samples tested, only eight were found entirely safe. This will account for the terrible loss of human life from the almost universal use of kerosene oil. In the United States alone, last year, over one hundred deaths per week were reported from accidents by kerosene.

A simple test is to place a teaspoonful of the oil in a saucer and apply a lighted match; if the oil ignites it is unsafe—never use it. If it does not take fire it is not necessarily safe, because the temperature of the oil in the open air is not so great as that in a burning lamp.

The only reliable test is one made by slowly heating some oil in which a thermometer is placed, constantly noting the number of degrees, and applying a lighted match, not to the oil, but to the vapor, if any, just above the surface. If the oil flashes below one hundred and twenty degrees, reject it.

This flashing-point is the temperature at which the oil emits an inflammable vapor, and depends upon the quantity of naphtha or gasoline in the oil. This point should always be higher than the temperature that the oil ever reaches in a lamp; which is often one hundred degrees.

CAUTIONS.

1. Keep the metallic parts of lamps clean and the air passages open.

2. After a lamp has been burning for three or more hours at one time, never relight again till filled.

3. In extinguishing the light, turn the wick down quite low, and allow a few seconds to intervene before blowing out the flickering flame; or, better still, do not blow it out, but let it "flicker" out.

OLEOMARGARINE.

J. W. Lang recently read a paper before the Maine Dairymen's Association at South Paris, in which he gave the following history of "tallow butter":

Some years ago the French government commissioned Hippolyte Mege to experiment with the view of discovering a method of making an artificial butter for use of the navy and the marine, that could be furnished of better quality and at lower price than ordinary dairy butter. After extensive and patient investigation he brought forth the process of making, from caul tallow, what is now known as the "Oleomargarine butter." The manufacture of it soon began to spread. Five years ago it had made considerable progress in France and in Germany. It grew into general use upon European coast steamers, and was extensively used in the French navy. Three years ago the United States Dairy Company purchased the right to manufacture it in this country, and the first factory that went into operation was the Commercial Manufacturing Company of New York City, which has now a large factory in operation at Forty-Eighth street and North river. The factory in New York city turns out 80,000 pounds daily. A factory at Philadelphia makes 15,000 pounds daily. Competent judges estimate the present daily product at 250,000 pounds, and the starting of new factories, now in process of erection will swell it to 300,000 pounds, or 93,000,000 pounds per annum.

CHARCOAL FOR FOWLS.—The following experiment, given in the American Cultivator, will bring fresh to mind what many know as to the value of charcoal, not only when fattening turkeys, but other fowls. It will also be found a good corrective when used occasionally in winter, when the fowls are confined to their quarters. The experiment was as follows: Four turkeys were confined in a pen and fed on meal, boiled potatoes and oats. Four others of the same brood, were also at the same time confined in another pen, and fed daily on the same articles, but with a pint of very finely pulverized charcoal mixed with their food, mixed meal and boiled potatoes. They had also a plentiful supply of broken charcoal in their pen. The eight were killed on the same day, and there was a difference of a pound and a half each in favor of the fowls which had been supplied with charcoal, they being much the fattest, and the meat greatly superior in point of tenderness and flavor.

HOW TO COOK OATMEAL.—Oatmeal is seldom cooked sufficiently. For the coarser oatmeals (which are by far the best for mush) measure five or six parts water (preferably soft)—yes, measure it, and then you will have it alike every time, and not be at the trouble of watching it to see if it is of right consistency and adding more meal. As soon as the water boils pour in one part meal. These coarse meals do not require stirring up. Let it boil up smartly until it sets, or is evenly diffused through the water, then set it back where it will not boil on fast, and after half an hour's time it will be done enough. Serve with milk, cream or butter, and sugar to taste. Fine oatmeals require more water, and longer cooking.

A first rate top-dressing for lawns is rich, well-rotted mold, mixed with superphosphates, guano or bone-dust, salt and plaster. Barn-yard manure would be good if it were not for the large quantity of seeds of weeds it usually contains. Salt will not hurt grass, except in large quantities. The quantities of the manures per acre may be: Of the superphosphate guano or bone-dust, 300 pounds; of salt, 100 pounds; of plaster, about a bushel and a half. The lawn mowing should be left on the surface and not raked off, as usual.—Factory and Farm.

SAVOY BISCUITS.—Take twelve eggs, their weight in powdered sugar, and half their weight in fine flour; beat up the yolks with the sugar, adding a little grated lemon peel and orange flower water; whip the whites separately into a stiff froth, mix with the other, then stir in the flour and beat the whole together; butter a mold and put in your mixture; bake in a moderately warm oven. These biscuits are very light and delicate.

SUMMER SQUASH.—Take them before the seed begins to harden, wipe clean, remove the stem, and cut into pieces; boil until tender; pour off all the water you can; mash as fine as possible, then put into a bag and squeeze out the rest of the water. Season with salt, plenty of butter and pepper or with sweet cream.

CAUTION NOT NECESSARY.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder produces the finest bread, biscuits, cakes, etc., than any other. Its purity admits of any quantity being used with perfect safety, and without detriment to the articles prepared. Housekeepers who have once used it will use Dr. Price's cream Baking Powder.

We have the Best Imitation Gold Watch in the market. The metal is a composition of seven metals, so closely resembling gold that the best judges find it difficult to detect the difference, except by a chemical test, and it has the Airtight required to make it the best substitute for gold known. Genuine American Movement, Expansion Balance, Beautifully Engraved or Engine Turned Hunting Cases and equal in appearance to a GOLD WATCH THAT COSTS from $150 to $200. If you wish a watch for your own use, or to make money in any thing. Owing to our large sales we are enabled to reduce the price of them to $12 each with an elegant Chain attached. They are used on rail roads, steamers and in manufactories, and other places where accurate time is required, and give general satisfaction. We send them by mail or express, on receipt of $12, to any part of the country, or it will be sent C. O. D. when the customer desires and remits $3 on account. These elegant CHAINS weigh about Fifty Pennyweights, and the same pattern in pure gold would cost $50. We sell these Chains at $4 each. But we sell the Watch and Chain for $12, sent by mail in a registered package, postpaid, to any post office in the United States.
WE SELL THE WATCH WITHOUT THE CHAIN FOR $10.

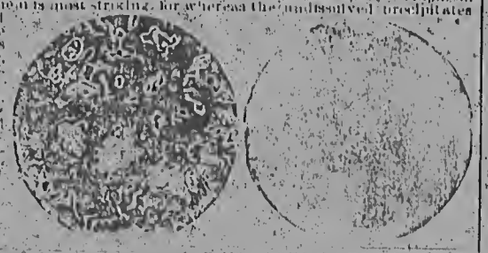
MILK OF MAGNESIA
IS THE best preparation known for all disturbed conditions of the stomach. It immediately and certainly cures DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, HEARTBURN, SOUR STOMACH and HEADACHES caused by acidity of the stomach. The pleasant taste and milk like softness of this preparation renders it very valuable for infants requiring no persuasion to induce them to take it. It positively prevents food souring on the stomach, and will not act as a cathartic when used as directed. It is also peculiarly adapted to females. The superiorness of this preparation and the ease of its solubility are made fully apparent in the following illustrations. They represent a tract equal part of a single drop magnified 250 diameters. The first is the calcined Magnesia as taken with water. The second the Milk of Magnesia as offered. The difference between them is most striking, for whereas the undissolved precipitates and particles in the drop of calcined Magnesia are exhibited with terrible distinctness, the Milk of Magnesia has all the appearance of a cloudy vapor, entirely free from the object under precipitates. In fact it does not exist.



Be sure to get MILK OF MAGNESIA. Ask your druggist for it, and take none else. It is entirely different from all other Preparations of Magnesia. Physicians and others not already acquainted with this preparation can obtain explanatory circular by addressing,

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
NEW ORLEANS, Tuesday, April 23, 1878.

The rates for money have not changed since our report of last week. State consols and premium bonds are lower—the former one point and the latter about one quarter. State consols will hardly depreciate much until after the July interest is paid, unless the decision of the Supreme Court in the Pacific railroad bond case should be adverse, in which event they may be forced down temporarily to a much lower figure than they are now held at.

Stocks generally are quiet, but prices are steady. We give below the prices of some of the principal stocks, as officially reported by the New Orleans Stock Exchange:

COTTON.

The Democrat reports the cotton market as follows:

In consequence of the undesirable qualities on sale the transactions to day were confined to 3 000 bales, not including 1,600 bales sold on Friday and Saturday. There was no marked change in prices, but the tone was slightly steadier.

The following is the official closing of the Cotton Exchange:

	To-Day.	Thursday.
Low Ordinary	7 0	7¾
Ordinary	7¾	7⅞
Good Ordinary	8⅛	8⅜
Low Middling	9⅛	9⅜
Middling	10	10¼
Good Middling	11	11
Middling Fair	—	—

Sales to-day, *4,600 bales. Market steady.

*Including 600 bales on Friday and Saturday.

Bishop Potter, of New York, in excusing himself from making a speech at the luncheon after a church dedication at Boston, the other day, told the story of the man who was always bragging of any speech he made, and accordingly once told a friend that he had just been down to Boston, where he made a speech. "Oh! did you?" said the friend. "I am glad to hear it. I always did hate those Bostonians."

It is a dangerous thing for a man to feed with evidences of truth—to gladiate with them—to make them mere matters of parrying. Where men purposely blind themselves so that they cannot discern what is true, they are responsible for not believing truths which they ignore, and which might by honest dealing have been made evident to them.

THE SHORE OF ETERNITY.

Alone! to land alone upon that shore,
With no one sight that we have seen before—
Things of a different hue,
And the sounds all new,
And fragrances so sweet the soul may faint,
Alone! Oh, that first hour of being a saint!

Alone! to land alone upon that shore!
Knowing so well we can return no more,
No voice or face of friend,
None with us to attend
Our disembarking on that awful strand,
But to arrive alone in such a land!

Alone! The God we love is on that shore;
Love not enough, yet whom we love far more,
And whom we've loved all through,
And with a life more true
Than other loves—yet now shall love him more;
True love of him begins upon that shore!

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., April 23.—The Daily Sun and Press announces that McLin, secretary of State under Sears, and S. G. Dennis, the Little Giant of Alachua county, have made confessions in writing of frauds in '76 by which Florida was carried for Hayes. Dennis covers fully all the details of the Archer precinct frauds, which played so important a part before the returning boards. He says 214 names were put on the registers of Archer after the voting.

McLin's confession is said to cover all transactions before the State canvassing boards. These confessions are in the hands of the present secretary of State, Bloxham, and have been forwarded to Washington. After McLin made the confession, eleven indictments against him for fraud in Alachua and Levy counties were not prossed. McLin, it is said, was rewarded, but how is not known. The Daily Sun and Press to-morrow morning, will close an editorial as follows:

"These gents have unbosomed themselves, and their written statements have gone to Washington. The Archer fraud is fully developed, and the little crookedness in Baker is laid bare, and also the secrets of the State canvassing board at Tallahassee."

MEMPHIS, April 23.—At nine o'clock last night a terrific rain and thunderstorm set in, which continued throughout the night. Between that hour and 6 45 this morning 2.85 inches of rain fell.

Bayou Gayoso overflowed and swept away the bridge at Second street, which recently cost the city $5,000. It is feared the planting interests have suffered severely from the unprecedented rains of the past week, as the bottom lands are covered with rain-water.

The damage to fencing from overflow of creeks and bayous is very great.

GALVESTON, April 23.—The News corpus Christi special says: All ranches in Duval and La Salle counties have been broken up by Indian and Mexican raiders. Among the persons killed during the past week are Fred. Moore, son of Col. Moore, clerk of the Court of Appeals, Angus Menley, John Jordan, a Scotchman named Steele, and two children. Many ranches have not yet been heard from.

SAN ANTONIO, April 21.—Reports from the Rio Grande indicate that about twenty persons were killed by the recent Indian raiders, and one hundred and fifty horses run off. The number of killed is no doubt exaggerated; nine are known to have been killed on the northwest border, between Fort Concho and Stockton. A rain and snow-storm last night did much damage.

ATLANTA, April 24.—A special to the Constitution states: A cyclone passed over the section of country four miles from Rome, Ga., clearing everything as it went. As far as heard eight persons were injured several horses and mules were killed. Trees three feet in diameter were twisted over and swept away. Nine dwellings were blown down. The path of the cyclone was three hundred yards wide, passing from southwest to northeast.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—It is now generally conceded that the recent developments of the Florida frauds are prompted by Bob. Butler, Sandler & Co. Information of what was going on was communicated over the south-pgo to Mr. Tilden, who sent down an agent to this city to inquire into the matter. I have reliable information that it is no part of the programme of Messrs. Butler and Sandler to turn out Hayes for the purpose of putting Mr. Tilden in the presidency. Their programme is for the two houses of Congress to refuse to recognize either Hayes as President or Wheeler as Vice President, and to have Mr. Ferry, the President of the Senate pro tempore, succeed to the vacancy which would thereby be occasioned in the executive office. They are full of the idea of turning Hayes out, and want the Democrats to help them to swap one Republican for another.

GALVESTON, April 20.—A News special reports another mail-carrier killed by Indians between Forts Davis and Stockton yesterday. This is the sixth person killed in that vicinity during the past ten days. A train from Fort Davis, which arrived at Fort Stockton to-day, was attacked by Indians near Horella Springs yesterday. The mourlains are reported full of Indians.

A News special from Marshall says the postoffice at that place was visited by a party of masked robbers last night, the postmaster compelled to open the safe, and $2 00 in money and stamps were carried off.

CINCINNATI, April 20.—Rev. D. H. Morgan, of St. John's Episcopal Church, last night formally announced his withdrawal from fellowship in that church on account of its Romish tendencies, and his intention to unite with the Reformed Episcopal Church.

NEW YORK, April 20.—Cables report that two of the large cotton mills in Lancashire have resumed operations at the rates demanded by the strikers. Cotton is firmer in consequence.

FOREIGN.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 23.—The Journal de St. Petersburg to-day publishes an article in which, while expressing a belief that the Congress will soon assemble, says this alone will not constitute a guarantee of peace.

The Journal considers it necessary that a frank and exhaustive exchange of views between the cabinets should precede the Congress. It concludes as follows: "If the British cabinet really desires peace, and at the same time expects greater advantage for England by intimidating Russia, it is playing a dangerous game, which will lead not to peace, but to war."

LONDON, April 23.—The Daily Telegraph has advices from Cracow that the Russian railroads are encumbered by the transport of troops to the north to check a threatened disturbance.

The garrisons of Moscow and Kieff have been reinforced.

A Belgrade dispatch to the Times states that military preparations have been completed and all militia have been called out.

MANCHESTER, April 23.—It is calculated there are now between eighty and ninety thousand operatives on a strike.

LONDON, April 26.—The passage in the Pope's encyclical issue, which was announced yesterday, regarding the power of the church, is as follows: The hopes of Italy and the world rest on the beneficent influence of the holy see, and on the intimate union of all the faithful with the Roman pontiff. It therefore stands to reason that we should with all diligence do all in our power to preserve intact the dignity of the Roman cathedra, in order, before all things, to guard the rights and liberty of the holy see. We shall never cease to insist that our authority be respected, that our ministry and our power be left fully free and independent, and that the position be restored to us in which divine wisdom long ago placed us.—It is no vain desire of dominion which moves us to demand the re-establishment of our civil power. We demand it because our duties and our solemn oaths exact it, and because it is not only necessary to conserve fully the liberty of the spiritual power, but also because it is evident that when it is a question of the temporal dominion of the apostolic see it involves the well-being and safety of the whole human family."

The Pope distinctly indorses the policy and acts of his predecessor, condemns civil marriages, and deplores the rejection of the authority of the church, proclaiming that to be the cause of all existing evils, but in language of calmness and dignity, devoid throughout of any tone of offense or violence. The encyclical contains no attack whatever upon the civil government of Italy, nor any mention, direct or indirect, of the house of Savoy.

LONDON, April 27.—The Times, in a leading editorial article, comments on the dispatch from the St. Petersburg correspondent, which stated that are issue out of the present complications consists in undoing much of Russia's work, and giving the rest a European instead of a specifically Russian character. That another consists in what is called the principle of equivalents, or compensation to the powers for Russia's acquisitions, and that the latter solution is the one Russia desires, while Great Britain seems resolved to insist on the former.

The article says: It is the partition of Turkey that Russia desires now. It was the partition she desired at the time of the Crimean war. Against such a policy we contended then and are contending now. Referring to the Italian proposition that England state her views, the Times says: It would be futile, and inconsistent with our position to propose any scheme until the main principle of European control has been conceded, without which no scheme could acquire validity or sanction.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times says: I observe that the foreign press devote much attention to the street disorders which recently occurred in St. Petersburg and Moscow. Some organs seem to regard them as symptoms of a dangerous revolutionary movement. In reality they have no such significance. There is not the slightest danger of the public tranquillity being seriously disturbed. Any danger of that kind will first appear, if it appears at all, when prices rise and taxation is increased.

PARIS, April 27.—One hundred thousand foreigners have already reached here to witness the ceremony of the opening of the Exhibition on Wednesday next, May 1. Prices of living have advanced, but not to the extent feared.

Adversity exasperates fools, dejects cowards, draws out the faculties of the wise, and industrious, puts the modest to the necessity of trying their skill, awes the opulent, and makes the idle industrious.

Wholesome advice to the trump printer—go to the slug, thou sluggard.

A German on Future Punishment.

BY PROF. J. P. LACROIX.

Dr. A. Snizkerger, the professor of dogmatics in the Frankfort Seminary of German Methodism, is one of the best educated theologians of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He took the degree of Ph. D. some years ago at Heidelberg, and has made the study of Christian doctrine his life-work. He is the author of a very thorough work on Methodist dogmatics, the last part of which has just arrived from the press. His views of future punishment will, I doubt not, be welcome to the readers of the Western. I subjoin a brief abstract:

"The second death is an outward state of the lost which corresponds to their inner character. That this state is not that of annihilation is clear from the plain teaching of the Bible; for example, from Revelation xiv, 10, 11, where it is said that they who have worshiped the beast shall be tormented in the presence of the angels forever and ever. And Christ himself bases his most solemn warnings and exhortations to holiness on the fact that it is better that one member be lost than that the whole body be cast into hell.—Matthew v, 30. And he teaches his disciples that they should fear him who has power, after death, to cast into hell.—Luke xii, 5. If by damnation were meant annihilation, what could be the appropriateness of the additional statement: 'Where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched?'

"As to the expressions 'fire' 'outer darkness,' 'wailing and gnashing of teeth,' whether they be taken literally or figuratively, in either case they designate a condition of inconceivable terribleness.

"But now, the question has been raised: Is damnation strictly eternal, or is it simply to endure through great cycles of time, and then terminate in a so-called restitution of all things? The orthodox church has from the first held that it is strictly eternal, and has denied the eventual restitution. In the face of this, some have held that damnation will be eternal solely for those who refuse to be lettered by the pains of hell; but that those who do repent under this punishment will be transferred to the abodes of the blessed. This view is based upon the false notion that the pains of hell are adapted to produce conversion. They are not so adapted. And even the chastisements of this life are of salutary effect solely because they are accompanied by the salutary workings of divine grace. The condition of damnation is a state of absolute punishment; grace is, therefore excluded. The lost are no longer under the love, but under the wrath, of God.

"Others, holding the same views of the remedial effects of the pains of hell, have insisted that all of the lost will finally be restored to the love of God; also even satan himself. The beginnings of this so-called restorationism are found in the Alexandrian theologians, Clement and Origen. Both of these teachers assume that there will be operative, alongside of the pains of hell, a continued redemptive influence of Christ. But they regard this view as of esoteric character, and not profitable for the multitude. Of the school of Antioch, two great teachers, Diodorus of Tarsus, and Theodore of Mopsuestia, held restorationist views. But the general voice of the church, in the Council of Constantinople (553) placed this opinion under the ban. The great Augustine and Gregory the Great opposed it with the greatest earnestness. Among the schoolmen, Erigena was the most eminent restorationist.

"The chief objection to eternal punishment is that it is not reconcilable with the wisdom and love of God. To this we reply: The love of God has, in Christ, in the gospel, and in the guidance of Providence, done all that, in the nature of the case, was possible to recover the sinner. If, now, the sinner rejects and despises all this, how, then, can he escape but just doom? If divine wisdom and love have not been able to save him, what other influence or power can reach him? The assumption that the pains of future punishment will produce salvatory effects, which the invitations and warnings of grace and Providence in this life failed to produce, is contrary to all psychological probability. Hence any hope based upon such a notion is devoid of scientific countenance.

"Absolute restorationism has this fatal objection: that it implicitly denies the reality of moral freedom. It holds that it is possible for God to bring such influences to bear on the human soul as will infallibly subdue the soul's rebelliousness. Thus it is not the ethical, but the physical power of God, not the solicitations of love, but the irresistible influence of Omnipotence, which saves the soul. To such a view the great Nitzsch urges the conclusive objection that it degrades the free kingdom of grace into a mere process of mechanical or physical nature.

"The objection that the existence of an eternal hell admits a degrading dualism into the moral universe is sufficiently replied to by observing that the dualism is only apparent. Hell is in chains, and is reduced to complete impotency.

"But will not the bliss of the saved be disturbed by the knowledge that some of their kindred and brethren are in the pains of hell? We reply: Whosoever is lost, is lost because he would not be saved. His damnation will be self-chosen. It will be just. And the saved will see facts as they are. As God will approve of the loss of the lost, so will the saved. This objection is but mere sentimentality.

"The restorationist application of paying 'the utmost farthing' (Matthew v, 26) is fallacious, as it contradicts the Protestant doctrine of justification by faith. So also of the passage in regard to the non forgiveness of the sin against the Holy Ghost, whether in this world or in the 'world to come'—Matthew xii, 31, 32. This passage is made emphatic by being thrown into a proverbial form. It does not concede that some sins are forgiven in the world to come; but it emphatically implies just the contrary.

"On the entire subject of the doom of the wicked it is much safer to trust to the plain, unambiguous drift of the Bible as a whole than to be guided by mere sentiment. To the honest, devout Christian heart it ought to be sufficient to be assured that the Judge of the whole earth will do right."—Western Christian Advocate.

Laws of Mississippi to Suppress Vice.

MR. EDITOR: That you and your readers may know what Mississippi has done through her laws to suppress vice, I will briefly refer to some of them:

She has a law which punishes any one who is drunk, or any one who profanely swears, in a public place, in the presence of three or more persons, and it is made the duty of justices of the peace to arrest and inflict the punishment upon offenders.

Any officer of the State who is convicted of one single act of drunkenness from intoxicating liquor shall be removed from office, which is not uncommon to see practically enforced.

Gaming of any kind (except horse-racing and shooting matches) is punishable. Public officers who lend public money to bet are liable to be broken of their offices. Keeping for sale or selling lottery tickets, and all gift enterprises, are indictable. Betting with a minor is a felony. Owners of houses, and even vacant lots, who permit gaming therein or thereon are indictable if they do not inform against the offender.

The laws for retailing liquors are very stringent. The keeper of a licensed liquor-shop is indictable if he permits any riotous or disorderly conduct, or sells to a drunken man, or sells to a minor, or permits drunkenness in his house; and the owner of the house who permits retailing in it without license is liable to indictment if he does not inform against the offender.

The carrying of deadly weapons is also an offense, and punishable before a justice of the peace or circuit court. Selling deadly weapons or cartridges to drunken men or minors—parents, teachers or guardians allowing children, pupils or wards to carry deadly weapons—are contrary to law and punishable.

The laws against vagrancy are also stringent. All gamblers, all able-bodied persons who have no visible means of support, all prostitutes, and all keepers of houses of prostitution, and all beggars able to work, are by law held to be vagrants, and punishable as such.

The Sunday laws are equally stringent. No shop or store of any description is allowed to be kept open on Sunday, nor any sales of goods, wares or merchandise allowed on Sunday (unless of charity or necessity), nor hunting with guns, or hunting with dogs, nor fishing in any way is allowed on Sunday. Willfully disturbing any congregation assembled for public religious worship, at any time or place, is also indictable. All contracts made on Sunday are void, and cannot be enforced. Speaking or writing words deemed insults, and calculated to lead to a breach of the peace, is indictable.

These are a few of the many laws of Mississippi having for their object the suppression of vice, the advancement of morals and the preservation of good order.

Take it all in all, the criminal code of Mississippi is not surpassed by any in the Union.

A SUBSCRIBER.

True grace is a growing principle. The Christian grows in discernment. A child may play with a serpent, but the man gets as far from it as he can. A child may take poison, but the man will not suffer a speck of poison near him. He grows in humility; the blade shoots up boldly, and the young ear keeps erect with confidence; but the full corn in the ear inclines itself toward the earth, not because it is feeble, but because it is matured. He grows in strength; the new wine ferments and frets; but the old wine acquires a body and a firmness.—Cecil.

Oregon Correspondence.

ALBANY, ORE., April 1, 1878.

DEAR BRO. PARKER: The face of your excellent paper looked so familiar after the absence of several months. Now we hope it may abide under our roof as a fixture. I think I read even the advertisements. Just think of a man in Oregon reading the professional cards of physicians and lawyers and dry goods merchants in a New Orleans paper! "Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." I am provoked to scribble a little, and thus sharpen and be sharpened by the "countenance" of many "friends." This process is mutual—contact agreeable, profitable.

The district work has been hard, and calculated to operate against the spirit of "ease and self-indulgence." Our winter has been mild as to temperature; but rainy, O so rainy! My mode of conveyance is mainly horseback. Our rains have been hard and protracted—not so much "Oregon mist." I have nine appointments, all of which I have filled; am now over half through with the third round. Besides, I have had some extra meetings in destitute places. I think my health has improved. I have preached six times in the last four days, traveled say fifty or sixty miles, and made about eight pastoral visits. So you see I am not idle, whether I am succeeding in building up Immanuel's kingdom or not. "Better to wear out than to rust out." We have some good meetings—occasionally receive a member into the church. We need the Holy Ghost, and fire sent down from heaven. Our ministrations without this baptism will prove profitless. We need to be clothed upon with "power from on high."

There are many incidents that might interest a portion of your readers; but I do not wish to exhibit egotism; and as one is generally the hero of his own incidents, the chief actor in his own exploits, please bear with me in the use of the personal.

I had most peculiar feelings on last Saturday as I stood on the streets of Lafayette, Yam Hill county. I had gone down to hold my quarterly meeting for that work—had preached that morning. Circuit court was being held, and a county convention. Many people in town. I was in conversation with Bro. Stahl, the pastor. Said he: "That is Dr. Watts." I scanned him. He stands about six feet six, weighs two hundred and sixty pounds—full beard, gray—and is about fifty-five years of age. That is Watts, late Republican elector of Oregon, whose eligibility was disputed—whose vote elected the present chief magistrate of this mighty nation. In a few minutes my friend said: "That is Cronin."—Democratic elector, who claimed to have been elected, whose vote did not elect a chief magistrate. Stout and compactly built, dressed in a business suit, standing about five feet seven; very curly hair and heavy mustache; about forty years old. Quite a contrast in the make up of the two men. There they were approaching each other on the sidewalk. I thought: Are they friendly? Within ten steps of where I stood they met, and spent quite a time in friendly, and, I suppose, pleasant conversation. The whole question which had so recently agitated and convulsed our country passed before my mind. There were the two men over whose heads and consciences our great and mighty nation came near going to wreck and atoms. Such a throe and shock from the Pacific to the Atlantic, and from the Gulf of Mexico to the Northern lakes, our nation never experienced. A whole nation of forty millions resting on them! I shuddered. On Sunday I had the pleasure and responsibility of preaching to these two men, who composed a part of a good congregation. Found them attentive and respectful hearers. Watts is a doctor and preacher. His theology is peculiar. He is known as what is called a "Jollyite;" believes, I am told, that God has physical body and parts, and that Jesus Christ and satan are brothers. I know not Mr. Cronin's religious belief. He is said to be a talented lawyer, leading his profession; lives in Portland, our great metropolis; was at Lafayette professionally, defending a man indicted for grand larceny to the amount of $7,000 gold, against whom the evidence was very strong; and yet such was the strength of the defense by Mr. Cronin that after the jury had been out about long enough to arrange their form they brought in a verdict of "not guilty." I trust the two gentlemen were benefited by the service; they were certainly very respectful and patient hearers. The theme was the "Immortality of the soul," and of course a "judgment to come" formed a staple of it. Watts took notes.

On Sabbath night our congregation was large—house full. O so hot! almost suffocating! The presiding elder flagged, and I suppose his auditors were not displeased when the minister raised his hands and invoked the divine blessing on the effort. Poor, yet making many rich.

Preaching the gospel is a wonderful employment; but "who is sufficient for these things?" Thank God, "our sufficiency is of God." And yet I have so many misgivings as to my ability! The meagerness of results extorts from me: "O my leanness! my leanness!" John Wesley's test of a ministerial call was searching: "Have they fruits? Are souls converted?" If these tests were still required, could some of us who have been drawing the gospel bow for twenty-five years answer in the affirmative? O thou Searcher of hearts! may not thy chosen ones be fruitless! Truly, if our meetness for the "Inheritance of the saints in light" is in the measure of results apparent, then may we not be disappointed as to its largeness and richness!

Presiding eldering is an active life. Traveling, preaching, conversation, pastoral visiting, etc., fills up the time. No time left for study. Much meditation and prayer ought to be a large ingredient in his life. O the power and efficacy of prayer! In this is the "secret of the Lord," even "with them that fear him." Adieu.

In hope of immortal life, affectionately in Christ,

T. B. WHITE.

Vicksburg.

MR. EDITOR: We are having refreshings from God's presence upon this people. There is a general awakening in the community. A series of meetings, lately conducted, have been most fruitful in spiritual results. The Methodist and Presbyterian congregations united in an invitation to Maj. Hardie, of Selma, Ala., and other lay workers, to spend a few days here in evangelistic labor. Their coming was of the Lord, and blessed by his presence. There have been large accessions to the Presbyterian Church. In the Methodist Church we have received thirty new members during the past few weeks, and a total of forty since Conference. The outlook for our church in this city is most gratifying. We all feel the inspiration of a new hope, and have girded ourselves with fresh courage.

OBITUARY.—Died, in Lindnex the Prayer Meeting, aged three years and one month. The health of this little Meeting was poor most of last year, during which its life was often despaired of. A few anxious friends kept it alive, and at times it would so revive as to encourage them. Discouragement at last prevailed, and the Meeting died from neglect. Not a Christian was present when it died. Over forty were living within a quarter of a mile, and not one was there. Had two been there its life might have been saved, for 'where two or three are gathered together,' etc. Two thirds of the forty might have been there had they been so disposed; but they were not, and the Prayer Meeting died."

That was wise and prudent counsel given by a shrewd and cautious old Scotch deacon to his minister when the latter announced that he was going to deliver a series of lectures on the Revelation of St. John the Divine: "There's one objection," said the elder, "to ye taking a quiet trot through the seven churches, but for any sake drive canny among the seals and strumpets."

Iron pipe and railway cars are the curious combination of manufactures advertised by a Philadelphia firm. Iron wire and glue curled hair are made by another company, and several houses sell "rags and marble," the rags coming from Italy as stuffing between the marble blocks.

THE DAILY DRILL.

BY MARGARET J. PRESTON.

Oh! this battle field vast, of the world!
This tramp'ling and rush of the foe,
This race that forever is hurled,
This ceaseless recoil of the blow!

This stringent command of the King,
Proclaimed through his ornaments wide,
That none of his soldiers shall cling
Their proper one moment aside!

For those who are summoned to stand
In breach—as that quickest the breath,
How can they, with weapons in hand,
Do other than dare to the death?

But we whose compiet beyond,
A hot from the sparks of the fray,
Il Unloosen that absolute hand,
The impotent drill of the day—

What need that we brace for the fight?
What call that we courage be steeled?
No leader would urge it to might,
Reserves so unused to the field.

How know we? Some morning may bring,
As yet we scan of the battle beguil
An order direct from the King:
"Ah, rise! There is work to be done!"

Then, what if our helmets be lost
Aside where the rubbish is thrust
And what if equipments be lost,
And hands be blunted with rust

Nay, better to be efficc complete
(Gradely, with soldierly skill,
Though only in limbs or in steel
The daily demands of the drill.

And then if the King should inspect
His lines as he suddenly might,
How calm we all stand, how erect,
Assured that our weapons are bright!

The Presiding Eldership

MR EDITOR: The presiding elder question is now agitating the mind o the church, as appears from the va rious articles published in the Advocates. In the NEW ORLEANS Advocate of April 4 Bro. F. M. Featherston suggests the plan of enlarging the circuits to two, three or four times their present size, and putting two, three or four preachers on the same circuit. While his plan, in some of its features, might work well, in others it would not. Instance: the support of the pastor. Bro. Featherston's plan would work then as now. Now small circuits and one preacher; then two, three or four times the present sized circuits, with two, three or four preachers on the same work. Where would be the advantage in the way of support of the pastor? The present plan certainly is the better one—that is, in the way of support of the pastor—for the following reason: Now, with small circuits, the pastor can, for he has to devote some time to teaching, practicing dentistry, mechanics, or plowing, etc., to supplement his support. I do not say, nor do I believe, this is as it should be. No, no. The church should support her pastors. Let them be free in mind, body devote themselves in mind and body exclusively to the work of the ministry. This is not so now; therefore the preacher must of necessity supplement his support in some way. But under Bro. Featherston's plan of enlargement the preacher's mind and body would be taxed to its utmost tension, with no better support than now. Therefore this plan is objectionable. We hope the General Conference will not so ordain. Bro. Featherston seems to think that the object of this presiding elder question discussion in the church is that some way or means be ordained that the presiding elder may be better supported. We do not so understand it. Now, if we understand the question, it is this: That some rule be ordained by the General Conference that the presiding elder may be supported without such weight or tuction upon the church and pastor as under the present plan. Now the presiding elder calls the district stewards together for the purpose of assessing or fixing his salary. Say one, two or three district stewards attend. They and himself assess or fix his salary, say at eleven, twelve or thirteen, and in some instances fifteen hundred dollars. (We speak advisedly.) Then this amount is apportioned out among the different circuits and stations on the district. Say there are eleven or twelve circuits and stations in the district, some of which pay the pastor $600; some $700, some $250. Now each of these circuits is assessed $100 for the presiding elder. Now, Mr Editor, here is a burden. The disparity is too great. The pastor's actual needs are more than the presiding elder's; yet the presiding elder is to have $1 200 or $1,500, while the pastor may have, if he can get it, $150. The church and pastorate are feeling this friction. Why this disparity? We can account for it only upon Bro. J. D. N.'s notion of the episcobishops, as he calls the presiding elders; that they are first-rate preachers, and the pastors are, of course, second or third-rate preachers; therefore their wants or needs must be few, very few. These second or third rate preachers should, on account of having bestowed upon them by the Almighty but one or two talents, expect but very little support from the church, notwithstanding they are faithful pastors, and show themselves approved of God. Bro. J. D. N.'s reasoning is fallacious. The office of presiding elder is very important to the itinerancy; therefore we do not desire its abolition. But we do think the General Conference should ordain some rule by which there will not be such inequality between the presiding elder and the preacher in charge in the way of support. This is the relief the church desires. The presiding elder certainly should be properly supported, but not in a way to oppress and burden the church and her pastors. Let us see—here is a case in point: The presiding elder comes to B circuit say four times, at most, in the Conference year. He preaches, at most eight times—very often not more than five or six sermons. He receives $75 or $100. He receives it all in actual cash. The pastor on B circuit receives $200 or $225 in tax in kind—that is, a large portion thereof—often at a very exorbitant price. The same amount received by the presiding elder in cash would purchase one third more than the same amount reported by the preacher in charge. (I am posted here.) When you reduce this to a real cash basis, the pastor has for his faithful year's toil and earnest devotion to the church and her interests, received about $150 in cash. The presiding elder received $50 or $75 in cash from B circuit. The presiding elder received $1 000 during the year; the pastor $150. OLD PASTOR.

The Presiding Elder's Support

MR EDITOR: I have to-day re read an article in your issues of the twenty eighth ultimo, on the above subject, and confess that I have some fear that the coming session of our General Conference may make some changes in this relation. I do not fear it in the direction indicated by your correspondent; but I have noticed a disposition on the part of some of our thinking men to compromise with those who advocate the abolition of this superintendency by enlarging the presiding elders' districts to such an extent that our quarterly visitations would cease to be one of the fixed facts of our church. And I further notice that it is the financial question that is making or tending to make this compromise. I have been a steward from the time that the down was soft upon my lip until now, when the summer breezes of nearly half a century have fanned my cheeks, and my opinion is that our people are much better educated as Methodists than in the past; and, notwithstanding the meager amounts now collected, they are paying far more in proportion to what they have and make than at any time in my history; and I feel hopeful that as our country rises, as I believe it will, out of its present depression, the demands of the gospel will be met with still greater energy; and as the men whom we have tried to train in the church council, in the Sunday school, etc., take our places, Methodism, methodized, will put on fresh robes of triumph, and prove forward in the mission of leading the example of the world into a simpler, manlier understanding of (what shall I call it?) the philosophy of God's plan of salvation.

Yesterday I spent in business circles, and was astonished to see and hear with what earnestness business men would bolt in their efforts to get gain, to discuss theology; and, oh! how gloomy I felt last night and this morning when I contemplated the fearful extent of the infidelity that is being made bold, stripped of its blush, under the leadership of such divines! as Beecher, and such blackguards as Ingersoll. I doubt if you, among whom the lines are so much more distinctly drawn between the church and the world than they are in the country, and village can imagine how widespread infidelity is becoming. But to-day, in the house of God, when I thought on these things, and remembered how the dispersion of the disciples had resulted in the gospel being spread through the intelligent world; how the corruptions of Romanism had produced Luther and the Reformation; how the formalism had called out the great brain and heart of John Wesley, and produced a greater reformation in the intelligent comprehension of God and his revealed will than even the Reformation; how that materialism, and so-called science, thrusting their pretended discoveries into the face of Christianity, and rejoicing in the overthrow of the Bible, had been followed into the laboratory, the conservatory, and even into the bowels of the earth, by men whose intelligence, consecrated, and made strong and penetrating by the Holy Ghost, had brought out the deeper and till then hidden truths of a true science, and shown the church how it is that the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork"—all those instances, and all the other triumphs of truth, snatched from the clouds and fumes of error at the moment that it felt itself triumphant, showed me afresh that God can and will take care of his own, and will bring forth their righteousness as the noonday sun; yea, and will make the wrath of man to praise him. Thus reasoning, my faith led me out into the near future, when great brains and consecrated souls, seeing the necessity of new phases of argument, of new and simpler conceptions of the philosophy of religion, shall enter afresh into the arcana of God's revealed will, and bring from it fresh truths, that shall again awaken the world to a higher life, deeper piety, and grander triumph. But to effect all this God requires instruments, and works through instrumentalities. He has endowed his church with intelligence, and holds its members responsible for the carrying out of his plans according to their talents.

Of presiding eldership result in our people being reached by a higher class of intelligence, in its aggregate, than the aggregate membership of any church in Christendom; and there is to my mind no other means by which all the wants of any district can be as clearly brought before the appointing power as is brought into the Bishop's Cabinet by this means. Dispense with the presiding elder and you destroy the itinerancy, or at least its efficiency, and we become congregational. No, no; do not make any changes here. Let the bishops', presiding elder's and preacher in charge's assessment be consolidated by the stewards, and if there is inefficiency in appointments, superintendency or pastorate, that results in a financial failure, let these interested and responsible parties suffer alike till the error is corrected by those who alone can do it.

Christian Sympathy.

MR EDITOR: The word sympathy literally means fellow-feeling. But there may be fellow-feeling, or unity of feeling, in wicked and sinful pursuits. All men require sympathy in order to continuance in a given pursuit. While sinners crave and demand sympathy from their associates in wrong-doing, so, in a higher and nobler sense, the Christian needs, and ought to receive, sympathy from his fellows in the work and labor of love. The absence of this grace has discouraged and destroyed many a tender and timid child of God. No Christian can rise above its necessity. Even the great apostle of the Gentiles craved it. If Paul, the mighty man of God, was comforted and encouraged by sympathy, in and through Christ, what shall be said of the humble and faithful cross-bearers since his day? In the history of "our fathers" in the gospel ministry many important facts are brought to light upon this point. There were special homes and places in which these servants of God found unspeakable delight, because of the cordial welcome and hearty sympathy. The weary itinerant could endure long and dark rides to reach one of these "preacher homes" for rest and refreshment.

But to those seasons and places where no expression of encouragement of sympathy was given the preacher found hard and difficult work to do. The duty was simply religious. However, in several instances the servant "endured the cross, despising the shame," and triumphed in the end. Signal victories crowned his almost superhuman efforts. Monuments of fame were erected to his undying faith and devotion. Then came abundance of sympathy.

In the history of the young and gifted William Capers a fact crops out which shows how that a "brawny heart" and rough words come well-nigh crushing his young, tender preacher heart. All was meant for good. But words often convey meanings different from the mind of the speaker. This trying hour of his life transpired upon the first circuit of his ministry, with "that most remarkable man, J. J." "That most remarkable man" said to young Capers, upon his first visit to his house: "Well, have they sent you to us for our preacher?" The young preacher modestly but distinctly answered: "Yes, sir." J. J continued: "What! you! and the egg shell not dropped off of you yet! Lord, have mercy upon us! And who have they sent in charge?" "No one, sir, but myself." "What! you! by yourself? You in charge of the circuit? Why, what is to become of the circuit? The Bishop had just as well have sent nobody. What can you do in charge of the circuit?" etc. While J. J. was so rough and severe upon the young preacher, it aroused the feeling of his wife in the young man's behalf, and through her motherly sympathy Capers was greatly cheered and encouraged. Ultimately he became a Bishop, and one of the most renowned pulpit orators of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. His fame as a preacher is in America and Great Britain.

Most frequently genuine sympathy comes through God's "little ones." During the District Conference love-feast, held in Troy, Ala., in 1866 Rev. J. B. Cottrell, in telling his experience, referred to his labors, trials, successes and encouragement, and said: "A short time since I preached at Magnolia church, near Union Springs. I did my level best. When through, and the congregation dismissed, I sat in the pulpit pondering the effort and result. As far as I could see and understand, I could not estimate any particular good resulting from my very laborious effort. All the whites had left the house; and then from the back apartment of the building came an old, thin, poor-looking negro man—Lewis Delbridge—who grasped my hand cordially and said: "Master, God bless you, sir! God bless you, sir! That sermon make my soul right fat!" Bro. Cottrell said: "Then was my soul encouraged." He further said: "Most of my encouragement comes from God's little people!"

Something for Local Preachers.

MR. EDITOR, Conference action and newspaper articles frequently appear as to what shall be done to make the local ministry of the church more efficient, such as the recommendation of a course of study, report of labors, etc; but I do not remember to have read an article as to what shall be done for them; therefore I propose one. As to the requirements, they are well enough, and should be attended to, for their own good and for the good of the church; but local preachers are most of them, poor men, and must work hard to support themselves and provide for the entertainment of their friends. The institutions of the church claim a liberal share at their hands, and must be supported by them, such as schools, colleges, etc. The education of their own children should be closely attended to if they are what they should be as ministers for Christ in preaching to others. With all this they usually pay as much tax, toll, commissions, or whatever other expenses may be incidental to the public. They must have books in order to comply with the requirements of the church; but how can they get them? Simply by paying for them out of their own hard earnings, in common with all other expenses. With all this train of outlay, I have seen and heard nothing as to what should be done for them. Kind reciprocation or appreciative acts are like angels' visits—but few and far between.

A difficulty sometimes occurs in another direction. The local preacher, by industry and frugality, has a good living, and does much for the church; and while he rejoices at the success that seems to crown his efforts, he turns to see an evil cropping out in another direction. Hardshellism or an anti-missionary notion is produced in the minds of many, and there seems to be a rejoicing that they have a man who is willing to plant a vineyard, but does not expect to "eat the fruit of the vineyard," or to "feed the flock but drink no milk of the flock;" and would be glad to hear him say: "I have sown unto you spiritual things, but I want none of your carnal things."

Local preachers are said to be a power in the church. This I admit; but not the power they were in the early days of Methodism, when the pioneer preachers carried their spelling books and grammars, as well as the Bible, with them. In those days they were more upon an equality with the itinerant preachers in point of efficiency than at the present day.

Such is the change of times and such is the progress of civilization that legislation of some kind seems to be necessary to keep the local ministry upon a par with the wants of the church; but if requirements are made of them, something should be done for them. They are, indeed, embassadors for Christ; and "Muzzle not the ox that treadeth out the corn" should apply to them in some degree, as well as to others, in order that the missionary spirit be cultivated in the church as it should be.

Reciprocation or appreciative acts of some kind seem to be necessary in every department in life. In order to love others more we must do more for others; in order to love Christ and his church more we must do more for him; in order to love our children more we must do more for them; in order to love the church more the local preachers must do more for the church, and in order that the church appreciate and love the local preachers more she must do more for her local preachers.

Thus I close this suggestive article for the press, hoping the thoughts therein contained may accomplish that good for Christ and his church for which they are alone intended.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy on proper names. Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of general interest, such as will help the living. Details of funeral services, and such phrases as 'mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verse, either original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, any such communication fail to appear, let a duplicate be sent instead of a complaint.

MRS. DUCK T. POOL, wife of Dr. Daniel R. Pool, was born in Green county, Ala., July 23, 1839, and died at her home in Jones county, Miss., April 5, 1878. Sister Pool was the daughter of Dr. Anthony S. and Mary S. Arrington, and was married to Dr. Daniel R. Pool, near the town of Quitman, Clark county, Miss., November 22, 1848, where they lived up to November 19, 1868, when they removed to Jones county, Miss.

Sister Pool made a profession of religion in 1847, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Quitman. After her removal to Jones county she connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Ellisville, in which she lived up to the day of her death. She was the mother of nine children—four sons and five daughters—all of whom she leaves, together with her bereaved husband, to mourn her loss. She was a woman of many sorrows and afflictions, but often spoke of the comfort she derived in "trusting in the Lord." "Blessed are they that trust in the Lord, and whose hope is in the Lord." She had the abiding witness in her own breast that it was good to "trust in the Lord;" and when earthly friends could administer to her wants no longer, Jesus, in whom she trusted, was her friend to go with her through the valley and the shadow of death; therefore she said: "I fear not death."

She was an affectionate companion and a loving mother, and was always found ready to visit and wait on the sick, and administer comfort and consolation, as far as she was able. She was a friend to the poor and needy, and will be greatly missed by her many friends.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

JOHN C. WILLIAMS, P. C.

THE following resolutions on the death of HENRY CONNOR were passed by the first Quarterly Conference for Bladon Springs circuit, Mobile district, held at Isney, Ala., March 23, 1878:

Resolved, That in the death of our recording steward, Bro. Henry Connor, which sad event occurred at his home in Bladon Springs, Ala., March 13, 1878, this circuit has lost one of its most efficient and liberal stewards, who was devoted to the interests of the church, of which he was a most exemplary and consistent member.

Resolved, That while we cherish the most affectionate remembrance of our deceased brother, and deplore his great loss to the church and country, we will bow in submission to the will of our Father in heaven, who "doeth all things well," that it is with the greatest satisfaction that we have heard of his peaceful state of mind during his last sickness, and the assurance he had of a blessed home in heaven.

Resolved, That we tender our sympathies and prayers to the bereaved family, whose home has been desolated and whose hearts have been crushed by the death of a dear, loving husband, and a most tender, provident father. May the gracious protection of our heavenly Father be thrown around them, and may he bring them all at last to a blessed reunion in heaven.

WILLIAM GILES, Sec.

MISS LAVINIA J. MYERS, daughter of D. P. and Mary A. Myers, was born February 12, 1857, and died January 7, 1878.

Lavinia was always one of these good, and the girls and all who knew her could but love her for her gentle spirit and friendly manners. Especially was she kind, loving and obedient to her parents, and kind and affectionate toward her brothers and sisters.

It was my privilege to become acquainted with her about one year before her death. The most of that time she was a constant seeker of religion. Every opportunity that she had to offer herself at the altar for prayer she improved, both at home and abroad. She was an earnest penitent at the Seashore camp meeting last year; but it was not until her protracted illness that she found the pearl of great price. The writer did not witness her last struggle with the grim monster, for many of her friends did, who say they never saw a clearer manifestation of the power of our holy religion to win that victory promised to the finally faithful. Her death was triumphant. She shouted the praises of the Redeemer as she stood on the very margin of the Jordan of death, and exhorted her weeping relatives and friends to meet her in heaven, where weeping and separation are no more. May God comfort and bless them, and help them to meet her there.

W. S. WADE.

MRS. REBECCA PHILEN, whose maiden name was Shefield, was born in Wilcox county, Ala., April 18, 1833; was married to Mr. W. S. Philen January 28, 1850; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1851, and departed this life October 19, 1877.

Sister Philen was one of the many unfortunate women who lost their husbands in the Confederate war, and was left with four children to battle with the hardships of life—one of whom, a fond little daughter, was very suddenly taken from her and preceded her to the grave. The other three, two sons and one daughter, are left behind to struggle with the cares of life.

Sister Philen was troubled for years with a cancer on the head, which caused her much suffering in the last days of her life, all of which she bore with Christian patience and fortitude until, with complete composure, she resigned all into the hands of him who doeth all things well, to pass through the throes of death, and to enter into the home of the blessed. A good woman has passed away; but may her motherly advice and her godly admonitions be ever remembered, until her surviving children, brothers, relatives and friends be gathered with her in the home of the good.

GEORGE WATSON.

MRS. MARTHA SHARBROUGH, the subject of this notice, was born in South Carolina, in the month of March, 1801, and died in Hinds county, Miss., April 3, 1878, aged seventy-seven years and twenty-four days.

She was converted at eight years of age. From that day until she died we are told she lived an earnest, zealous Christian life, always deriving great comfort from the consideration that her whole life has been spent in the service of her Lord and Master, whom she loved with uncompromising devotion all the days of her earthly pilgrimage.

For fifteen months before her departure she was a great sufferer, and often expressed her willingness, yea, her anxiety, to depart and be with Christ.

Before she was taken so very ill her Bible was her constant companion; and even after her mind was so impaired that she could not read, time and again she called to her bedside her son, Bro. Manche Sharbrough, [illegible] of the Mississippi Conference, and had him to read to her of Jesus and his precious promises. She lived a Christian life, [illegible] brightens death, and was borne on angel wings to the home of the blessed.

Her pastor,

CLARENCE A. POWELL.

DIED, at the residence of F. Mathews, in West Carroll parish, La., May 9, at 6.10 o'clock A. M., of pneumonia, MARY MATHEWS, wife of F. T. Mathews. The subject of this notice was born March 18, [illegible] near Darlington, Cambridgeshire, England. Her maiden name was Earl. Her parents moved to the United States, and landed in New Orleans in January, 1831, where they lived several years. While there her mother died of yellow fever, leaving her, at the tender age of thirteen years, to take care of her two small brothers. After some time the father went to Yazoo City, where they lived with R. B. Powel until the year [illegible] and there she was married. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South several years before the war and has always endeavored to live right since. She was the mother of six children—five girls and one boy. One sweet little babe preceded her to the better land in 1876. She never had an enemy. All who knew her loved her. "Thou one, thou art gone from me on earth, I shall meet thee on high, where there will be no more parting.

HER HUSBAND.

DEPARTED this life, on the [illegible] bank of the Ouachita river, about two miles below Columbia, La., on the [illegible] first of March, 1878, HELOISE ROSA, daughter of J. Wesley and Mary L. Mayfield, at the age of nine years.

Although "Rena" was so young, she was regularly received by the writer into the Methodist Episcopal Church South nearly three years ago, and seemed quite conscious up to the time of her death. She lived in a destitute region of country, deprived of many church privileges, but was always glad to worship with the people of God, and improved each opportunity afforded her.

This is the third child that has been taken from this household (only one left) [illegible] May the parents bow submissive to Him who doeth all things well.

J. F. WYLY.

JOHN TANNATT died at his residence in Jackson, La., March 15, 1878. He was a native of England, and has lived in this country thirty-five years. He was a member of the Methodist Church many years. He suffered excruciatingly while sick, but made no complaint and showed no impatience. He thought he would never recover from his sickness, and often would not speak much about dying, as he was endeavoring to put all his trust in the Savior. Bro. Tannatt was a good man and a useful member of society. He leaves a widow and several children, who will miss his kind counsel and comfortable provision for their wants.

C. [illegible]

DEMARIS PITMAN (nee Burt) was born in Robinson county, N. C., [illegible] 1803; was married to E. L. Pitman in 1831; and died at their residence in Simpson county, Miss., April 12, 1878.

She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church when she was married, and remained a faithful member to the last. She leaves a husband, several children and brothers, besides many other relatives and a host of friends to mourn her death. May they follow her to heaven and her prints mark the path that "house and made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

C. McPHERSON.

LITTLE EUGENE BROWN, infant son of J. M. and Sarah Brown, was born in Hill county, Texas, on the fifteenth of December, 1877, and died April 9, 1878. He in his wisdom has taken this bright, beautiful babe to that heaven above, where it will never know sin nor sorrow. Oh! may he bless and comfort its bereaved father and most heart-broken mother.

MARY WELLS.

LOSS AND GAIN.—Dr. Payson, in his dying hours, said he could have saved himself much trouble in life if he had only believed that the Saviour's presence was enough to fill him with joy if all worldly comforts were taken away. He found it so in his sickness, but could not quite believe it in health. A poor, simple man, who, in none of Payson's imagination or fancy, once said, in a similar spirit with his dying words: "I have lost all my property; I have lost all my relations; my last son is dead; I have lost my hearing and my eyesight; I am all alone, old and poor, but it makes no difference; Christ never grows old; Christ never dies; and Christ never will forsake me."—Light of Evening Time.

A STRANGE SINGER.

Joy's the skyest bird
Mortal ever heard;
Listen, rapt and silent, when he sings:
Do not seek to see,
Lest the vision be
But a flutter of departing wings.

Straight down out of heaven
Drops the fiery leaven,
Healing, burning, rising in his breast;
Never, never long
Canst thou bear the song,
All too high for labor or for rest.

Hope can sit and sing
With a folded wing,
Long contented in a narrow cage;
Patience on the nest,
Hour by hour will rest,
Brooding tender things to thermitage.

Singers true and sweet,
Mockers bright and fleet,
Close about thy door they flit and call;
One that will not stay
Draws thy heart away;
Listen! listen! It is more than all.

Wonderful Walker.

This worthy man was the son of a poor statesman, and was the youngest of twelve. At the age of seventeen he became a village schoolmaster, and a little later both minister and schoolmaster. Before and after school hours he labored at manual occupation, rising between three and four in the summer, and work ing in the fields with the scythe or sickle. He plowed, he planted, tended sheep, or clipped and salved, all for hire; wrote his own sermons, and did his duty at chapel twice on Sundays. In all these labors he excelled. In winter-time he occupied himself in reading, writing his own sermons, spinning, and making his own clothes and those of his family, knitting and mending his own stockings, and making his own shoes, the leather of which was of his own tanning. In his walks he never neglected to gather and bring home the herbs from the hedges. He was also a physician and lawyer of his parishioners; drew up their wills, conveyances, bonds, etc., wrote all their letters, settled their accounts, and often went to market with sheep and wool for the farmers.

He married a respectable maidservant, who brought him forty pounds; and shortly afterward he became curate of Seathwaite, where he lived and officiated for sixty-seven years. We are told that when his family wanted cloth, he often took his spinning-wheel into the schoolroom, where he also kept a cradle—of course of his own making. Not infrequently the wheel, the cradle, the scholars, all claiming his attention at the same moment, taxed the ingenuity of this wonderful man to keep them all going. To all these gifts was added a knowledge of fossils and plants, and a "habit" of observing stars and winds. In summer he also collected various insects, and by his entertaining descriptions of them amused and instructed his children.

Such a long and extremely useful—nay, he we might say heroic life—which extended over nearly the whole of the last century (he having been born in 1709)—this remarkable Dalesman died on the twenty-fifth of December, 1802, in the ninety-third year of his age. In the course of his life he had, besides bringing up and setting in life a family of twelve children, amassed the sum of two thousand pounds, the result of marvelous industry and self-denial.

The chapel where this celebrated man officiated upon his sacred duties was the smallest in the Dales, the late Wordsworth, Mr. Walker's biographer, describing it as scarcely better than many of the fragments of rock lying near it. Most of these small chapelries were presided over by "readers"—men who generally carried on the trades of clogger, tailor, or cotton-print maker in order to eke out their small stipend. The livings were not worth more than two or three pounds a year, and the ministers were dependent on the voluntary contributions of their parishioners. Their stipends, besides the small money payment mentioned above, consisted of "clothes yearly and whitemeat." The former meant one suit of clothes, two pairs of shoes, one pair of clogs; and the latter, two or three weeks' victuals at each house, according to the ability of the inhabitants, which was settled among themselves; so that the minister could "go his course" as regularly as the sun, and complete it annually. Few houses having more than one or two knives, he was obliged to carry his own knife or "whittle," and marched from house to house, as master of the flock had the arm-chair at the table-head. Sometimes scenes were often the result of this droll arrangement, and many good stories are current with reference to it. A story is told in connection with a minister who had preached two sermons, which he preached in turn. The walls of the chapel were at that time unplastered, and the sermons were usually placed in a hole in the wall behind the pulpit. On one Sunday, before the service began, a wag jostled the sermons so far back into the hole that they could not be got out with the hand. When the time for the sermon had arrived the reader tried in vain to get them out. He then turned to the congregation and said that he could touch them with his forefinger, but couldn't get his thumb in to grasp them. "Nevertheless," said he, "I will give you a chapter of Job instead, and that is worth both of them put together!"—New York Observer.

A Dishonest Age.

Among the characteristics of the times we are living in there is one which is much mentioned by the many public speakers, who seem to think that when they speak to or to be benefited chiefly by being assured how much wiser and better and more progressive they are than any of their fathers were, who suppose the age is to be instructed by being flattered, and that the country needs to be glorified rather than purified, which was certainly not the way of the old prophets.

The characteristic I mean is dishonesty. I am not discrediting any of the actual modern merits—intelligence, enterprise, inventions, philanthropy. Grant all these, in large degree. Nevertheless, they do not bring with them honesty in proportion. Falsehood and fraud flourish along with them, in spite of them, and in some cases by the help of them. From the vulgar sediment of society, up to its highest summits, there spreads a tremendous force of selfish materialism—call it sharpness or call it crime—by which men reach after and snatch and call the known for use or for show or for hoarding, what is not theirs. It is stolen property, only stolen ingeniously and indirectly, and in such ways that the old forms of law, which undertook to punish outright robbery, fail to overtake them. Not in a few rare spots, but in every spot where two or three hundred people live together, a part of these people consume or lay up or waste what belongs to other people, and what they have managed to get by some species of deception. What natural production of the earth is there, meant for the sustenance or comfort of man, that is not adulterated by some degrading mixture, or shortened in the measure? Do not the devices of Anglo-Saxon traffic repeat, in faithful exactness, the devices of the Jew, denounced by the prophet, making the ephah of the seller small, and the shekel of the buyer large; selling the refuse for wheat, and falsifying the balance by deceit? What line of mechanical work is there where the base material, or the shabby construction, or the overcharge, does not disgrace the handicraft? What branch of commerce without its delusive labels, its broken promises, its advertising fictions, its postponed payments, its calculated bankruptcies, its hollow contracts? Men who will not smutch their respectability to be challenged, look one another in the face, and with a mutual jugglery of knavish tricks conspire to grow rich by villainy. The brilliant audacities of the great commercial centers have their lane and creeping copies, hardly less cruel or calamitous, back in the little rural villages, in sight of grave yards where sleep the ashes of clean-handed ancestors, living and dying, in their day, in the faith of a God who has righteousness and judgment for the habitation of his throne. Outside the church are financial Ahabs and social Jezebels. Inside are Ananias and Sapphira, tacitly agreeing together to lie to the Holy Ghost, pretending to give to God, for missions or Bible societies, a hush-money fragment of what they have seized from their fellow-men. Too often there is no Peter with the courage to search out their sin: "Tell me whether ye sold the land for so much." The grand difficulty with our popular piety is that it is still trying by and by to find a way, in this nineteenth century of the gospel, of serving two gods together.—Bishop Huntington.

Family Worship and Government.

The following is from the Memoir of William Brock, D. D., recently published in London. It is taken from the chapter of "Recollections" by one of his sons.

At home it was usually quite a short service; a few verses of Scripture were read, and the prayer succeeded, in language simple enough for the youngest to follow, and full of reference to every-day life, its lessons, its business and its amusements. We were often mentioned by name; and so were friends at a distance, or in circumstances of trouble. The little service was thus always real and telling; but there were times when the earnestness of it became intense. Our father never prayed at us; but if one was going on a given day to boarding school, or another about to enter on commercial life, or if he himself was to be absent from us awhile, the prayer for us was one to be remembered. At such times he would also invite us into his study for separate conversation and prayer. Every Saturday evening, for many years, those of us who were at home had a private appointment with him, the boys one week, and the girls the next. It was rather a formidable step to walk up at nine o'clock to that study door, and to enter for that special purpose. The sermon, newly finished, or perhaps still laboring through its third sentences, would be lying on the desk; his own heart, after the two long days of preparation, was full of great subjects; and then he would leave the sermon and open his heart to us. If during the week there had been any slip in speech, any misdemeanor in conduct, this was the time to hear of it. If there lay upon the mind any burden relating to our future, it was now disclosed. Then came appeals to our confidence, and expressions of anxiety for our salvation, whose delicacy was only surpassed by their importunity. It seems a wonder to us now that we could have remained so long mute before those appeals, and been so slowly melted by those anxieties. The prayer that followed was the outpouring of a father's heart on the subjects that had just occupied his thoughts. When we rose from our knees, kissed him, and left the room, I fear it was sometimes with a simple sense of relief that the ordeal was over; but sometimes heart and eyes were full. And as, one after another, we all came humbly to adopt his Savior as our Savior, and his God as our God, we traced to those Saturday evenings the master influences which had kept us from evil, and guided us by degrees to our Redeemer. The custom did not cease with our conversion. There his sons first learned to open their lips in prayer, kneeling at his side. There we talked over our perplexities, and began at length to take his burdens upon us; and to enter into his utmost thoughts. There, on particular occasions, as when he was about to leave home for his long American journey, he sought our prayers, and we, in turn, were enabled to commend him to that divine protection which through so many years he had never failed to invoke on our behalf.

The Minimum Christian.

The minimum Christian! And who is he? The Christian who is going to be saved at the cheapest rate possible; the Christian who intends to get all the world he can, and not meet the worldling's doom; the Christian who aims to have as little religion as he may, without lacking it altogether.

The minimum Christian goes to church in the morning, and in the afternoon also, unless it rains, or is too warm, or too cold, or he is too sleepy, or has a headache from eating too much dinner. He listens most respectfully to the preacher, and joins in the prayer and praise. He applies the truth very judiciously—sometimes to himself, often to his neighbors.

The minimum Christian is very friendly to all good works. He wishes them well; but it is not in his power to do much for them. The Sabbath school he looks upon as an admirable institution, especially for the neglected and the ignorant. It is not convenient, however, for him to take a class. His business engagements are so pressing during the week that he needs Sunday as a day of rest; nor does he think himself qualified to act as a teacher. There are so many persons better prepared for this important duty that he must beg to be excused. He is very friendly to home and foreign missions and colportage, and gives his mite. He thinks there are too many appeals, but he gives, if not enough to save his reputation, pretty near it; at all events, he aims to.

The minimum Christian is not clear on a number of points. The opera and dancing, the theater and card-playing, and large, fashionable parties, give him much trouble. He cannot see the harm in this or that of the other popular amusement. There is nothing in the Bible against it. He does not see but that a man may be a Christian and dance, or go to the opera. He knows several excellent persons who do. Why should not he? He stands so close to the dividing line between the people of God and the world that it is hard to say on which side of it he is actually to be found.

Ah, my brother, are you making this attempt? Beware, lest you find at last that, in trying to get into heaven with a little religion, you miss it altogether; lest, without gaining the whole world, you lose your own soul.—Presbyterian at Work.

"THOUGH THE EARTH BE REMOVED."—The traveler Humboldt gives an interesting account of the first earthquake he witnessed. It was at Cumana, in South America. The first shock came after a strange stillness. It caused no earthquake in his mind, for it overthrew in a moment all his lifelong notions about the safety of the earth. He could no longer trust the soil which yet to that day had felt so firm under his feet. He had only one thought—universal, boundless destruction. Even the crocodiles ran from the river Orinoco, howling, into the woods, and the dogs and pigs were powerless with fear. The city seemed "the hearth of destruction." The horses could not shelter, for they were falling in ruins. He turned to the trees, but they were overthrown. His next thought was to run to the mountains, but they were reeling like drunken men. He then looked toward the sea, but it had fled; and the ships, which a few minutes before were in deep water, were rocking on the bare sand. He tells us that, being then at his wit's end, he looked up, and observed that heaven alone was perfectly calm and unshaken. Many strange things are yet to come upon the world—earthquakes, overturnings, upheavings. But amid them all, as the book tells us, the Christian shall look up to the heavenly one, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever," and to his heavenly home, which cannot be moved.—From "Bible Echoes."

A KIND WORD.—If you are a child of God, will you not adopt and practice these resolutions?

1. I will daily observe secret and family prayer.

2. I will daily and prayerfully read the word of God.

3. I will daily seek the salvation of sinners.

4. I will obey God's ordinances as taught in his word.

5. I will cheerfully give of my means to the cause of God.

6. I will do what I can in the Sabbath-school.

7. If I am offended with a brother I will follow the rule in Matthew xviii, 15-17.

8. I will never visit any place of amusement or social pleasure on which I cannot first ask God's blessing.

9. I will never use intoxicating drink as a beverage.

10. I will daily seek to grow in grace.

If you are not a child of God, will you not adopt and practice the following resolutions?

1. I will no longer neglect my soul's salvation.

2. I will regularly attend divine worship.

3. I will pray for myself, and not be ashamed of religion.

4. I will ask the prayers of others, and seek with all my heart.

5. I will forsake every known sin, and cast myself on the mercy of Christ, my Savior.

A correspondent writes: "I saw in a paper last month an advertisement of a new map of Turkey and Greece. I would like to ask if it was not preposterous to get out a new map of Turkey and Greece so early in the month, when nobody could tell till after Thanksgiving where Turkey and Grease would be located?"

—The Christians of Edinburg and Glasgow raised $116,000 for the relief of sufferers by the famine in India.

—The only Moravian church in Scotland, that in the ancient Burgh of Ayr, celebrates its centennial this year.

—There is a rumor that Queen Victoria's youngest son, Prince Leopold, contemplates entering the ministry of the Church of England, if his health permits.

—The Presbytery of Andalusia, of the Spanish Christian Church, has decided to establish a college for the training of ministers, teachers and colporteurs, at Cordova. It will be conducted by a British minister.

—The whole number of foreign missionaries sent out from Christendom is credibly stated at 2,110. Of these, Great Britain furnishes 1,060; Germany, 592; the United States of America, 460; and the smaller States of Christendom, 88.

—The Cumberland Presbyterian Church has in Texas 4 synods, 17 presbyteries, 205 ordained ministers, about 150 licentiates and candidates for the ministry, and about 20,000 church members.

—The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has, since its organization, spent $938,000, or an average of $23,000 annually, among the Indians of this country. In 1861 it had 2,100 communicants; now it has 1,763; but many adhered to the Southern Church when the disruption occurred.

—A Wesleyan missionary in South Africa writes of a remarkable revival in Natal and Pondoland. The whole country is aroused. At one great meeting "some were softened, some confounded, some mocked, some were frightened, declaring that the evangelists carry with them the waters of witchery to make them bow down."

—The Church Missionary Society has commissioned the Rev. T. S. Grace to reorganize the Taupoo mission in New Zealand. This was formerly a flourishing mission, with twelve churches and a native Christian industrial colony at the central station; but war occurred and destroyed the mission. Mr. Grace intends to begin by rebuilding the mission-house, a school-house, and some cottages for native preachers.

—Bishop Bedell, of Ohio, in reply to an inquiry as to what is the rule of the Protestant Episcopal Church relative to attendance by communicants at public balls and theaters, quotes extensively from the early bishops and pastoral letters of the church, and sums up the case thus: "Gaming, horse-racing, public balls, and theaters have been declared by the church to be objectionable, and are forbidden to communicants."

—The Catholic question came up in the German Parliament recently, and quite excited speeches were made. Herr Reichensperger complained that all the young priests and teachers were forced to emigrate, as they could not bring themselves to ask for confirmation of their appointments by the secular authorities. The result of it all was that the Roman Catholics became more devoted to the church than ever. If Dr. Falk were to go on in this wise the Roman Catholics would have to petition his majesty to remove this cruel minister. Dr. Petri, an Old Catholic member, replied that the Ultramontanes having openly avowed their determination to place the schools under the exclusive direction of the church, it was absolutely necessary for the government to act as it did. When Prussian bishops spoke of constitutional government as illegal; when French bishops had gone the length of aiding in the late fraudulent elections, precaution was indispensable. Prince Bismarck and Dr. Falk would prove a match for the Pope. Dr. Falk said no modification could be made in the May laws until the Ultramontanes should change their course.—Independent.

A LITTLE LESSON.

BY HARRIET M'EWEN KIMBALL.

Look up, dear child, to the happy stars
That glitter in heavenly spaces;
No discord their lovely order mars,
None covet their neighbor's places;
Yet some flash out on the wide, dark night,
And some just shimmer with faint, sweet light.

It matters little so each but shine
With all the strength it can gather;
The gleam of the least is a gift divine,
Not mighty, but precious rather;
No star its fellow stars envies or shames;
And the dear Lord calleth them all by their names.

From Our Little Friends.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, MISS., Feb. 5, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: My papa takes a great many papers—the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for one. I like it the best of all. I scarcely read the others. I have never written to the ADVOCATE before, and I hope this letter will be interesting enough to print. We have a very large Sabbath-school, and it is still increasing. Our superintendent, Mr. R. P. Willing, is a very good man, and we all love him very much. Our pastor, Mr. Forsyth, has not been with us long enough for us to tell much about him, but I think every one will respect and love him. I loved him from the first time I heard him preach, for he preached a splendid sermon. I will close by asking your little readers a few questions: Where was Elijah when he requested that he might die, and who came to him while there? Who was slain hanging in an oak, and by whom? I remain, as ever, your little friend,

LORENA BARNES.

COLLEGE, LA., Jan. 21, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: Since you were kind enough to publish my first letter, I have concluded to write again. I hope that this one will not find that dreadful waste-basket. Mamma don't take the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, but I very often get it from some of my friends, and I am very much interested in the young folks' column. Aaron died on the top of Mount Hor—Numbers xx, 28. Paul caused Felix to tremble—Acts xxiv, 25. Who was Jamin? Where did Job live? I remain, as ever,

Your little friend,

IDA J. ETHRIDGE.

CENTERVILLE, Jan. 20, 18—.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nine years old. We have no Sunday school. Grandma takes the ADVOCATE. I like to read the children's corner. I want to ask the little folks a question: What king reigned at eight years of age?

Your little friend,

Hunting Wild Horses.

The wild horse can run away from a man; but this protection fails at times. The horse-catchers—or "vaqueros," as they are called—are famous riders, and to see them capture a wild mustang is better than to go to a circus. The vaquero puts a Spanish saddle on a tame horse, and starts out to see what he can find. In front, on the high pommel of the saddle, he hangs in large coils a leather rope, about a hundred feet long, and called a lasso. It is made of strips of raw hide, braided by hand into a smooth, hard and very pretty rope. One end is secured to the saddle, and the other end has a slip-knot making a sliding noose.

The vaquero has not long to wait, for there are droves of horses cantering or walking about over the swells and hollows of the prairie, with here and there a smaller group looking on, or watching a battle between two horses who wish to be captains of their bands or companies. Presently there is a strange sound of trampling hoofs, like the sound of a squadron of cavalry, except that it has a grand, wild rush and swing such as no cavalry ever had, and a cloud of dark heads rises over a swell of the land. The leader sees the vaquero, and he halts suddenly, and the others pull up in a confused crowd, and toss their heads, and sniff the air, as if they scented danger near. The leader does not like the looks of things, and turns and slowly canters away, followed by all the rest, tramping in confusion through the yellow grass and wild barley. Presently they become frightened, and away they fly in a dusty throng.

The vaquero's horse seems to think his chance has come, and he picks up his ears, and is eager for the glorious fun of a dash after the mustangs. Away they go pell-mell, in a panic, and the tame horse galloping swiftly after them. Down they tumble—some knocked over in the confusion, snorting and flinging great flecks of foam from their dilated nostrils, trampling over each other in mad haste, each for himself, and the American horse sweeping after them. Now the vaquero stands up in his saddle, and the lasso swings round and round in a circle over his head. Swish! it sings through the air with a whirling sound, and opens out in great rings, while the loop spreads wider and wider, and at last drops plump over the head of a mustang. The vaquero's horse pulls up with a sudden halt, and sinks back on his haunches, and braces his fore feet out in front. Ah! How the dust flies! The mustang is fast, held by the slip-knot, and he rears up and plunges in wild and frantic terror. The rope strains terribly, but the vaquero watches his chances, and takes in the rope every time it slackens. It is of no use! The poor mustang is lured and fast. Perhaps another rider comes up and flings another lasso over his head. Then they ride round him, and the mustang is twisted and tangled in the ropes till he can hardly move. He falls and rolls and kicks furiously, and all in vain. Panting, exhausted and conquered, he at last submits to his fate. His free days are over, and he seems to know it. A few more struggles, and he recognizes that man is his master, and perhaps in one or two days he submits to a bit in his mouth, and becomes a tame horse for the rest of his life. If by any chance he escapes before he is broken in, and runs away to join his wild companions, he seems never to forget that terrible lasso, and if he sees the vaquero again he will stand, trembling and frightened, too much terrified to even run away.—From "The Wild Mustang," by Charles Barnard, in St. Nicholas.

The Monochord.

Pythagoras, the Greek philosopher, who flourished in the sixth century before Christ, had learned all the wisdom of the Greeks, Egyptians and Chaldeans when he devoted himself to the study of music and musical tones. It was Pythagoras who first established, by means of the monochord, the relation between the notes of the scale, and you can test his doctrines and learn a great deal about how music is made, by making a monochord after these instructions: Take a smooth board a little over two feet long and a few inches wide. In the middle, lengthwise of the board, draw a straight line, which divide with two lines at equal distance from each end, leaving the distance along the line, between the cross lines, exactly twenty-two and a half inches. Divide this distance with cross lines into sections of twenty inches, eighteen inches, sixteen and seven eighths inches, fifteen inches, thirteen and a half inches, twelve inches, and eleven and a quarter inches. Now take a violin, guitar or harp string, or even a bit of wire, fasten it at one end of the board, and draw it tight over the board along the line, winding the other end either around a violin key, a nail or a wooden peg. At each end of the twenty-two and a half inches raise the string with a bridge made of hard wood; it should be about an inch high, broad enough at its base to stand firmly, and taper evenly to the top, so that when it is placed over one of the cross lines it will divide the string at the same distance from the other bridge that the cross line is from the first. The bridge at the end farthest from the cross lines must be left stationary; the other can be moved along the line. When the distance between the bridges is twenty-two and a half inches the sound, which you can get either by picking the string or rubbing it with a violin bow, will be do; twenty inches will give you re; eighteen inches mi; and so on through the scale, the half of the string, or eleven and a quarter inches of its length, giving you the octave do. When you have divided your string in the middle it vibrates just twice as rapidly as it did when it was twenty-two and a half inches long, and this has taught you a very important rule in music.

It was Pythagoras who discovered that the vibrations of a string would be doubled if the string was made half as long, and that if the vibrations were doubled the tone would be an octave, or eight notes higher; that two-thirds of the string would produce the fifth of the scale re-sol, and three-fourths of the string the fourth of la. Now if you will measure the distances on your monochord you will find that your second note, re, is made by a string eight-ninths as long as the first, mi by four-fifths of the string, fa by three-fourths, sol by two-thirds, la by three-fifths, si by eight-fifteenths, and the octave do by one-half. And now, if you can tune your monochord till the whole string sounds in unison with the middle c note of the piano, melodeon or cabinet organ—that is, the note on the first ledger line below the staff with a key of its own—you can by a very simple ride figure how many times the string vibrates in a second of time. You need only take two hundred and sixty-four, which is the number of times that the middle c string of a piano vibrates, divide it by the numerator of your fraction, and multiply the quotient by the denominator.—H. E. Krehbiel, in Talks About Musical Instruments, in Golden Hours.

THE LITTLE OUTCAST.—Nearly four thousand years ago a poor mother, with her boy, was turned out of doors to wander in the wilderness, and, for aught she knew to die. Where could she find food and water in that barren place to keep the old wolf (Ishmael) away?

But the Lord saw her great trouble and showed her a way out of it.

So they both lived, and the little boy in due time became a strong man and an archer—that is, he lived by hunting.

That was a very roving sort of life, and I presume his mother lived with him, for the story says she took him a wife from the land of Egypt, and that was a long way from their old home.

But I dare say Hagar, for this was the mother's name, came to like this sort of life quite well.

Certain it is that her grandchildren and all their descendants liked it. For though they became in time quite a nation, they still live the same wandering lives, with tents for their only shelter, besides the starry sky, camels carrying all their worldly goods from place to place.

The little boy's name was Ishmael, and his father's Abraham.

The strange and interesting people who descended from the little outcast we call Arabs.—Young People.

More than three-fourths of the students in Princeton College, says the Observer, are now believed to be devoted to a Christian life—a larger proportion than in any recent previous period of the history of the college. A recent revival in the college is also extending through the town.

In the Closet.

If there is anything in frames of mind that indicates the true spiritual condition, we should attach most importance to those which we have in secret prayer and in retirement. If we have peace, joy and trustfulness then, we are sure that they do not arise from the mere stimulants of social contact, and from the lively song and glowing sermon. These last are not to be depreciated as means of grace, but how far their influence has been really spiritual and helpful is best ascertained when we are by ourselves, and in converse only with God and our own hearts. It is easier to enjoy a good meeting where numbers are gathered, and where the religious atmosphere is agitated by many voices, and filled with the sympathy of many hearts, than it is to enjoy a half-hour of self-communion and prayer.

It is common enough to speak of the good prayer meeting, the excellent love feast, the edifying and comforting sermon; but may we ask our Christian readers how it fares with them in the closet? Is there joy and comfort with them there, and do they relish above everything the opportunity of being alone with Christ? The social element in religious assemblies may be highly enjoyed by worldly-minded people. The literature and oratory of the sermon, and the melody of the songs have attractions for those who care little about spiritual things. None but awakened souls, and those who hunger and thirst after righteousness, pray in secret. Some who are measurably indifferent, from force of habit and early training, still cling to some brief forms of prayer learned in childhood and at the mother's knee, but earnest secret prayer and waiting on God is something unknown to them. The line would thus be drawn by this duty as public and social worship does not draw it. Could we follow the congregation home, and know who of them pray in secret, we could also tell who of them are true and spiritual worshipers in public. Secret prayer is among the first things given up by the backslider. The falling away of the young convert begins at this point. His decline is rapid and certain if there be negligence here. If piety be not fed by this spring it soon dries up.

It is not often that secret prayer can avail for the purposes of hypocrisy. Religious professions, prayer on the corner of the streets, prominence in church assemblies, may sometimes be so used and perverted. But prayer concealed from the view of others, and with no known witnesses but God and the angels, must be at least sincere. The presumption of attempting to deceive the great Searcher of hearts may sometimes exist, but it is nearly impossible and surely a very rare manifestation of depravity. Secret prayer is at least one religious duty which must be regarded as above the suspicion of hypocrisy. The man who loves, enjoys and practices it may have the consciousness that no unworthy motives influence him in its performance. That there may be self-deception in reference to the true state of the heart is possible. But he who sincerely comes to God in this way for light and help can hardly fail of knowing the truth at length, and of being brought into the felt realization of the favor and love of God. Secret prayer may thus be a test to the Christian himself of his sincerity, and of his real devotion to Christ. To others it may not be the criterion, because it is for the most part beyond their knowledge and observation, but to the Christian himself it is one of the marks of true discipleship. And as God looks down upon the religious world, with its ceremonies, crowded assemblies, and its varied aspects of worship and profession, does he not find his real children in the secret place of prayer?

And closet prayer has the promise of an open reward—in the superior power of a religious life that is fed and nurtured by it, perhaps. Also in the fruits which grow from this careful culture of the heart, the manifest results of this near and habitual communion with God. The effect is seen in the whole character and life, in the consistent example, in the spirit and tone of the entire outward demeanor. The providence of God cannot but be influenced by the unceasing cry of his child, as that cry goes up from the place of seclusion day by day. The intimacy, the concentration of desire, the grasp of a faith that is brought face to face with God, must be peculiarly forceful in moving the arm of Jehovah. The prayer is in secret, but the effects of it are manifest in the character, in the blessings that come upon the family, the church and the world. And on "that day" will there not be a wonderful revelation of what secret prayer has done? The open reward will then be fully disclosed. The bearings of this ministry of prayer upon our own perseverance, upon the salvation of our children and friends, and upon the world-wide triumph of the gospel, will then be exhibited.

Secret prayer is a personal necessity to the Christian, and it is a privilege which he can most easily secure. He may be deprived of church privileges. His home, his business, his health, may be such that he has no Sabbath opportunities and no social meetings, but this choicest privilege of all is left him. He can pray even when he cannot read the word of God. He may be too blind to read, too deaf to hear, too infirm to reach the house of God, but he can pray.

It is not our purpose to judge or to condemn. We are willing to suppose that each one's relation to this duty is known only to himself. We call for no confessions, we write no harsh censures. If not wholly neglected, it may be partially. Are we not safe in concluding that more secret prayer is needed, and that more of it ought to be done by the followers of Christ? With every encouragement to attend to it, there is absolutely no excuse for its neglect.

"Not Afraid to Die."

William M. Tweed is said to have stolen six millions of dollars. He did this, however, in connection with a ring of "political jobbers," and by manipulating contracts, and using false vouchers. He is said to have been blind to the poor, he paid his debts, and seems to have been neither malicious nor revengeful. He was, we have heard, a temperance man. So far as we can learn, he had no vices. His one sin was the fraudulent amassment of great wealth by political management. He stole not from individuals, but from the city and State of New York. His fortune came from the tax payers, and was, by semblance of legal methods, taken from the public crib. There are consciences that make a difference between picking private pockets and defrauding the public treasury. Tweed had this kind of a conscience. The men engaged in the Credit Mobilier affair seem to have had the same sort of moral sense. It is, indeed, not uncommon. Herein was a representative man, but less fortunate than many who escape detection, or manage to evade the processes of the law. Then his stealing was on a grand scale. With some consciences this makes a difference. A petty larceny is a mean and disgraceful thing, but a big government swindle may be a job to be proud of. There is dignity, and sometimes genius in it; and the man with millions in his pocket has a standing and an influence which the little rogue cannot command. But Tweed, as rarely happens in such cases, came to grief. He was for a time in the penitentiary, and lately in jail in the city of New York, with some prospect of getting out at no distant day. While in jail he calls on him for charity were numerous, and he sent no one empty away. Kindly, charitable and patient, he seems to have been in his sufferings and disgrace.

What are we to do with such a case as this? To be sure we might hold it up as a warning to all who steal; but then the most of his associates and accomplices have escaped, and it is not often that such gigantic frauds are punished in this world. And in his death there seems to have been a certain odor of virtue and sanctity. His last words to his spiritual adviser, Dr. Carnochan, were: "I have tried to do some good; if I have not had good luck, I am not afraid to die. I believe the guardian angels will protect me." There were no bands in his death, no struggle, but "he passed away in sleep, with his head lying upon his arm." There were no words of penitence, not a syllable indicating any sense of his great crimes. He regarded his misfortunes as due to bad luck. He took comfort from the thought that he had tried to do some good—by giving away some of his plunder in charity, we suppose—and he had a conviction that the guardian angels would protect him. As there seem to have been "some certain dregs of conscience" in the man's life, so there seems to have been some sort of religion in his death. But what a perversion and travesty of truth and righteousness was it all! There was nothing of God in his living, and nothing of Christ in his dying. He gave away some of his stolen money, and this would balance accounts. How such an old sinner, utterly callous and impenitent, came to think of guardian angels, and to believe that they would protect him, we can hardly conjecture. He said he was not afraid to die, and we can well believe him. He was past all that. He was so thoroughly hardened through the deceitfulness of sin, and so completely given over to delusion, that even death had no terrors for him. After such a career and such a death, the wrath to come is at least suggested.

"Buried"—No. 1.

Who is it? When did he die? What did he die of? How old was he? Was he any kin to you? Was he a man of parts? Did he leave much behind him? Was the funeral largely attended? Who preached him to heaven? Was there much crying? Has his obituary been written? Will he have a fine tombstone? What poet has been asked to write the epitaph?

Hold! We cannot answer so many questions at once. We are told that something far more astounding—stupefying, in fact—is true of him: He was hurled alive! In mercy's name! Buried alive? Who was so hasty, so careless or so cruel as to bury a man alive? Why did they not hold a looking glass before his nose? Why did not the doctors examine him carefully? Why did not somebody have thought enough to tear off one of his finger-nails to see if circulation had stopped? Why did not somebody do something? Why did not everybody do everything to prevent such a horrible deed as to bury a man alive?

Positively we cannot answer so many questions; but nobody is to blame—he buried himself! What! Buried himself? A suicide? What impelled him to such a deed upon himself? And what strange whim in his lunacy took to bury himself! Some poison themselves, some drown themselves, some drink themselves to death, some blow their brains out, and a thousand other different methods of putting an end to existence are employed; but he buried himself! Incredible! But he buy his own coffin, and get into it and screw the lid down, and then haul himself to the grave, and read the burial service, pronounce the eulogy, fill up the grave, and dismiss the congregation of mourners with the benediction? Impossible! And then, poor man! to smother to death in the stark, cold grave! Oh! hold! You are too nervous. He is not dead—he is only buried! Living down there in the grave? Then why in the world don't somebody make haste to dig him up? It's inhuman to sit here and talk so calmly about such a horrible thing. Where's a spade? Quick! Come and help before it is too late—if he is not dead now, he will be soon.

Wait! Let me tell you more about it. He is a man capable of making himself useful, and might leave his mark; but, contrary to the advice of his best friends and wisest counselors, he has taken up the fanatical idea that the Savior meant what he said when he commanded his disciples to leave all and follow him. He says that he don't believe that "Go into all the world" is figurative language. He believed that poor, illiterate people ought to be preached to, as well as the rich and cultivated; and that as so many are ready to preach to those who treat them well, he ought to go and preach to those who are without anybody. And he is gone and buried himself! He had the talent to have stood at the head of any profession. He might have stood a chance for the presidency, or even in his own calling, he might one day have been a bishop if he had staid somewhere among people who could give him reputation. If he had gone out under the auspices of some popular mission that is written up in all the papers it might have been of some value to him. But no—he would not even do that. He is gone out into the piney woods, where the women walk to church barefooted, and sit down on a log and put on their shoes just before they come in sight of the church. He is gone to preach to people who drawl out their words through the nose in this way: "Whar ye gwine to go wi' your folks?" He thinks that he can do more good among such boors than in a cultivated community; and he says he cares nothing for honor, promotion or wealth, so that he wins souls. Perhaps, if you could see him now, he is wearing an old jeans coat out at the elbows, and shoes that have not seen blacking since they left the shop, and a brown domestic shirt that he has been wearing three or four days. He is certainly the most unconscionable fool I ever saw. I had a letter from him the other day. You must read it. Here it is. Look what paper! Looks like he might have rolled up his last lunch of fried chicken in it, and, after eating the chicken, scoured the grease off with sand, and then wrote his letter on it to me. Here it is. Read it if you can make it out:

"PINEYUCKY, Jan. 15, 18—.

"MY DEAR FRIEND: It has been a long time since I heard from you or any of my friends, from whom I parted with such grief at heart. Sometimes the thought comes that with you as with the great, heartless world, 'to be out of sight is to be out of mind.' But when I think of you, and reflect how often my heart yearns for you, I feel that I have been hasty and uncharitable, and on my knees I pray God to give me that love which 'thinketh no evil,' so that I may never again be so harsh toward an absent friend who has no opportunity to defend himself. I am out here in the woods and feel at times how lonely and defenseless I am; but then I think of the dear ones left behind, and more of him who has gone before. Then, too, I think of the happy tears I sometimes see trickling down the sun-burnt faces of these simple-hearted 'sand-lappers,' and before I know it I am crying myself, and thanking God that he ever sent me here. You don't know what happiness is until you can taste of the water gushing fresh from these springs. I am poor in this world's goods, but I am rich in faith; and how grateful am I that I should be counted worthy of such honor as my Master bestows upon me!"

There! that will do. All the hellebore in Anticyra would be thrown away on him. Now I suppose your nerves sit is allayed, and you understand what I mean by saying that he is buried. That would be a first rate letter to go in one of Dickens' novels, where the hero would finally come out with a hundred thousand dollars, or find out that he was the heir of some prodigate baronet, and, of course, would henceforth strut for the high blood that was in his veins, even though it had come through the sloughs of adultery or fornication. But what can we say of it when we know the author of it to be a visionary and enthusiast, who is looking for his pay in another world? Let us eat dinner, and then talk a little more about this burying business.

T. A. S. A.

A Message to Archippus.

The conference held at Rome, between Paul and Epaphras, must have been deeply interesting. He was of Paul's sending. It is not known whether he had given him a special field or not. He was sent to preach to the heathen. He had been wonderfully successful. Whether beginning at Colosse or not, he had ended there in establishing a deeply spiritual church. To report progress and get advice he visited Paul, a prisoner, at Rome. We can see them sitting together, in Paul's own hired room, talking of the great work. We can see Paul's great missionary heart swelling within him, and his deep-set eye luminous with a strange light, as Epaphras reported his success—of the revival at Colosse, of the strong spiritual church, of the various workers in it, etc. We know not what he told him of Archippus, or whether he told him anything at all. We suppose he did. Archippus was a stranger to Paul, as was all the church there. Paul had never seen any of them. Archippus was one of the pastors at Colosse. He was probably a native of the place. Converted among the first, and called of God to preach, he had been appointed to work at home. We suppose Epaphras gave Paul a full account of him. We take it that he was a young man of promise. Paul's message to him is one of the most significant things in his epistle; and the spirit of it indicates that there was much in him. Epaphras had evidently thus impressed his mind. "And say to Archippus, Take heed to the ministry which thou hast received in the Lord, that thou fulfill it." Judging from the spirit of the message, if Paul knew anything special as a reason for the exhortation, it could not have been very serious. He was not one to soften or disguise matters where serious faults were involved. We suspect he had faults—grave lackings—generally esteemed small, and yet not unfrequently rendering fruitless the work of the ministry. There are more, perhaps, who do not fulfill their ministry from little than from big things. It is the little foxes that spoil our vines. And yet the grounds of the charge may have been general. It may have been a wise forecasting—a cautionary measure springing out of Paul's full heart, and his deep interest in him. The true minister could find no cause of complaint here, though humanly perfect. To receive such a message, in such a connection, and from such a source, would be a cause of thankfulness. The message implies a needed watchfulness, to say the least of it. It recognizes a divine call. The ministry to be fulfilled is one "received in the Lord"—not in or by man. There is danger, or at least a possibility, that one divinely called to the ministry may fail to "fulfill it," or else Paul wrote unmeaningly. As already intimated, not, we think, in this instance, from crime or heresy. Paul had no apprehension of the preacher in this direction. The spirit of this lesson, more likely, is contained in this: "Never be unemployed." "Never be triflingly employed." "Never stay any longer at any one place than is strictly necessary." If Paul had commented on his own charge to the preacher at Colosse he would have used, doubtless, a similar formula. There is another that would have come in: "Be punctual." There are more breakdowns, more wrecks just at this point, perhaps, than at many others technically more serious. A want of punctuality—an earnest, intelligent promptness—in meeting engagements has dwarfed the usefulness of otherwise good preachers.

Archippus was, it may be, losing his "vocation," and finding a "profession" instead. His preaching, doubtless, was as loud and vehement as ever; it may be, even more so. It is not uncommon. This is a good point at which "to take heed." The ministry "received in the Lord" will never be fulfilled by the perfunctory, mechanical preacher. The burning zeal, the tender feeling, the deep spirituality must be nursed. It must increase rather than decrease. The preacher must "grow in grace," as well as others.

We have sometimes thought that perhaps Archippus was also neglecting his vows with reference to the children. The children of the church! To neglect these—to fail to love them, pray for them, instruct them, make them love him, etc.—he would soon go into bankruptcy and cease payment. Take heed that thou fulfill the ministry received in the Lord.

Entering Africa.

It is seldom now, save Zion's Herald that an expedition finds out a new region and hitherto unknown tribes of men without knitting with them such relations as to lead them into new paths and insure a welcome to a second visit. For instance, right up the heart of Africa, under the equator, and between the lakes from which springs the Nile, lies the realm of the barbarous King Mtesa. Speke and Grant were the first Europeans who visited him, some fourteen years ago; and others followed, such as Baker and Stanley, from whom we learn that King Mtesa had adopted Islam and become a Mohammedan. Now even this was a marvelous advance on barbarism, and led Stanley to believe that where such progress had been made the people were ready for another step, and could be brought over to Christianity; and in accordance with his advice the English Missionary Society has begun its work.

This was a very bold undertaking, for the region to be opened lies far in from the coast, and from all sources of supply, and the way thither led through hostile nations before Mtesa could be reached. But in spite of these obstacles the work has been successfully begun, as we learn from the reports of the missionaries. When these had arrived at the south end of Victoria Lake, where they established a station, they sent a letter to the King of Uganda, announcing their arrival and their desire to visit him; and to this they received a quick reply from the secretary of the King, a young negro by the name of Dallington, whom Stanley had left there. The laconic but significant epistle ran thus: "My dear white friends, come quickly! The messengers who bring this letter will be your guides."

In consequence of this kind invitation the missionaries left in a small sail-boat which they had built, and steered joyfully toward the north over this great lake, not, however, without some opposition from hostile tribes on the islands and banks. After a long voyage they cast anchor on the northern shore, and began the journey to the interior, and safely reached the capital of the King. His majesty, from being a junked savage when first discovered a few years ago, was now dressed in Turkish garments, even to the red fez on his head, and was sitting in style on a Turkish rug. As the missionaries advanced the King arose and offered them his hand. The letters which the Sultan of Zanzibar had sent to the King of Uganda were then read and interpreted by Dallington; and what was the surprise of the missionaries when the name of Christ was mentioned in the letters, to hear greeted with a great salvo from the body guard of Mtesa, who evinced great joy on the occasion. He showed the ordinary lust of African potentates for European wares, and was disappointed at not receiving any, but was reconciled when the missionaries informed him that they had come to teach his people to read and write.

They were soon permitted to hold solemn Christian service, at which the King and all his dignitaries were present; and thus in this formal way opened the door to Christianity. The mission is established in Uganda, a Christian mission, where, a few years ago, was barbarism of the deepest dye. Now from this and other missions in Africa go forth the appeal to "Come over into Macedonia and help us," and it is well for us Protestants to see who are most eager to step in this open door: Twelve Catholic missionaries who, ten years ago, were sent to found a mission among the negroes of Algiers are to take the next steamer that leaves for Suez, and thus to inner Africa. At Zanzibar they are to form a caravan, and at the end of this present month, as soon as the rainy season is over, they strike for the interior, where they are to found an apostolic vicariate, whence one party goes to Tanganyika and another to the Albert and Victoria Lakes. These twelve missionary apostles are soon to receive reinforcements so as to press forward to the west to meet the borders of the Portuguese possessions in the district. This, then, is a plan for the permanent occupation of this region of equatorial Africa by the Catholic missionaries, and it is heartily seconded by Leo the Thirteenth. Other apostolic bands were preparing to begin mission work along the coast lands, with special orders to pay great attention to the geography and climatic character of the country. The question is now, therefore: What phase of Christianity shall possess this land?

Does Death Change Character?

A lazy, beer-soaked German has died. In his life-time he had been drunken, gluttonous, cruel to wife and children, faithless to friends. But he was dead, and of course something must be found to say in his favor. It was a hard task for his comrades, as they sat in silence in the neighboring bar-room. But the last one of them was able to utter this eulogy: "Vell, Hans vos good schmoke, anyway." That was a summary of the virtues of a life time.

The wish to speak well of the dead is as old as humanity, and is almost an instinct. It is voiced in the proverbs of every nation. Standing by the silent body, which is pitiful in its mute helplessness, it seems cowardly and unmanly to attack what can neither amend nor reply. If unkind words cannot be spoken, evil words can at least be left unsaid. "Of the dead nothing save good" says the Latin motto; and the world is willing to accept this as a safe rule of conduct.

But as speech may go too far, so may silence. That which is not condemned seems sometimes to be approved. The dead man's earthly life is ended; neither praise nor blame can affect it now. Yet its influence on the living still remains. It is as demoralizing to the young to screen a man's sins exposed in his life, as it is not less so to hear clergymen and editors magnifying his virtues and hiding his vices after death. Character and hell are in God's hands. Whether a good or a bad man's earthly reputation is in human keeping it is cruel, or drunken, or licentious or dishonest, he should not have the same funeral eulogy as the sober, industrious, kindly and pure man who died the day before. Young people have an Indian quickness in drawing conclusions. "If death," they say, "covers every sin and magnifies every merit, why should I be careful for the reputation I leave behind me?" Nor does a virtue exposed in Port Victor Emanuel wash the blackness of his private life. Truth does not part with the dying soul.—Sunday School Times.

It is recorded of one of the reformers that when he had acquitted himself in a public disputation with great credit to his Master's cause a friend begged to see the notes which he had been observed to write, supposing that he had taken down the arguments of his opponents. He showed the outline of his reply. Greatly was he surprised to find that his notes consisted simply of the ejaculatory petition, "More light, Lord—more light, more light!" And how fully was the true spirit of prayer compressed and illustrated in these short aspirations. Could they fall of success? "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."—Bridges.

THE GOSPEL OF JOY.—We do immense wrong when, by our narrow or gloomy ideas, we allow our children to imagine that religion also is gloomy and narrow. The gospel is joy is the gospel for us to teach, and it is the pure one. Did not the angels announce the birth of its Founder with glad tidings of great joy? And are not his disciples deserving of blame when they cause the little children, who would otherwise embrace it almost naturally, to suppose that religion makes us ill-tempered, peevish and irritable? It ought not so to be.

On Monday evening quite a number of delegates left New Orleans for Atlanta by the Mobile route.

The editor, for the past two or three days, has been suffering from inflammation of the eyes, and is at present confined to his room. He hopes to be able to leave for Atlanta in the course of a few days.

I pray thee, O God! make me beautiful within!—Socrates.

Some Figures.

We quote, says the Methodist, from Rev. W. H. DePuy, in our April Quarterly, some interesting statistics:

Annual Conferences.—The number at the close of 1877 was 91; in 1867, 78; and in 1857, 47. The gain during the former decade was 21; during the latter 23—a gain during two decades of 44. Annual Conferences, or 93 to 10.

Per cent. In 1857 there were only 3 foreign Conferences, namely: Germany and Liberia; in 1877 the foreign Conferences were Germany, Liberia, Norway, Sweden, North India and South India. Since the commencement of 1878 (and up to this writing, March 12) 2 additional Conferences have been organized, to wit: Little Rock (colored), by Bishop Harris, January 17; and Foochow (Chinese), by Bishop Wiley, January 30. The present number of Annual Conferences is, therefore, 93.

Bishops.—The present number is 16; in 1857 it was 7, and in 1867 10, thus far, covering the whole history of American Methodism (111 years October, 1877), there have been in the Methodist Episcopal Church 31 bishops, of whom 20 have passed their labor to reward. The first bishops—Coke and Ashury—were elected in 1784, at which time the number of itinerant preachers was 83, and the lay members, 14,986. The Episcopal ratio, omitting fractions, was one bishop to 41 preachers and 9,364 lay members. In 1787 the ratio was one bishop to 66 preachers and 9,921 members; in 1797 one bishop to 131 preachers and 29,331 members; in 1807 one bishop to 258 preachers and 72,295 members; in 1817 one bishop to 238 preachers and 74,951 members; in 1827 one bishop to 325 preachers and 127,382 members; in 1837 one bishop to 449 preachers and 181,997 members; in 1847 one bishop to 738 preachers and 127,294 members; in 1857 one bishop to 876 preachers and 117,217 members; in 1867 one bishop to 800 preachers and 114,608 members; and in 1877 one bishop to 1,040 preachers and 151,984 members. In each case in these calculations the members on probation are proportioned with those in full connection.

Itinerant Preachers.—The number of itinerant preachers returned in the minutes of 1877 was 11,269, a gain during the year of 197. Of these, 9,364 were in full connection, and 1,905 "on trial." The number of preachers received on trial in 1877 was 1,491; admitted into full connection, 1,401; located 137; returned without appointment, 40; expelled, 16; died, 118. The last four items give a total of 311, and show the loss to the itinerancy for the year.

The number received by transfer was 155; by readmission 20; and on credentials from other religious denominations, 18. Of these 40 included in the list from there were received by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 3; the Methodist Protestant Church, 3; African Methodist Episcopal Church, 3; African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, 2; Methodist Church of Canada, 2; Primitive Methodist Church in Canada, 1; United Methodist Free Church, 1; American Wesleyan, 1; Reformed Episcopal, 1, and Baptist, 1. The total number of additions to the itinerancy during the year, 1,491, by readmission from other denominations, was 40; deducting from this gain the 311 we have 197, the net gain of preachers referred to above.

Local Preachers.—The annual returns of the General Minutes do not show the number of local preachers, but the General Conference of 1876 returns, for 1877, show a total of 10,511, the year of the reunion of the Methodist Episcopal Church, when the number had increased to 10,811. This estimated that only 300 local preachers went with the church. In 1877 the number reported in full connection was 4,913; in 1867 there were 7,160, a net increase for the decade of 2,256; in 1867 there were 4,613, an increase of 2,300; and in 1857 there were 12,537, an increase for the thirty-seven years of 7,624, or one hundred and twenty per cent.

We wish the proud, professing Christian and the worldly sinner could see that giveth grace to the humble grace and pardon, remedy for sin against misery and happiness, contentment in all conditions strength of spirit, patience in affliction, love abroad, peace at home, humble freedom from contention, the sin of censuring others, and the trouble of being censured themselves, for the humble man will not see his brother for the mote in his eye, but more troubled at the beam in his own eye, and is patient and ready to be reproved, because himself is first the stone at himself, therefore wonders not that others are so at his mind.—Jeremy Taylor.

THE GLORIOUS GOSPEL.—Preach the gospel to every creature—that is, to all: every man, without exception, whatsoever his state be, whatsoever his rebellions be—go and tell these glad tidings: that if he come in Jesus will accept him, his sins shall be forgiven him, and he shall be saved. The gospel method of salvation requires a well-drawn picture, which is to look every person in the face. In the manner the truth has something in it suitable to every one's case that reads or hears it, and that is particularly the case it spoke to every gospel hearer came.—W. Arnot.

One care thou must have, that thou mayest not care. Those things that are thorns indeed thou must take knowledge of, to keep out those temptations that accompany sloth and extreme want that waits on it; but let them be the hedge—suffer not to grow within the garden.—Bridge.

"We're in a pickle now," said a man in a crowd. "A regular jam," groaned another. "I'm nearly broiled to jelly," bellowed a fat man. "Heaven preserve us," prayed an old lady.

The Phonograph Astonishes Our English Cousins.

A London letter to the Boston Journal tells of the reception of the telephone and phonograph in English circles:

The phonograph has arrived here from America, and Mr. Edison's invention is considered first cousin to the Prince of the Black Art. The patent for Great Britain has been purchased for a large sum, and an Englishman proposes to bring it out. My own impression of it, after hearing it talking in English, French, German and Hungarian all at once, was that I had gone mad. The phonograph and the telephone have much increased the kind of dazed wonder with which the Briton looks at the American. The telephone was a marvel, but now here is a cylinder with a leaf of tinfoil wound about it, and by talking into a little drum-like apparatus one can communicate to the tinfoil any sound possible to the human voice, so that that sound may be repeated twenty or two hundred years later by turning the phonograph's crank and making the cylinder revolve! Most wonderful! The exhibitor made the phonograph go through its various accomplishments at the Langham Hotel the other day. It was irrepressibly comical to hear it repeat all the inflections of one's own voice, to listen to its repetitions of shrill laughter, trills, series, whistling, shouting, or an operatic air. Ventriloquism has no such weird charm as this possesses. The voices seemed to come struggling up from the under-world; I looked for a flight of demons, for a sabbat of witches, and expected to see the devil appear at my elbow, and ask me to sign the traditional contract. Some English journals have sneered at the phonograph as another specimen of "Yankee bounce," but those who come to see it and to scoff remain to wonder. Mr. Preece, the noted London electrician, is enthusiastic over the phonograph. He thinks its capabilities almost infinite.

In the Indian Ocean, many feet below the surface of the water, grow woods quite as luxuriant as any jungles or thickets we read of in South America. Some of the trees grow as high as two houses piled one on another. They are called by a hard name—"Nereocystis." The roots resemble coral, and from the slender stem grows a cluster of very long leaves. Other trees grow almost as high, and end in one single huge leaf that is about the size of our forest-trees. Bushes—green, yellow and red—are dotted here and there; and a velvety carpet of diminutive plants covers the ground. Flowers in all the hues of the rainbow ornament the rocks, and large leaves of the iris, of dazzling pink and red, float among them; and sea anemones, as large and brilliant as cactus flowers, form beds in the moss. Blue, red, purple and green little fish dart here and there; and between the bushes glides, like a serpent, the long, silvery ribbon fish.—Intelligencer.

FEROCITY OF THE BUTCHER BIRD.—An incident illustrating the ferocity of butcher-birds and their tenacity of life recently occurred in this city. A gentleman saw one of these cruel creatures take a sparrow-dipple him on the sharp twig of a tree and then peck at him seemingly with almost fiendish delight. Seizing a gun, the man fired at the butcher-bird, and clipped off one of its legs. Undismayed by the report of the gun, and apparently thinking that the sparrow had vanished him, the butcher-bird pecked the little fellow with redoubled fury, when the gentleman fired again and both birds fell lifeless, and to supposed on the snow. But before he could pick up his game the butcher-bird had come to life, picked up the poor little dead sparrow and flattered away.—Springfield (Mass.) Union.

AN ANTIDOTE FOR TROUBLE.—The longer I live the more do I become satisfied that nothing is so good for people who are in deep trouble as real, hard work—work that not only occupies the hands, but the brain; work on which one lavishes the best part of the heart. I know it requires a great deal of resolution to break away from the apathy of a deep sorrow or a heavy trouble, and resolutely put one's hand to the new or the long-disused plow; but the effort once made—if there is anything in the individual, he or she will never turn back. And after work, real work, work with the hands, head and heart—after this will come rest, and with trust will come peace.—Dr. Eliot.

Men grow weaker by every consent to wrong, stronger by every resistance of wrong. Establishment in virtue is the proudest of every practice of virtue.

A workshop is not a bad place for preaching in. If the heart of one workman is filled with the love of Christ all the hands will hear of it.—Arnot.

MARRIED.

MORROW—BALLANCE.—By the Rev. H. S. Woodward, February 6, 1878, at the residence of Mr. D. B. Canning, Mr. W. M. Morrow, of Ohio, to Miss Kate Ballance, of Natchez, Miss.

HAYS—MURCHISAN.—April 9, 1878, by Rev. H. S. Woodward, at the bride's residence, in Tensas parish, La., Mr. Thomas J. Hays, of Waterproof, to Mrs. S. A. Murchisan.

THE EXCELSIOR REFRIGERATOR.—This, we are assured, is one of the best refrigerators in existence, and for its economy in ice consumed is itself especially to parties this summer, when ice is so scarce. The prices are reasonable. Those interested are invited to call at 87 Champ-des-Mars street and inspect them. See card on this page.

THOSE interested should read the advertisement, in another column, of the "Wander Doctor." He proposes to treat diseases with herbs altogether, and claims that he has been very successful with his patients. His office is at 106 Bourbon street.

MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.—Go to that reliable gentleman, Major B. F. Walshe, for anything in his line. He stands well for honorable dealing.

Publisher's Department.

PIANOS AT HALF PRICE! Organs at Half Price.—Mr. Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street, New Orleans, the well-known Southern piano, organ and music dealer, offers two hundred pianos and organs at half price. We advise our readers to deal with Mr. Werlein. There is no necessity for sending to Northern houses when we have at home a house so large and reputable. In fact, there is hardly a single piece house in this country larger than the house of Werlein. This house was restarted after the war, and has been firmly established by persistent labor, indefatigable energy, and liberality. Have confidence in this house's ability for lowest price and liberal terms.

MILLINERY AND FANCY GOODS.—F. R. Hardon, who has advertised with us for years, has an attractive advertisement on this page, to which we would call the attention of our lady friends in the city and country. We speak from personal knowledge when we say that this is one of the best established houses in this city at which to make purchases. We have had occasion to buy from this place frequently for ourselves and others, and satisfaction has been given in every instance. Orders from the country will be as satisfactorily attended to as if the purchaser was here to make the selection in person.

CARPENTER & CISTERN MAKER.—Any one wishing to purchase a cistern, or to have carpenter work of any sort done, should call on our friend, R. B. Mitchell, 183 Magazine street. In all of our dealings with Mr. Mitchell we have found him an upright and straightforward man, thoroughly acquainted with his business, and one whom we had the pleasure to recommend to our friends. He will attend promptly and satisfactorily to orders from the country, as well as in the city. See his card.

SORGO AND SUGAR CANE GROWERS.—Parties wanting cane mills or evaporators will do well to write to the Blymyer Manufacturing Company, Cincinnati, Ohio (the makers of the celebrated Cook Evaporator and Victor Cane Mill) for a copy of their new illustrated catalogue. Their sorgo and sugar cane machinery was awarded the grand medal at the Centennial Exposition.

THE air of perfection, cleanliness and homelike comfort which is so apparent at the American House, Boston, is one of the characteristic features of that well-regulated establishment. To those disposed to economize this popular hotel offers an opportunity seldom found at so thoroughly a first class house, having reduced its rates to $3 and $3.50 per day.

PLUMBER.—The advertisement of Mr. M. B. Applegate will be seen on this page. Everything in the way of bath tubs, cooking ranges washstands, etc., will be found at Mr. Applegate's establishment. He is thoroughly reliable in every respect, and we warmly recommend him to our friends in the city or country.

TRUNKS.—Mr. S. Baum has a card on this page, to which the attention of the traveling public is especially called. Having a large stock of trunks on hand, Mr. Baum is disposed to sell them at a very low price to make room for other goods.

WERLEIN purifies heating steam engines, boilers, mills, gins, presses, etc., in the advertisement of A. Dudley Coleman & Bro., No. 12 Union street, New Orleans, La., they being manufacturers and dealers of well-established reputation.

GENERAL COMMISSION MERCHANT.—A. P. Dunlay, 11 Union street, will attend to the sale of cotton, sugar and molasses, as well as all kinds of produce. He is reliable.

DRY GOODS.—Send in your orders to this reliable firm. Danziger's Sons, 137 Canal street. See advertisement.

The German Star in Louisiana.

THE SO-CALLED WONDER DOCTOR has arrived safely in New Orleans, with his boat and family. He has made a twelve months' tour through the State of Louisiana to show to the public what he can do with his AMERICAN HERB MEDICINES for the diseased human system and organs. The Doctor is a thorough and experienced German chemist in the herb and vegetable kingdom, and has spent eighteen years in exploring one half for the purpose of discovering the most valuable medical herbs growing in America. He has succeeded in discovering the secrets of all Indian tribes in connection with the vegetable kingdom, and thus is enabled as a practical physician, to prescribe these herbs to his patients. The Doctor has been wonderfully successful in the treatment of his patients, of whom he has had in his charge 1,635 within nine months. These comprised cases of sickness of every description, out of both sexes. All these patients were completely restored to health in a very short time. Everywhere in the State the Doctor had to trombe to establish himself in New Orleans, which he has resolved to do and carried out, in order to relieve as fast as Nature will permit, the long sufferings of so many of his fellow-beings. None but American herbs will be employed by the doctor in the preparation of his medicines, and all persons who may honor him with their confidence and call on him will be treated with them.

The Doctor has established his office and a Chemical Laboratory, as well as a complete Private Hospital, at No. 104 BOURBON STREET, between Conti and St. Louis streets, so as to give to the afflicted from everywhere an opportunity to receive medical attention at his hands. The rooms are all well fitted up, and absolutely under his personal supervision. His terms are moderate. Letters of inquiry (with three-cent stamp inclosed) will be answered promptly. Orders for medicines will be filled upon the receipt of the money, and mailed free to any place in the United States. Address

BELIEVED BY THE

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

AFTER THE LIFE OF THE PATIENT WAS DESPAIRED OF BY HIS MEDICAL ADVISERS. THE STONE DISSOLVED IN THREE HOURS IN A GLASS OF THE LITHIA WATER.

CASE OF MR. C. WOLFF, of Point Coupee, La.

POINT COUPEE, LA., April 3, 1878.

MR. THOMAS F. GOODE: By request I give you the following history of my case: Two years ago I began to suffer with severe pain in my kidneys, and to have periodical attacks—about two a week—which caused the most excruciating agony, from which I was healed only relieved by the discharge of a stone in four or six grains in weight. There was never a time for more than a month, for two years, in eighteen months I discharged seven large stones, besides quantities of smaller stones and sand. As the result of this protracted and great suffering my general health was reduced to such a condition that my physicians advised me that I had nothing to hope for from medicine—that my case was a hopeless one—and I took to my bed to die. In this state of things about six months ago I was advised by Mr. I. L. Lyons, a druggist of New Orleans, to try the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, Springs No. 2. A week after I began to use it I had a slight attack, in which I passed two small stones. Finding one of these in a glass of the Water, in three hours I found it dissolved, to a fine dust, which gave me confidence, and I persevered in its use. I have had no attacks since. The pain in my kidneys has entirely disappeared. I have regained my usual weight, and my general health is perfectly restored. I very cheerfully acknowledge my indebtedness for my life and the comfort which I now enjoy to this great health-giving Water. Respectfully, C. WOLFF.

This Water, in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, can be had at the Springs, and of I. L. LYONS, Wholesale Druggist, 42 and 44 Camp street, New Orleans, La.

FACTS FOR THE PUBLIC.

The National Bee-Keepers' Convention, in session at New York, October 16 to 19, 1877, aware of the general lack of information concerning improved methods of apiculture and its products, respectfully submit the following statement of facts for general information concerning a large source of personal and national revenue in preserving the honey which God has caused to flow so abundantly in the vast and varied flora of our country:

1. It is now only a few years since the invention of movable comb hives has opened up a new era in bee-keeping, and placed it on the basis of a successful business pursuit. Such hives, adapted to climate, furnish every facility for intelligent management of bees, by regulating swarming, guarding against moths, and manipulating both bees and comb.

2. The invention of the extractor or honey-slinger; a machine which empties the honey from the comb by centrifugal force, without injury, so that the comb may be returned to the bees, marks another great step in apiculture. Thus virgin honey, free from foreign admixture, is obtained, having the flavor of the flower from which it is drawn.

3. The further invention of an artificial comb foundation, made of pure wax, first successfully used to a large extent this season, completes the requisites for placing bee-keeping on the basis of a great industry in our country. Bees receive this artificial comb foundation with readiness as receptacles both for honey and brood.

4. Simultaneous with the first and all of these improvements, the introduction of Italian bees and improved modes of rearing queens, of transporting and introducing them to colonies, has greatly improved the value of the honey-gatherers, both because of the superiority of the Italian bee and the introduction of new blood. New blood prevents the danger from in-and-in breeding.

5. The great drawback to apiculture is the sting of the bee. Danger from this source is now largely overcome by the simple appliances used for the protection of the person and for subduing the bees. The most vicious colony may be subdued in a very few minutes.

6. To consumers of honey a few facts are necessary in this article to preserve them from imposition. Nice white comb speaks for itself, and is generally admired; but the price many lovers of honey cannot afford. It makes a beautiful dish for the table, but is no better than extracted honey. All comb is wax, and wax in the stomach is perfectly indigestible. Extracted honey is the pure liquid honey as it is taken from the combs by the honey-slinger, free from any foreign admixture. It is entirely different from what is known in this market as strained honey. Consumers help to impose upon themselves by the false idea that pure honey will not granulate. They desire ungranulated honey, and dealers will attempt to supply the demand. Almost all pure honey will granulate when exposed for some time to light and cold. The granulated state is a fine evidence of pure honey. Much of the jar honey heretofore sold in the markets, and recommended not to granulate, is a very inferior article, composed largely of glucose or some inferior substance. Granulated honey can be reduced to its liquid state in a few moments by placing the jar in warm water. When thus liquefied it so remains for some time without again crystallizing. Consumers may be sure of a good, wholesome article by purchasing granulated honey and reducing it.

7. To Producers—By the full use of improvements in bee keeping the honey crop of America may be almost indefinitely increased, and become a great source of national revenue. None need fear over-production. The home demand and consumption is largely increased whenever people learn to know the superiority of such honey. Dealers in New York have already commenced a large export trade, and they tell us that their only difficulty is procuring honey in proper shape and quantity to supply the growing demand. Trade demands that honey be put up in nice, attractive packages, and in small parcels or jars, so as to be readily handled by grocers and consumers. Honey was for centuries the principal sweet known, and is one of the most healthful of all. Improvement in refining sugars, has within the last two or three centuries led to its general adoption. Why may not also new improvements in apiculture restore it to its true place as a general favorite, which was lost by bad management and the consequent correspondingly limited supply?

We believe that improvements in bee-keeping, as compared with old methods, are not less than those seen in railroads, as compared with former modes of travel.

For mutual information we would advise the organization of local societies and conventions to further this business among all interested in apiculture.

COAL ASHES AND CURCULIO.

I have for several years saved my plums from the ravages of curculio by the use of coal ashes. They become so completely disgusted with it that they leave for other parts. Just so soon as the blossoms fall I commence with my ashes. I take a bucketful of the ashes under my arm, and with the other hand I sprinkle the ashes all over and through the trees, covering the plums completely with the ashes, and go round every few days and repeat the dose. If it rain washes it off I renew the dose and keep at it until my plums ripe, when I am well paid for my trouble. I had this year, eight bushels on seven small trees, which I sold for $32. I have several trees of the Rheine Claude variety upon which I did not use the ashes, because the plums were so scattering. I thought it would not pay; but there was one limb of one of those trees that was close to those I put the ashes on. It got its share of ashes, and that limb ripened up all of its plums, but not a plum was there left on the other part of the tree or on any of the other trees of that variety. This was conclusive evidence to me that it was the ashes that saved my plums. When first I commenced the ashes my brother told me that I would not succeed—that he made sure of saving his plums by placing a sheet under his trees and shaking the little Turks off of his trees, and catching them on the sheet and killing them. But when plums were ripe I had plenty and he had none.—Ohio Farmer.

THE BORER.—The borer is the most common enemy to the Southern orchards, and does more mischief than all others. The remedy for the borer is the simplest imaginable, and as sure as it is simple. Take common soft soap, such as in olden times was made in every kitchen in the land, and early in the spring, as soon as the leaves begin to put forth, with a stiff brush apply the soap to the trunks, forks and large branches of every tree in the orchard. Never neglect it any more than you would neglect the seasonable working of your cotton. Brush hard, so that all the bark shall be covered and all the crevices filled with soap. It will prove a perfect protection from the borer and all other insects that prey upon the vitals of the tree through the bark. Not a lichen or fungus of any kind will remain on the bark. As the soap is washed down by the rains it fertilizes the roots by feeding them with potash. The soap unadulterated may be too strong for young trees, especially the tender bark of the young peach. Mix with the soap for such trees four parts water and one part soap.

These views are general, and apply to all fruit-trees that grow in our climate.—New York Herald.

HOW TO BAKE BEANS.—The receipt for baking beans after the real New England style is as follows: Pick over the beans carefully, wash clean with cold water and place in a kettle, covering them two or three inches deep with water, and parboil one hour. Having selected a piece of nice home-raised pig pork, well mixed with lean meat—about one pound to one quart of beans—place it in a pan, and turn the water from the parboiled beans over it while hot, draining all the water from the beans. Place the beans in an earthen crock, filling about two-thirds full; scrape the rind of the pork thoroughly, until it looks white and nice, then rinse it in clean water, and score the rind through about one half inch apart and place on top of the beans, burying it about half its thickness in the beans, rind up permost; add water enough fairly to cover the beans, and place in a moderately hot oven, and bake three or four hours.—Country Gentleman.

HIDE-BOUND TREES.—Trees that have long stems, exposed to hot sun or dry winds, become hide-bound—that is, the old bark far ones indurated, cannot expand, but the trees suffer much in consequence. Such an evil is usually indicated by gray lichens, which feed on the decaying bark. In these cases says the Gardener's Monthly, a washing of weak lye, or of lime water, is very useful; indeed, where the bark is healthy, it is beneficial thing to wash trees, as many eggs of insects are thereby destroyed. We would, however, again refer to linseed oil as a wash, as far more effective for insects; and it would, perhaps, do as well for moss and lichens. After all, these accident come when trees are well cultivated. It is neglect that makes poor growth, and it is poor growth that makes lichens.

THE TOMATO.—The tomato, or love apple, was first known in South America. It has been for years common in Italian cookery. In 1803 it was grown at Detroit and Fort Wayne, by a man by the name of Col. Hamtramck, and in 1807 it was grown by Judge Thomas in Lawrenceburg, Ind. The French stewed it at Kaskaskia in 1807, probably obtained from Thomas, and about that period it was brought into Ohio. In 1815 it was a salad or dressing for beef or roast steak, in Washington, Penn. It was grown largely at first as an ornamental plant, under the name of love apple. And even in Bristol, England, in 1815, it was grown as a flowering plant for its crimson-colored fruit, being esteemed again of great beauty.

CULTIVATING TREES.—The Gardener's Monthly well says: "Some people say that land which will raise good corn will grow good fruit-trees, which is all right; but they should add that, like corn, they require regular and continuous manuring." To which we would add that, like corn, they require thorough cultivation of the soil, especially during their younger years, and many farmers would even regard a clean, mellow soil, instead of a grass suit in their corn-fields as quite important manure.

The Cultivator Gentleman, in the following account, particular for, describes many: "Fire-fair was spoiled by the introduction of all manner of side shows, various gambling devices, fleet horses, etc., which opened the door for thieves and pickpockets to prey upon the crowd of honest people. An excursion from York went to the fair, a large number of whom were relieved of their pocket books, and a great deal of money and other valuables."

INDIGESTIBLE BREAD.

The reason why adulterated baking powders make bad and usually very indigestible bread is because they harden the gluten of the flour and render it less soluble. The pure and perfect combination of Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder makes all articles raised by it light, sweet,

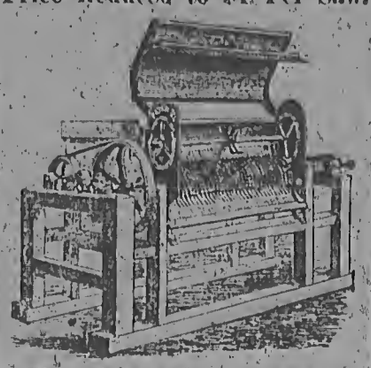
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4. Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past five seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work with the same time, while economizing steam or animal power than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every bale ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

SCIENTIFIC.

Prof. Ball, the Astronomer Royal of Ireland, read a paper lately on recent additions to our knowledge of shooting stars. In passing through the atmosphere, shooting stars are heated and fall in dust on the earth. "Though we may grumble," says the professor, "at our atmosphere in bad weather, we must recollect it at least does this: it burns up those stones that are pelting down upon us at the one-hundred times greater velocity of the missile of an eighty-one-ton gun, and but for this burning up would be at any rate awkward." The great showers of shooting stars are periodical; they come in the same parts of the heavens and are supposed to have some connection with comets. Meteorites are known to come from the path of a comet. They are like our own volcanic rocks, and the professor says they were driven up from our earth in the tremendous volcanic activity of a very remote past, and they again, after the lapse of ages, meet the earth in its orbit.

The planet Uranus is now very favorably situated for observation, though, except with a powerful telescope, there is very little to observe. It appears at present easily detected by the naked eye on a dark night, being the centre of two faint stars which lie in one and a half degrees north of the bright star Regulus. To the telescope it presents a pale bluish disk about one-fourth as large as that of Saturn, without markings or appearance of any kind. Telescopes less than eight inches in diameter would have no chance to show any of its satellites. With instruments of nine inches aperture a fairly good observer can, under favorable circumstances, see the two outermost ones. One and Titania (though in making measurements of their position would require a still larger aperture. The two inner satellites, Ariel and Umbriel, are beyond the reach of all but the most powerful telescopes. Even the great Washington Equatorial cannot always be seen.

"A great deal of interest is felt by astronomers in the transit of Mercury, which is to occur on the sixth of May, and will be visible all through the United States. The observations of this phenomenon will have a considerable value, by themselves considered, as giving a very precise determination of the planet's place; furnishing a severe test of the accuracy of Leverrier's tables, and especially of the reliability of the conclusions respecting an inequality in the planet or group of planets of the chief importance of the observations probably to be made upon the observations of the transit of Venus. The optical appliances must be nearly identical in the two cases; and hence a transit of Mercury affords an excellent practice way of preparation for the important event. By the 11th May a French banker, who appointed thirty thousand francs for the purpose, Messrs. Andrieu and Angot, two astronomers of distinction, have been sent to this country to make the necessary observations. They will take up their station at Oakland, near Portland, in New York State, and will begin about quarter past 4 in the morning and last until 8 in the evening.

"There is some interest was excited by a physiological circumstance in the flight of Mr. John Smith, of Cambridge, Massachusetts, called the Lilium auratum, of which a considerable quantity, here and there, was in bloom. We believe it was after that Hough suppressed the anthers of the plant, to prevent self-fertilization by means of pollen from the same flower, and was effected artificially. Whether this was possible, from all we have yet been able to learn, he could by any practice in fertilization without fertilization, is a question of great interest. Mr. Thomas Meehan took the matter in hand, and fertilized it with the pollen of Lilium superbum, a near ally, but not considered to be of the same species. Another plant was taken to expand the flower contact with its own pollen, and the result was watched with great interest. But there was not the slightest sign of a trace of the Passion flower. The progeny were exactly like the parent plant. The subject was discussed with the impression that a case of parthenogenesis, the plant in some way became self-fertile. Recently some similar experiments have fallen in the hands of Mr. Finkelman, the well-known botanist and botanist of Cambridge. He fertilized the common lily with the pollen of the Banded Lily (Lilium auratum) and he raised lily plants and hybrids from this that they were not a single flower—one fertilized seed-vessel gives many seeds. Nearly all the seeds and all were the same as the parent; but one had the feature of L. auratum. That one came to be made parent is a proof that pollen of the Gold-Banded Lily had the fertilization. There was no mistake supposed to have occurred in the case of the Disemina; but how the pollen of a distinct can be made to induce development of the germ, and yet have no further influence, is a puzzle. This hybrid was the only one effected by experiments which Mr. tried. The species operated the pollen of the L. auratum, L. superbum, L. Canadense, L. pardalinum, L. lancifolium, L. tigrinum, and "several other species," but, though every care was taken to prevent self-fertilization, no pollen except from the L. auratum, so far as known, came in contact with the pistil, the progeny purely of the character of their parents. It is not within the possibilities that the pollen was entirely useless, that the lilies produced practically without fertilization, as was suggested might have been the case in Calchogyne; but so nearly as incomprehensible there could have been fertilization and yet no trace of the male is visible. It offers a new problem in vegetable physiology.—Intellectual.

We have the best imitation Gold Watch in the market. The metal is a composition of other metals, so closely resembling gold that the best judges find it difficult to detect the difference, except by a chemical test, and it has the virtues requisite to make it the best substitute for gold known. Genuine American Movement, Expansion Balance, Beautifully Engraved or Engine Turned Hunting Cases and equal in appearance to a GOLD WATCH THAT COSTS from $150 to $200. If you wish a watch for your own use, or to make money on, try this. Owing to our large sales we are enabled to reduce the price of them to $1 each, with an elegant Chain attached. They are used on railroads, steamers and in manufactories, and other places where accurate time is required, and give general satisfaction. We send them by mail or express, on receipt of $12, (any part of the country) or, if will be sent C. O. D. when the customer desires and remits $1 on account. The same CHAINS weigh about Fifty Pennyweights, and the same pattern in pure gold would cost $50. We sell these Chains at $5 each. But we sell the Watch and Chain for $12, sent by mail in a registered package, post-paid, to any postoffice in the United States.
WE SELL THE WATCH WITHOUT THE CHAIN FOR $10.

SEWING MACHINES.

THE SINGER AGAIN TO THE FRONT!!

Great Reduction in the Prices

OF THE

WORLD-RENOWNED SINGER FAMILY SEWING MACHINE!

FOR CASH!!

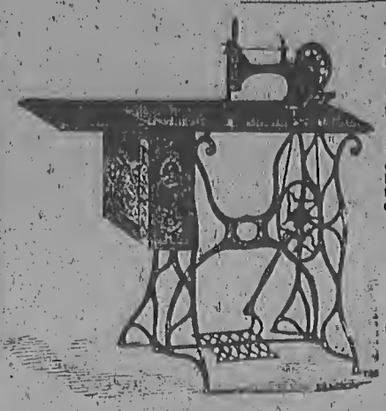

The Singer Manufacturing Company, ever awake to the interest of the public, have determined to put the price of their Machines within the reach of every man, woman and child in the land.

The Genuine Singer Sewing Machine is now Offered at Prices Below the Bogus Ones, or Any Other.

The fact that the only Sewing Machine which unscrupulous men have ever attempted to imitate is the Singer is sufficient evidence of its superiority over all others. There is no longer any excuse for buying any of the cheap Machines hawked about the country, with no claim for patronage but their cheapness.

BEWARE OF

Worthless Imitation Machines.

The Singer Will Last a Lifetime.

GALVESTON, May 1.—The News' Brownsville special says: On Friday last about two hundred men assembled at Lanorias, about eighteen miles from here, on the Corpus Christi road; from there they marched to Sangsdors, on the river, reaching there about three o'clock, on Saturday morning. There about fifty men attempted to cross the Rio Grande into Mexico. They were led by Raphael Lira. They were met by a party of regulars from Matamoras and a skirmish ensued, which resulted in the discomfiture of the conspirators eight of whom were made prisoners, two wounded and two killed, and three others were drowned in the river in their efforts to recross. It is thought the remainder of the band must have gone further up the river before attempting to cross. It is understood that one object of the raid was to intercept and capture Gen. Canales, who is on his way from Reynosa to Matamoras.

These Lerdistas were under the leadership of Colonels Murray and Christo, Carlos Devocke and Raphael Lira, two of those captured, were living in this city. Gen. Escobedo who has been stopping here for some time past, disappeared yesterday. His whereabouts is unknown. Two schooners sailed yesterday for Mexican ports, and it is possible he took passage on one of them.

ATLANTA, May 1.—The eighth General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South met to-day, Bishop Pierce presiding. There were present 248 delegates from 37 Conferences. All the bishops were present. The Conference was welcomed by Judge James Jackson, of the Supreme Court, and responses were made by Bishop Pierce and Bishop McTyeire. Standing committees were then appointed.

BATON ROUGE, May 1.—The first Louisiana State Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association closed its session in Baton Rouge last night. About fifty delegates were in attendance. The meeting was a very interesting one. Rev. C. Keener, of Alexandria, was elected president. Mr. Thomas K. Cree, of New York, represented the International Committee.

ALBANY N. Y., May 1.—John Morrissey is dead.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—The legislative and executive appropriation bill is now nearly finished, and only one or two important appropriation bills remain to be passed.

The Senate Judiciary Committee have perfected the phraseology of the bill to repeal the bankrupt law. Existing cases are saved by the bill, and acts of wrong-doing in respect to pending cases are to be punished; and, finally and briefly, the repeal will not take effect until January 1 1879. This is not satisfactory to the Kentucky and many other Senators, but the Senate will probably pass the bill in this shape on Monday next. The action of the House on this last amendment is uncertain, but it is believed that there will be a disagreement and a committee of conference to settle the matter finally.

GALVESTON, May 2.—News special: A telegram from Gen Switzer to Gen Ord says: The Mexican revolutionists crossed from Texas into Mexico on the night of April 27 at Petana, Capole and Lapalma, supposed to number three hundred, under the direction of Col Muncz of Escobedo's staff. It is the programme for a party to cross near Rio Grande City and take Camargo but it is not believed they will be able to do so. The garrisons at Mier and Matamoras are expected to pronounce against Diaz.

ATLANTA, May 2.—Additional delegates to the Methodist Episcopal General Conference arrived to-day. After a long debate Rev. David Morgan, of the Denver Conference, and Rev. John Hogan, delegate from the St. Louis Conference, were admitted the objections to their eligibility being merely technical. The organization of standing committees was completed this evening. The sessions are very largely attended.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—George L. Smith was confirmed to-day as collector of New Orleans without the slightest opposition. Both the Louisiana senators had expressed themselves in favor of his confirmation, and thus secured a favorable report from the committee and unanimous action by the Senate.

ATLANTA, May 3.—The morning session of the Methodist Episcopal General Conference was mainly taken up with a discussion of the eligibility of Logan D Dameron, a lay delegate from St. Louis. The matter is still pending. The Bishops' quadrennial address was read by Bishop Doggett. A communication from the Northern Methodist Church relative to holding a grand ecumenical council of the Methodist Church was received and referred.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, May 3.—An official telegram to Gen Ord says: A revolution has broken out in the States of Durango and Nuevo Leon. Gen. Tevino has been ordered to quell it. The garrisons of Matamoras and Mier are said to be on the point of pronouncing against Diaz. There is great excitement on the lower Rio Grande. Gen. Escobedo is here.

MINNEAPOLIS, May 3.—It was thought an earthquake when one of the great flour mills exploded. Seventeen were killed. Loss of property a million and a half. Cause—Gas generated by the manufacture of patent flour.

WASHINGTON, May 6.—The government here has no official information of the reported Fenian invasion of Canada in case of an Anglo-Russian war.

The President has nominated Stephen B. Packard, of Louisiana, to be consul at Liverpool.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds resolved to report favorably on Gen Manning's bill appropriating $50 000 for a federal courthouse at Oxford Miss.

GALVESTON, May 6.—A News special says an attempt was made by the revolutionists to oust the Diaz governor of Chihuahua, but it resulted in a failure. A number of conspirators are in jail, and others killed.

FOREIGN

BERLIN, April 30.—It is understood the ceremony of the betrothal of the Duke of Connaught, seventh child and third son of Queen Victoria, to Princess Louise third daughter of Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia will occur at Darmstadt on the ninth of May.

PARIS, May 1.—The International Exhibition of 1878 opened to-day with great eclat, the programme for the event heretofore made public being strictly carried out. At one time in the morning it was feared the ceremonies would be interfered with, as at nine o'clock rain was falling; but at 9:47 o'clock the rain ceased; at 11:30 the clouds broke and the sun shone out brilliantly. The weather, however, was rather hot.

President MacMahon reached the Exhibition at two o'clock in a state carriage, escorted by his military household. He was welcomed by M. Teissereire, and Dr. Bolt, minister of commerce, and declared the Exhibition open amid salvos of artillery and music by bands. The marshal then, at the head of a brilliant procession, which included the Prince of Wales, ex-King Amadeus, and the Crown Prince of Denmark and the Netherlands, proceeded throughout the Exhibition building.

The scene was picturesque and imposing in the extreme. State bodies in grand uniform, councilors and magistrates in their robes, and different bodies of the Institute and Legion of Honor stood in strong contrast with senators, deputies, clergy and minor officials in their civil costumes.

The Exhibition building was gayly decorated with flags of all nations. An immense crowd was in the vicinity. The American section, though unfinished, compares favorably with the others. The department of manufactures shows the least progress. The American art department is the best ever shown abroad by America.

ROME, May 4.—The Congregation of Cardinals, which was directed to study the Prussian ecclesiastical May laws, in order to pronounce whether they are acceptable to the church, is understood to have arrived at decisions calculated to greatly facilitate the re-establishment of relations between Germany and the Vatican. It is stated that the congregation has expressed the opinion that the May laws have been, to a certain extent, misinterpreted.

LONDON, May 6.—Parliament was reopened to-day.

The British government has ordered a million pounds weight of lint, and other appliances for the wounded.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE FEMALE COLLEGE.—Mr. Editor: Please state that the exercises of the commencement of the Alabama Conference Female College will begin on Sunday, June 16. The sermon will be preached by Dr. C. W. Price, president of Huntsville Female College. The literary address will be delivered by D. M. Callaway, Esq., of Selma, Ala. The public generally, and especially the ministers of the Alabama Conference, are solicited to attend our commencement. The college is doing well. Yours truly,

JOHN MASSEY.

TUSCUMBIA, ALA., April 25, 1878.

DEADENING INFLUENCE OF FASHION.—It is among the children of light employment and unsettled life that we must look for stony-hearted men—not in the world of business; not among the poor, crushed to the earth by privations and sufferings. That hardens the character, but often leaves the heart soft. "If you wish to know what hollowness and heartlessness are, you must seek for them in the world of light, elegant, unperturbed fashion, where frivolity has turned the heart into a rock-bed of selfishness. Say what man will of the heartlessness of trade, it is nothing compared with the heartlessness of fashion. Say what they will of the atheism of science, it is nothing to the atheism of that round of pleasure in which the heart lives—dead while it lives.—Rev. A. B. Robertson.

On one occasion a man who considered himself religious, but who was known by his neighbors to be rather "hard," asked a young lad if he would go with him a day to lift posts. He was a little nettled at receiving an answer in the negative, and turning sternly to the lad, said to him: "Do you know your Bible tells you give up your pride to be humble, and to work?" "I know all that," was the ready answer, "but my Bible doesn't tell me to go to your posts."

PROCEEDINGS OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.

FIRST DAY.

WEDNESDAY, May 1, 1878.

The eighth General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South began its session in the First church, Atlanta, Ga., on Wednesday, May 1, 1878, at ten o'clock A. M.

All the Bishops were present except Bishop Paine.

Bishop Pierce took the chair.

The session was opened by the singing of hymn 625, read by Bishop Wightman:

"O thou, who comest from above."

Bishop McTyeire then led in prayer.

Bishop Pierce read Psalm cxiv. and Bishop Kavanaugh a part of Philippians ii.

Bishop Paine entered during the reading of the lessons, having been detained on the road by the burning of a bridge.

Bishop Doggett then gave out hymn 904 which was sung by the Conference:

"Try us, O God, and search the ground."

C. K. Marshall then led in prayer.

J. E. Evans asked and obtained leave of absence to attend a funeral service.

Bishop Pierce being in the chair, called on the secretary of the last Conference to call the list of the Annual Conferences; and vouchers for the delegates elect were furnished.

There were 237 members present, being more than a quorum.

On motion of N. H. Lee, Thomas O. Summers, of the Alabama Conference, was elected secretary; and on his motion A. G. Haygood, of the North Georgia Conference, was elected assistant secretary.

The Hon. James Jackson, judge of the Supreme Court of Georgia, substituting the Governor, who was unavoidably absent from the capital, addressed the Conference.

Mr. Jackson said: I regret, and at the same time I am gratified to say to the Conference that the Governor of Georgia, upon whom devolved the task, which has been assigned me, of welcoming this body to the hospitalities of our old State, is necessarily absent, and will not be present until to-morrow.

It is an agreeable duty to extend these hospitalities to the reverend bishops, and to the brethren, clerical and lay, around you from all parts of our beloved country.

It is not altogether inappropriate that the words of welcome, instead of coming from the executive, should be uttered by one of our judiciary. If I understand your organism, this is not an executive, but is some sort of a judicial body—a high Court of Appeal in our ecclesiastical polity. In another and more important sense the bishops and the brethren—the judicial talent—is essential here, for you are under a constitution, and you must be judges of constitutional law. Unlike that constitution which overshadows the great American republic, and by which we in Georgia are governed, your constitution is the fiat of the Almighty, and the limits within which your action is confined is the word of Jehovah. God Almighty has written with his own fingers upon the tablets of stone the chart by which you are governed. The construction of that chart—its judicial exposition and obligations—you are called to legislate upon, and to that you are entitled. I am glad the founder of our church announced himself all through his life as homo unius libri—a man of one book.

All the General Rules of the Methodist derive their sanctity and power from the one book of God Almighty. But why talk to you, venerable and reverend brethren, in this strain? You have that book; you study it year by year, and have it written upon the fleshly tablets of your hearts by the Spirit of God, who long ago wrote this immortal law.

As a judge I rejoice to speak to judges on behalf of the chief magistrate of Georgia—a man whom the Christians of this State love—a meek, humble child of Jesus. In behalf of our officers, executive, judicial and legislative; in behalf of the mayor and aldermen of Atlanta; in behalf of the officials of this capital city; in behalf of every gray-headed man of every full-hearted man, in this State; in behalf of every bald whose cheek is smooth and ruddy; in behalf of our blessed matrons and all our bounds lassies, I give you, one and all, a cordial welcome to our homes and hearts. (Applause.)

It is true, Mr. President and brethren, we cannot receive you in a room so vast and extensive as that in which you were welcomed in Louisville four years ago. We receive you in this plain room, the basement of our old-fashioned Methodist church, where the "amen" benches are on each side of the altar, and from many a heart an "amen" goes up to the great Savior of sinners. We receive you in a place much better adapted for the convenience of your business than that house where our fathers received Asbury and the few pioneers of Methodism in the first Conference in Georgia, about one hundred miles a little southeast of this spot. That first Conference, as tradition informs us, was held at the residence of Thomas Grant. I do not know what sort of a house it was—perhaps a log house. Anyhow Methodism rooted itself in the soil of Georgia. Thank God, the tree has grown until it has extended its branches and covers the whole State. (Applause.) Thirteen clerical and thirteen lay delegates represent Georgia Methodism here, and to unite heart and hand in the welcome I give our brethren to-day. (Applause.)

Mr. President, in return for this welcome in behalf of our executive, our mayor, our officers, State and city, of all these men and women and all their little ones, we ask but one thing: You are men who have power with God; give us your prayers; leave your blessings upon our land when you go; let them be ours, and we shall be abundantly requited for all the efforts to make your sojourn both pleasant and agreeable. (Amen.)

Judge Jackson alluded to some of the details in the arrangements for the convenience and comfort of the Conference, and added: At each side door and in the vestibule you will find pure water, which we can take with clean hands and a conscience void of offense toward God and man. (Applause.)

He also mentioned rooms in the capitol for the committees, and mentioned the courtesy of our Baptist brethren, who offered the lecture-room of their church for similar use.

He closed by saying: I believe from this audience of Christians from all the churches, from every section, from every good man and woman, prayers will ascend to the Father of us all that his blessing may be upon your heads and labors, and that he will take care of your wives and little ones while you are absent in the discharge of your great work.

In the name of my countrymen of Georgia, I bid the Conference welcome! (Applause.)

Judge Jackson mentioned in addition that some clever boys had volunteered to act as pages without compensation.

Mr. Marshall (in his seat:) May they become members of a Conference like this.

Bishop Pierce said that on a formal occasion like this the pleasure would devolve upon him, as chairman, to reply to the salutation of welcome; but though not a resident of Atlanta, yet a native and citizen of Georgia, he felt it proper rather to re echo the voice of welcome than to respond to it. My honorable friend and brother, Judge Jackson, was appointed by the churches to perform this pleasing service of welcome. He is the representative of the church and citizenship of the city. I come from the people. I wish the Conference to understand that this voice is not the voice of Atlanta alone, but the voice of the great Methodist Church in Georgia, as well as the citizens of the State. I decline to say more, but beg to devolve the duty of responding upon one of my colleagues—Bishop McTyeire.

Bishop McTyeire said:

Judge Jackson, and friends of Georgia and Atlanta:

I could wish Bishop Pierce might be as fortunate in his substitute as Gov. Colquitt. (Applause.) We hear with pleasure, but not with surprise, the welcome that has been given us so eloquently by the worthy brother, whose words have touched our hearts, though we have heard words of welcome before in this State. Many of us cannot forget the last time we met in Georgia, twenty-four years ago, at Columbus. The church has cause to remember that session with gratitude to God. It was a privileged occasion. We then, sir, had a foretaste of Georgia's hospitality on the edge of the State. We owed a great deal to Alabama. (Laughter.) But now we are in the heart of the State, and Georgia will have all the credit.

It was, sir, on that occasion I cast my first vote in a General Conference, and had the great pleasure of helping the church to the services—but it did not need my help; it would have been done without it—in the episcopacy of one of the eminent sons of Georgia—Dr. George F. Pierce. (Applause.)

Sir, there could not be a better place for the session of a General Conference of Wesleyan Methodists, in the year of grace 1878, than Georgia. John Wesley preached in Georgia. In this State he labored and prayed, and was taught of the Spirit, and fell in that marvelous manner history tells of. Could he, sir, have had the vision of one hundred and forty years when he left the soil of Georgia, disheartened—almost broken-hearted—could it have been revealed to him on leaving Georgia, and and in tears, that at the capital of the State there would be gathered three hundred delegates of Wesleyan Methodism, representing its doctrinal purity, how he would have rejoiced! Nothing is impossible with God. The difference between that day and this ought to make us hope and labor for great things.

Why did he not succeed at that time? It was because he was a ritualist, a formalist. He had not touched the spring he was feeling after—the spring and power of a heart-felt religion—a conscious experience of sins forgiven, and the witness of the Holy Spirit. God led him by the way of Georgia to find these things for us. I heard an old missionary, far out in the West, tell the story of a converted Shawnee, dying of consumption, whose last words were uttered in the Indian tongue. The preacher asked an interpreter what the dying man said. These were the words: "Wesley is right—Wesley is right?" (Amens.) Could he who came to convert the Indians, and found himself unconverted, have dreamed it possible that an Indian, fifteen hundred miles in the interior of the country which he only skirted, led by the doctrine and saved by the gospel Wesley's sons had carried—dying with these words, how John Wesley's heart would have warmed. (A delegate: "Hallelujah!")

The Methodist delegates, so felicitously welcomed by a Georgian to Georgia hospitality, come not only from the west of the Mississippi, but I heard some answer to roll-call whom I last saw under the snow of the Rocky Mountains. They are here. One answered whom I left working in Walla Walla, on Columbia river. Some responded that hear every day, at their homes, the sound of the Pacific surf. Here are Wesleyans from beyond the Potomac and the Rio Grande. Two sun-browned missionaries are here, representing four thousand Modocs and twenty-odd Indian preachers, who are yonder in the Indian Territory, to-day, singing Charles Wesley's hymns. But we thank God that Wesley ever lived and came to Georgia. It is a good place for Methodists to come.

Surely no legislation can take place here that will lessen the spirituality of Methodism. And may all that we do in 1878 have reference to the spread of scriptural holiness over these lands! (Amens.)

To Judge Jackson and the committee for whom he has spoken, allow me, Mr. President, in behalf of this General Conference, to say: We accept the hospitality so generously and eloquently tendered. Our Master, sir, knew that in sending us out we would have to depend upon the hospitalities of the people. He knew that in doing his errands his servants could not always pay board-bills and for hotel accommodations, and he made provision for us in the words of the Scripture: "Whosoever shall receive a prophet in the name of a prophet, shall have a prophet's reward." I have no doubt, sir, that word has opened ten thousand hospitable doors to God's servants. He said: If any one gave us a cup of cold water in the name of a disciple, he shall not loose his reward. That short verse has paid the board bill of thousands of itinerants. (Applause.) and left the people richer than it found them. I say to these brethren: We have come on the Master's errand. I trust we are his servants, his sons, his disciples. We meet in his name.

The Master has told us another thing: When, on his business, you enter a house say: "Peace be to this house." Our brethren will not forget to say this at every family altar, in their private prayer and in their hearts. (Amen.)

We come to the State of Christians—to the City of Churches. Peace be within thy walls and prosperity within thy palaces! For my brethren and companions' sake, I now say: Peace be with thee. (Amen.)

The following resolution was then offered and adopted:

Resolved, That the standing committees be composed of one delegate from each Annual Conference, to be nominated by their respective delegations, and that the said committees be as follows:

1. On Episcopacy.
2. On Itinerancy.
3. On Publishing Interests.
4. On Boundaries.
5. On Missions.
6. On Revisal.
7. On Sunday School.
8. On Education.

P. A. PETERSON,
J. M. BOLAND.

On motion of E. E. Wiley the chair was requested to appoint a Committee on Introductions, to be composed of three clerical and three lay delegates.

The chair appointed the following members on said committee: E. E. Wiley, J. E. Evans, J. E. Edwards, C. K. Marshall, A. H. Colquitt, T. L. Mellen.

The exhibit of the book agent and the reports of the Board of Missions were presented to the Conference.

On motion the rules of order of the last Conference were adopted for the present.

The Conference adjourned with the doxology, and the benediction by Bishop Paine.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met at the time appointed.

Bishop Paine in the chair.

N. H. Lee conducted all vine service by reading Psalm cxl, and the hymn, "A charge to keep I have," and offering prayer.

The minutes of the morning session were read, corrected and approved.

Bishop Kavanaugh took the chair.

The following resolution was then offered, read and adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That we hereby express our deep sorrow at the intelligence which has reached us of the deaths of two lay delegates elect to this Conference, to wit: the Rev. J. C. Wills, of the Missouri Conference, and R. P. McKenny, of the North-west Texas Conference.

W. F. COOK,
H. J. ADAMS.

On motion of H. F. Johnson a Committee on the Bible Cause, consisting of five members, to be appointed by the chair, was ordered; also a similar Committee on Temperance.

The chair appointed the following on the Committee on the Bible Cause: H. F. Johnson, A. B. Stark, R. W. Lovett, T. S. Mooneman, J. M. Bell.

The Committee on Temperance was also amended, as follows: J. H.

"STATIA."

God hath his temples by no human hand
Hewn in the ageless rocks. And there his voice
Is heard in tempest, as the rushing noise
Of many waters; there great columns stand
Finished, in order, like the wave-worked sand
On Eastern shores, where strangest forms rejoice
In rarest hues of beauty. Ours no choice
But bend in worship, reverently, till land
And sea seem mingled in one element,
Inspiring rarer heatings of the heart.
Such art thou, Statia! where we look on art
Foretell in nature, till fine issues lent:
Great awe creeps o'er us while we list the sway
Of ocean waters as they bar the way.

—Lord Byron.

Sketch of Rev B. M. Drake, D. D

NUMBER VI.

The voice at midnight came
He started up to hear.
A mortal arrow pierced his frame
He fell—but felt no fear.

From 1855 till 1859 Dr. Drake's work was on the Vicksburg district, which differed little, save in name, from that of the previous year. It gave him Warren circuit, instead of Bayou Pierre, and an additional charge—eleven in all—the one nearest home, being thirty-two miles. Arranging his appointments so as to economize time, he was often absent four or five weeks consecutively, supplying his absence, as far as possible, by a constant correspondence. He traveled mostly by private conveyance, penetrating into the "by-ways and hedges," preaching in the week where there was opportunity; visiting pastorally from house to house—the poor, the sick, the widows and fatherless—making no distinction of caste—praying with equal fervor in the sumptuous apartments of the rich, the cottage of the poor, or the cabin of the sick negro. His cheerfulness and social qualities made him a welcome visitant, and he tried to be "all things to all men, that he might save some." He also held children's meetings, which were interesting, and resulted in much good. His young preachers loved his company and sought his counsel. Hospitable to the extent of his ability, he said that to them the door of his cottage had only a latch, and the string was on the outside.

He was courteous to brethren of other churches, and bade them God-speed in the work of saving souls. Without bigotry or hostility to others, he preferred Methodism as it was in the days of Asbury. Claiming no "divine right" for its institutions, and conscious that "to err is human," it was yet his conscientious belief that its doctrines and usages were most in accordance with the letter and spirit of the gospel, and mighty, through God, to the pulling down the strongholds of satan. He thought that the changes that were being introduced, however they might work with other systems, would produce the dissolution of ours; that the pew system would say to his poor brother: "Stand thou there, or sit down under my footstool;" that organs and choirs, beside other evils, would, save in a few exempt cases, destroy congregational singing, and prevent obedience to the injunction: "Let all the people praise thee." That it might be in their power to do so, he preferred to live the itinerancy where there were many in a congregation without books. He thought it best to encourage general attention to vocal music by singing by rote and competent instructors. He thought that lay delegation would render the machinery more complicated, and for other reasons did not prefer it. If his assessment was not always fully paid, it did not occur to him that it was the fault of the system, but of the imperfect manner in which it was operated. He believed that to work the old system well was better than to try new experiments. He thought worldly amusements antagonistic to spirituality. On this score, and for other cogent reasons, he was opposed to fairs, though they were not then countenanced by the churches as they are now, nor had they so far progressed in the infidel one gambling now carried on, under the guise with some of benevolence, and with others of value received in selfish gratification, instead of giving cheerfully, and as of the ability which God giveth. "They don't remedy stinginess in a church, but aggravate the disease," and are, doubtless, such "calling of assemblies as our Maker cannot away with." The success of Methodism depends on the consecration of its ministry and membership. There lies the secret. May God grant to his watchmen power so to wield the sword of the Spirit that the sinner, seeing it, may fly to Calvary, and that the membership may be convinced that if they love the world the love of the Father is not in them; lest any, being deceived, they knock at the gate of heaven, may be conveyed by the "shining ones," "the by-way" to the door Bunyan saw. "In the hill-side," and thrust into the place the existence of which some profess to doubt. That is more than a dream.

The rapidity of Dr. Drake's movements and the variety of his ministrations on this district would seem incredible, but that they are demonstrated beyond doubt. Only an occasional specimen will be given. In 1857 he first commences to report neuralgic headaches. In August he is beyond his district, near Sharon, at camp meeting, and baptizing the children of friends. In November, at Brownsville, his meetings were discouraged by weather, political excitement, and a violent case of yellow fever—a stranger, who died. But he says, "I sow in hope." During the epidemic in the fall he again ministered to the sick. On the way to Waterproof, October 1, where his son was ill of yellow fever, he writes from Natchez: "I got here just in time to see Bro. Fly breathe his last. All was peace and assurance. I sent a nurse to Mr. King. Shall be off in a few minutes."

In February, 1858, he writes to his wife that, being detained by the boat, he was too late for the eleven-o'clock service on Saturday; Bro. Marshal had preached; visited Sister Lane; says: "I have kept well, through mercy. Will try to work the best I can, to lay up that common stock we have in heaven. Full half will be yours. 'She that tarried at home divided the spoil!'"

During the summer, from unusual exertion of the arms and chest, the first attack came on of the disease which proved fatal. It was alarming for an hour or two, but soon passed off, and he had no return for nearly a year. The intervals became gradually shorter, and attacks came mostly when absent from home, and were more frequent during the last few months.

In April, 1858, he writes to a son during a revival at Centenary College: "I cannot express the anxiety I feel in your meeting and in your success. I trust you will not give place to discouragement. Earnestly resolve never to give up the struggle. Read the history of the crucifixion. Though he tarry, wait for him. The day will break." In July of this year, in company with Dr. Watkins, and on the way to commencement in Jackson, La., he turned aside and made his last visit to Dr. Winans. He attends the Annual Conference at Kosciusko in November, and from there gives a lively description of the journey, particularly from Canton, through mud and rain, in company with Bishop Pierce and others. In the winter of 1857 he left home on horseback, attending his appointments on the route, and writes from Vicksburg, January 12: "This is to inform you that I am neither drowned nor frozen, though I have had a good chance for both." He regrets the prevalence of worldly amusements, and the constant effort necessary to keep things straight.

He had long desired in some way to honor the memory of Tobias Gibson, and had spoken to a number of his relatives (not aware that there were any very near) on the subject of a monument and memorial services, and received their approbation, and also that of the preachers, who contributed the money. Having to attend, in April, an educational convention in Nashville, just before leaving he selected a marble slab, such as had been used for Dr. Leavel and others, and left it for the inscription. While on the boat he writes: "It is lamentable how much there is for sin and how little for holiness on our public conveyances." Just as he was about to leave Nashville he received intelligence that two of Mr. Gibson's nearest relatives protested against having the plain monument he had selected set up. Whether from inadvertence, misunderstanding or why, does not appear. There was no other proposal made to him. He feared he had appeared officious, and there would have been no time for consultation, as the celebration was appointed to come on immediately after his return. In this dilemma he saw no alternative but simply and quickly to recall the appointment, which he did through newspapers and by letter. He had hoped for much good, but bore the disappointment and its results with the Christian submission which was one of his strong characteristics. Though he was seldom influenced by dreams, he wrote to Dr. Winans of one he had in the winter of this year. He thought himself and his friend were entering heaven together. He first thought he would find his parents, but was attracted by a happy group—his five children who had died. Glancing upward, he saw Bro. Steele, as if looking over a wall, who said: "Give yourselves no trouble. I'll have it all arranged." Dr. Winans answers, under date of February 10, 1857: "Your affectionate letter of the second instant was 'like cold water to a thirsty soul.' For more than thirty years our intercourse has been more than usually intimate, and our relations almost as various as the official relations of Methodist preachers could be. We have alternately commanded and obeyed; have stood side by side on the same plane; we have sustained each other in maintenance of the same views, and sometimes have wrestled vigorously with each other on behalf of different views. Momentary pangs of wounded feeling may have resulted from these conflicts, but no serious disturbance of our friendship; and now at this late period there are not three men in the world who claim an equality in my friendly regard with yourself. ——, ——. I dare not indulge a wish in such matters; but it would be among the greatest pleasures I could enjoy to know that your dream would be realized to the letter—that you and I should together ascend the hill of the Lord; that together we should for the first time bow before the unveiled glory of the adorable Redeemer, as we have so often labored and suffered together in his cause. * * * God grant to us an eternity in which to consummate our earth-born friendship."

This year, having six children at home, Dr Drake carried out, on a small scale, a manual labor school. A portion of land was assigned to four sons, aged fifteen, thirteen, eleven and nine years. Freeland, who graduated the previous fall, superintended the farm, and continued the preparation of the two elder brothers for college, and their sister taught the two younger till the fall of 1858. They studied four hours in a day and worked four, and succeeded well with their crop and studies.

In the spring Dr. Drake had written to his friend, Mr. Winbourne, to meet him in Memphis. The invitation was received too late. In June Mr. Winbourne wrote a beautiful and touching letter, regretting the disappointment and expressing gratification that, amid the many claims to his attention, Dr. Drake had remembered his early friend.

August 19 Dr. Drake writes from Jackson, Miss.: "I have had a good meeting here. On Sunday I preached at eleven and administered the Lord's Supper; walked half a mile and administered the same ordinance to the sick; returned at four and preached to the blacks—assisted in administering the sacrament to nearly two hundred; held love-feast at eight; retired at ten, not a little weary. But God preserves me. This may be the last flare-up of the expiring taper."

September 14, to Mrs. Wall, in reference to attending Dr. Winans' funeral: "I had declined being at Bethel simply on the ground that I was not able to stand the fatigue of the journey; but, were the difficulty ten-fold, to meet the slightest wish of your mother I would not hesitate. I have never felt such a sense of desolation, even when my own father was taken. O how these lines ring in my ear:

"'Like a summer-dried fountain,
When our need was the sorest.'"

The following extract is from a slip of paper in Dr. Drake's handwriting, without date: "I am a pilgrim and stranger, as were all my fathers." He names the instructors of his youth, who were no more, and continues: "I find myself associated with a goodly company of the redeemed, who are urging their onward way. They, too, are fast disappearing. Where, now, are Kennon, Griffin, Harper, Nash (and others he names?) Where are my truest and dearest yoke-fellows, Lane and Winans? Echo mocks me from the dark, phosphorescent vault: 'Where are they?' I listen still, and I hear a voice from heaven, saying: 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, they rest from their labors.' My friends are not lost. Looking intently from whence the voice came, I see a great multitude, which no man can number, out of every nation and kindred. I hear the loud shout: 'Salvation and glory and honor to our God forever and ever! Amen.' Now I see them in glorious procession. At their head is the Lamb from the midst of the throne. He leads them to living fountains of water, and wipes every tear from their eyes. There my friends are found, for 'I see a world of spirits bright.'"

January, 1858, Dr. Drake wrote to consult his sister and brothers in reference to having a family meeting at her house. The plan was approved by all parties. In February he again requests Mr. Winbourne to meet him in Memphis, where he expected to stop on the way to the General Conference: "Do not fail to come. It would almost renew my youth to have that pleasure. But, oh! the gray hair, the dim eye, the slow step say that I shall have to wait till the morning of the resurrection for the renewal of my youth. * * * Thank God, I am still able to do a little in his cause. I traveled a large district last year; did not miss a single appointment."

His accounts in May include many exciting debates, which, together with committees, trenched upon the hours of sleep. He offered a resolution on uniformity in public worship, which was laid on the table; presented his report on education; reports the slavery clause stricken out; officers elected, but no bishop; spent two Sabbaths at his sister's, and preached to a large congregation of relatives, and parted with them for the last time. Thirty-nine members of the Drake family took tea together one evening.

Before the Annual Conference he wrote against multiplying book depositories. He thought it would require a great deal of money to succeed—more than it would be possible to collect; that the failure would react and be unfavorable to the whole Concern; that their establishment was recommended hastily and under great pressure. He thought "calm confidence and vigorous effort would have restored all." "What the result will be time alone can answer." In some places this year he was much encouraged; at others, he said, "he was hammering the rock, hoping it would break." In November he writes: "Things close up pleasantly on some of the appointments. This ends sixteen years on districts. I think I might be excused. I feel like I was almost through."

In 1859 he was on the Washington circuit, which included Union chapel, near his residence; had more time at home which he devoted to his farm and domestic arrangements, and cheerful, affectionate correspondence with his absent children, giving them wise counsel and encouragement. To Steele, who wished subjects for a speech, he names several, advising him to read certain works and inform himself well, saying: "The best eloquence is an opulence of facts, or thorough acquaintance with the subject."

Dr. Drake was unsurpassed in the relations of son, husband, father, brother and friend. He was a kind master. Even now his memory is held in love and veneration by the colored people. In youth, except too much protrusion of the mouth, he was considered remarkably handsome. His features and the formation of his head were strikingly intellectual. His eyes, of darkest hazel, shaded by long, dark lashes, had a brilliant expression, varying with every emotion. His hair was dark and fine, curling whenever permitted to grow. His form, slender in youth, filled out, as life advanced, in better proportion to his age.

November 17, 1859 he writes from Jackson, Miss., that, but for the distance from the Conference room, he was lodged at the place he would prefer. "We have no bishop." On the second ballot I was elected president of the Conference. I will try to do my duty in the best way I can." He had intended to take a superannuated relation at this time, but was again persuaded to take a district.

In February, 1860, while attending his work in Claiborne county, he was taken with pneumonia at Dr. Jones'. The doctor was called to the dying bed of his brother. Dr. Drake was not able to move; was kindly nursed by the overseer and servants; was much alone, and thought he might die from home, but felt great peace and submission; gives an account of that, and his frightful disease, to his sons, and hopes they will be able to finish their education; continues his appointments; preached at Union chapel April 13. He had an appointment to colored people on the twenty-second, about twelve miles from home, but wrote to a friend, instead, that his disease was worse: "Disease of the heart. I have but little doubt. My horse was saddled and I on the point of leaving when the pain and paralyzing feeling became so great that I gave up the trip. It is a solemn crisis in my history. It would seem the great Head of the church is about to lay me aside. Good is his will. I will try to acquiesce. I know he can do without me. His workmen fall by the thousand, but still his work goes on. I feel a remarkable peace and submission this morning." He asks for the prayers of Bro. F. and family, that he "might glorify God in life or death." He preached again on the twenty-ninth at Union chapel, from: "And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus." It was the first time he realized that preaching aggravated his disease. A spasm came on after he reached home, but soon passed off. On Wednesday following he went with his wife to Natchez. Many friends said to him: "How well you look!" He prayed with the sick in two families, and in one of them performed the rite of baptism for the last time. An attack came on as he was about to start home. He went part of the way that evening, and the next morning stopped in Washington and prayed for the sick child of the circuit preacher. Further on they met Dr. Watkins, to whom he said: "I am ready, with or without the warning." To his son Winans he had written from Natchez, May 2: "It is not long till July. I hope we will meet then. I hope you and Steele will make yourselves useful among the new converts." To his brother, Gen. Drake, of Indianapolis, he wrote two days before his death. He referred pathetically to the scenes of childhood and youth, and the uninterrupted love which had ever existed between them; refers to the disease in his chest, and says: "Some of the doctors think it neuralgia of the heart, and think it may be relieved. I am for the first time detained by it from the duties of my district. This is certain: If it gets much worse it will be fatal, and it is increasing all the time. I am now subject to spasms which threaten immediate death. They seldom last more than twenty or thirty minutes. When the attack passes off I am tolerably comfortable. Sometimes I feel quite well. My appetite is good, and my appearance as usual. It does not depress my spirits, save when the pain is excruciating. I rejoice to say I look at death without terror; and though I should be pleased to see my children reared and educated, and do a little in the cause of my divine Master, I can say from my heart: 'God is his will.' I have no regrets for any sacrifice I have made. Forty-one years of toil have been already paid with so many blessings that I am thankful I have been counted worthy to suffer for the name of Christ. I would not give my hope of heaven for the most magnificent estate ever got together by a mortal." He refers to each of his children; says Magruder and Perry are at a good school near home; that his daughter was all he could wish, and concludes by referring to the blessed fraternal band forming in heaven, and hopes to hear from him once more.

On Sunday, May 6, he was more sad than usual; spoke of the large congregation assembling at Rocky Springs, and said: "I am not there. I can't reproach myself." He saw his children off to the Presbyterian church, and said to his wife: "Come in and let me read you a beautiful chapter." Read the thirty-third of Deuteronomy. On the morning of the seventh he seemed cheerful, rode to the field, and seemed interested in his crop; wrote to his sons in Waterproof and St. Joseph, and said to Freeland: "I know not what will be the result of my disease. I ought to be prepared for the worst. I trust I am. * * * I rejoice that I have two sons fully grown and able to be the protectors of mother, sister and brothers. Could not you come over?"

In the evening he walked with his wife to the orchard opening from the yard. As he rose from supper, having taken but little food that day, a violent spasm came on. He did not or could not speak while they were on; but as this passed off he said: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." He said he would rest in his easy chair till the children finished studying. He asked his wife to have prayers, and then walked, without faltering, to his bed-room; wound and hung up his watch, and retired as usual. He was supposed to sleep for an hour or two, and then appeared in prayer, speaking occasionally. Once he said: "I have served him so long and so sincerely, I know he won't forsake me. Even now his promises comfort me." He then repeated the lines:

"Faith sees the bright, eternal doors
Unfold, to make his children way."

At nearly midnight he rose and sat on the bedside, saying he had fever and his mouth was dry. Water was brought. He then rose and sat in an easy chair, making several remarks; then saying, "Let me get back to bed," walked without faltering, and lay with his face a little turned from his wife, who had sat down to watch. In a few minutes a sound was heard which could not be mistaken. She ran and spoke to him. He turned his eyes toward her, then heavenward, and closed them. "The vital spark had sought its kindred sky." "They that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." The funeral services were conducted on the ninth, by Dr. Watkins and Rev. J. G. Jones. A sermon by the former was afterward preached at Union chapel, and by others elsewhere. Tributes to his memory from friends will next conclude this lengthened sketch. The first is from Rev. C. C. Gillespie's editorial, May 18, 1860:

"Dr. Drake served the church long, faithfully and devotedly. He was an admirable specimen of the Methodist preacher of the early times—simple, courteous and refined in private life, and dignified, spiritual and solemnly reverend in the pulpit. He was an excellent model for our young ministers. The love and admiration of him, wherever he was known, were seldom surpassed. He was a man of solid and earnest character, and of fixed principles and unswerving purposes. His manners were gentle, his form noble, his voice fine, his style chaste and fluent, and his whole bearing elegant, commanding and impressive. He was an able and eloquent minister of the New Testament."

The following is from the pen of Rev. E. C. Slater, May 27, 1860:

"There, my brother, was a man for you! Of noble presence, of commanding talents, of social virtues, wise in council, abundant in labors, a successful minister—his death unseals the sympathies of all that knew him."

Under date of May 16 a friend in New Orleans writes:

"It has been a source of happiness to us that we have been so situated as to enjoy the society and friendship of two such great and good men as Bro. Drake and Bro. Winans—Elisha and Elijah. Upon whom will their mantles fall? Shall we ever see their like again on this earth? Their prayers are still around us, and will help us to be faithful till our work is done, and we are called home too. I am so thankful for Bro. Drake's last visit. I did not know then why it made such an impression on my heart. He said so many kind and encouraging things in a few minutes, kneeled down with the children all around him, and offered such a good, affectionate prayer for us all that his visit seemed like a perfect sunbeam, which left its light on all our hearts. J. W."

We add one more of the many tributes from Dr. Drake's friends:

"MAY 9, 1878.

"He was my early, best-loved friend—the counselor, the consoler. God had blessed him with rare qualities, and grace had refined and sanctified them. All these gifts and graces had been used with a singular devotion to the one purpose of glorifying God and doing good to men. Thus he labored for his Master, till he ripened for his inheritance; and when the weary laborer needed rest the Master took him home—home to his Father's house—home to share the inheritance of the saints in glory everlasting! We weep here because we see his face no more! But to-day there is no more sorrow—no more toil. He who wept with those who weep shall have all tears wiped from his eyes forever. Oh, forever! Yesterday there was life and the pain of dying! To-day there is life for evermore!" She refers to a visit from Dr. Drake and his prayer with the family, and continues: "We knelt in the shadows of the trees, and while the twilight gathered round us he prayed—prayed for the aged and the young—prayed as only he ever prayed; and a part of the prayer was that we, who met almost certainly for the last time, might meet in heaven. Four of that number are already enjoying its fullness; and now he, in so many of a messenger of strength and consolation, while his eye was bright and his form erect, and while not a faculty was dimmed or destroyed, hears the voice of his Lord! The welcome summons catches his ear, and he is forever with the Lord. We will follow his saintly steps.

OBITUARIES.

Correspondents, please write names and dates very distinctly. We follow copy in proper names. Obituary notices should be forwarded promptly and immediately. Give only points of interest, such as will help the living. Long funeral services, and such phrases as "mourn their loss," etc., are not edifying. Verses, whether original or select, not admissible in this department. Give the locality distinctly and in full. In the case of infants only a simple announcement of the death, with names and dates, will be published.

☞ All obituaries received are published as soon as convenient. If, after a reasonable time, such communication fail to appear, let a copy be sent instead of a complaint.

SISTER MARY H. WILLIAMS, whose maiden name was Trusdel, was born in Kershaw district, S. C., and, though having the advantage of religious parentage, early life, like Mary of old she chose the better part, and sought first the kingdom of God and his righteousness in the third year of her age, and united herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Little Rock. She was twice married, and was the mother of twelve children. In her last marriage, to Rev. Eli Williams, a local preacher, who preceded her to the city of rest many years, she lived forty-five years to adorn the doctrines of her Master in all the relations of life. For eighteen years she was a great sufferer with consumption, and, like the apostle, she often expressed a desire to depart and be at rest; nevertheless, she was ever willing to suffer her Master's will. No murmurings escaped her lips, but, like the apostle, she had not only learned to do the will of the Lord, but to suffer his will; and evincing the great truth of the gospel that it is the power of God unto salvation. Many a pious life ever be in remembrance by her children, that the family may be gathered into the saints' rest above, where no pain, sorrow, sickness or death will be felt, but where God and the saints will forever reign.

It is worthy of special observation that the Scriptures are distinguished from all other writings, pretending to inspiration, by the strong and frequent recommendation of knowledge, and a spirit of inquiry. Without reflection it is evident that neither the one can be acquired nor the other exercised.—S. T. Coleridge.

THE FOUNTAIN.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

Into the sunshine,
Full of the light,
Leaping and flashing
From morn till night!

Into the moonlight,
Whiter than snow,
Waving so flower-like
When the winds blow!

Into the starlight,
Rushing in spray,
Happy at midnight,
Happy by day;

Glad of all weathers,
Still seeming best,
Upward or downward,
Motion thy rest!

Glorious fountain!
Let my heart be
Fresh, changeful, constant,
Upward, like thee!

The Latest Theory About Plants.

Shall we ever know what we think we know, or reach a knowledge of things which no supplementary knowledge can overthrow? Only recently, for instance, the world had settled itself down comfortably in the faith that at last all the idle beliefs and foolish superstitions pertaining to the influence of plants upon human life were dissipated, and that we had reached an altitude of absolute mastership of the interesting phenomena relating to this subject. It looked to us as if in the gratification of our esthetic taste Nature had foiled indirectly for our rescue from the worst evils of unwholesome objects, and of that deterioration of the air we breathe which is inseparable from human existence under the confined conditions of in-door life. Reversing the old superstition regarding the unhealthy effects of plants in living-rooms, physicians commended them for their disinfecting qualities, and many a bedroom and school-room window is now adorned with plants in pots, which were placed there with the idea that they would compensate for defective ventilation. The facts on which these inferences were naturally and plausibly based is that plants purify the air in three different ways: by absorbing carbonic acid; by exhaling under the influence of sunlight an equivalent in oxygen; and by the production of ozone. That vegetation possesses these three functions has been demonstrated by the experiments of physiologists, chemists and meteorologists, and this would seem sufficient to prove all that has been claimed in regard to its hygienic value; but a German experimenter, Prof. von Pettenkofer, who for several years has given special attention to the subject, has recently summed up the results of his own and other investigations in a manner that must dissipate many of the illusions we have so fondly cherished. He admits that plants possess the functions attributed to them, but the next sanitary fact of these three functions he is compelled to state are none whatever. It is not meant by this that absolutely no effect is produced, but hygiene, as he says, is a science of economics, "and every science has to ask not only what exists, but how much there is and whether enough." Measured by this standard, the results of highly-developed ideas concerning the purifying influence of vegetation have proved to be absurdly exaggerated, for numerous and long-continued experiments have shown that there is no more carbonic acid in the streets of Paris or Manchester than in the air of the surrounding country, or even in far-distant mountain regions, and also that "there is no greater appreciable quantity of oxygen in a field of thick foliage than in a desert or in the open sea." This phenomenon, as exhibited in the open air, is readily accounted for by the atmospheric currents, and the constant change and movement of the air which is never absolutely still, and usually moves at the rate of three meters per second. But since every green leaf absorbs carbonic acid and gives out oxygen under the influence of sunlight an equivalent in ozone, and by the production of ozone. That vegetation possesses these three functions has been demonstrated by the experiments of physiologists, chemists and meteorologists, and this would seem sufficient to prove all that has been claimed in regard to its hygienic value; but a German experimenter, Prof. von Pettenkofer, who for several years has given special attention to the subject, has recently summed up the results of his own and other investigations in a manner that must dissipate many of the illusions we have so fondly cherished. He admits that plants possess the functions attributed to them, but the next sanitary fact of these three functions he is compelled to state are none whatever. It is not meant by this that absolutely no effect is produced, but hygiene, as he says, is a science of economics, "and every science has to ask not only what exists, but how much there is and whether enough." Measured by this standard, the results of highly-developed ideas concerning the purifying influence of vegetation have proved to be absurdly exaggerated, for numerous and long-continued experiments have shown that there is no more carbonic acid in the streets of Paris or Manchester than in the air of the surrounding country, or even in far-distant mountain regions, and also that "there is no greater appreciable quantity of oxygen in a field of thick foliage than in a desert or in the open sea." But since every green leaf absorbs carbonic acid and gives out oxygen under the influence of sunlight an equivalent in ozone, it would seem undeniable that the air of closed rooms must be materially improved by plants. Even this, however, our learned professor is not disposed to concede. "The power of thirty pots of plants would not be nearly sufficient to neutralize the carbonic acid exhaled by a single person in a given time. If children are dependent on the oxygen given off by flowers they would soon be suffocated." The explanation of this is to be found in the extremely slow processes of vegetable life as compared with those of the animal economy, and the vast extents of vegetation which are required for the existence of animals and man. The grass or hay consumed by a cow in a cow-house grows upon a piece of ground on which a thousand head of cattle could stand. How slow a process of the growth of wheat before it can be eaten as bread, which a man will eat, digest and decompose in twenty-four hours! The animal human organism consumes and decomposes food as quickly as a stove does the wood which took so many years and times longer to grow in the forest." No quantity of plants sufficient to affect appreciably the air of a given space can be brought together; for careful experiments made in the Royal Winter Garden, at Munich, showed that the proportion of carbonic acid in the air of that tightly-closed space full of vegetation was almost as high as in the open air.

What, then, is the hygienic value of plants, and gardens and flowers? We are to say, Prof. von Pettenkofer, though a man of science, and frequently the inveterate foe of sentimentalism," finds it to the æsthetic pleasure which they afford. "A cheerful and happy and contented man lives not only an easier, but on the average, a healthier life than the depressed and morose man; and anything that makes a pleasurable impression upon our minds and senses has a distinct hygienic value. Lovers of plants, therefore, are fully justified, from a practical point of view, in continuing their cultivation; for if they will not relieve the air of its surplus carbonic acid, nor materially increase our available supply of oxygen, they have a sanitary effect in the satisfaction and refined enjoyment which they afford.—Appleton's Journal.

Consecrated Looking-Glasses.

Dr. Howard Crosby makes the following sensible remarks:

The three glories of a woman—her triple crown, which makes her power more efficient than that of the Vatican, and constitutes her in her true and normal life the minister of grace and health to the race—are modesty, truth and sympathy. All three of these are tarnished by the self-decorator. For modesty, we have the brazen face with which young misses even stare unblushingly at all they meet; for truth, we have the perpetual lie of fashionable society; and for sympathy, the headlong plunge after selfish indulgence. I do not speak as a cynic, as one who would morosely deny the proper recreations and enjoyments that our natures need as they do air and food, nor do I ignore the fact that some noble spirits are faithfully resisting this spreading evil; but, with all these allowances, I see the Christian church violently invaded by this fatal iniquity; I see Christian mothers justifying it on every hand, and Christian daughters dragged into the vortex by the very hands that ought to have been thrown around them for protection; I see the influence of this self-decoration by the force of example extending itself over all classes and conditions of society, like a subtle poison eating out the life of Christianity and leaving the mere name. And, seeing this, I cannot, as a minister of Jesus Christ, keep silent without becoming a partaker of the sin. It is my duty to warn Christian women of this foe to piety, that they are more or less nursing in their hearts and in their families, and to urge them to that simplicity of apparel which is alone consistent with a Christian heart, and which will ever help them to be separated from a vain and godless world. Alas! that is the very thing that so many do not wish! They love the world, and separation from its empty shows is a sad thought to them. Is there such a soul here to-day? I say in all solemnity: Can you be a Christian? Are you bound to Jesus the Lord by the blood-bought ties of a renewed affection? Have you received the Holy Spirit, the sweet earnest of your heavenly glory? How can I believe it? How can you believe it when you acknowledge that the world's glittering vanities are your fascinators? If you realized that you belonged to Christ, that your treasures were laid up in heaven, you would emphasize your separation from the world, you would take delight in the company of the faithful, and you would most cheerfully bear whatever reproach the gay and silly might cast upon you because you shunned their unreligious adornments. You would rather suffer reproach with the people of God than enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. Now I know very well that some are ready to say: "Tooh! nonsense! This is all ranting. Can't we wear fine jewelry, and elegant head-dresses, and costly hats any more? Are we to be like Quakers? Are all the world so wrong? And do not thousands of good Christians indulge in all this?" But, dear friends, pooh-poohing and protesting and ridicule are not arguments worth a straw against a plain declaration of a divine principle. It is your duty to dress with simplicity and frugality; and you refuse that duty at your peril. The thousands of Christians whom you quote are only a thousand "yeas," and that doesn't help the matter at all. There is the word of God, the spotless truth of heaven: "Let your adorning not be the outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." Obey that command, and if it leads you to be a Quaker, be a Quaker.

But, after all, I know that the true place for reform to begin is in the heart. I know that if you draw nearer to Jesus and behold him more clearly, if you weigh your privileges in him and count the mercies of the Lord to your soul, if you think of the love of that Redeemer's heart which now yearns for you and seeks to win you closer to itself—then the looking-glasses will be gladly brought to the Lord and dedicated to his use—then the time and money and energy you have used in self-decoration and display will be spent in the maintenance of that holiness which is so acceptable to your God. Then you will have courage enough to be independent of the world's decrees, and you will find a delight in being singular where the singularity is a badge of the Lord's love.

The religion of Jesus is not one thing to the poor and another thing to the rich; it is not one thing to the fashionable and another thing to the modest. It is the same thing to all. It is self-abnegation, that Jesus may be all in all. Jesus has no greater enemy than self. The self-decorator is giving aid and comfort to that enemy. In the face of this truth, and by the love of Jesus, I beseech you, Christian women—women of the true Israel—consecrate your looking-glasses to the Lord.

Popular Exegesis.

"If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink; for thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, and the Lord shall reward thee."—Proverbs xxv, 21, 22.

The perplexity in this passage arises from the apparent contradiction between the mercifulness of the admonition to be charitable to one's enemy and the spirit of malice in which we seem advised to bestow this charity. St. Paul has quoted this beautiful proverb to enforce his preaching that evil is to be overcome of good (Romans xii, 20). He has included in the quotation: "For, in so doing, thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head." Now this really does not seem to be an amiable reason for pursuing any course of conduct. The enemy would better be hungry than be carrying coals of fire on his head. If you withhold food from your hungry enemy your conduct is merely negative, the charitable element being absent; but if you pile torturing coals on his head the malicious motive seems to be present, and your action is positively bad. Moreover, how can this consist with the admonition: "Overcome evil with good?" We know that there can be no implication of malice in the expression, because it is said that for doing this "the Lord shall reward thee." He will not show favor to wickedness. There must be some rhetorical explanation which retains the sense of the phrase and takes away its apparent harshness.

This explanation has been given: In the Holy Land coals were valuable in proportion to the great scarcity of wood. One of the most markedly neighborly acts was to give coals. A neighbor who went to borrow would take the coals home in a brazen vessel, which he would carry on his head. Whoever kept the precept of forgiveness and charity would, when his enemy came a-begging, heap the coals in the brazier on his head; and whether this produced repentance in the enemy or not, the man of charity would most surely be rewarded by the Lord.—Rev. Dr. Deems, in Sunday Magazine.

A Useful Dog.

The Paris papers make this new contribution to the repertoire of good-dog stories:

Lately a traveler passed in a carriage along the Avenue de Neuilly. The night was dark; all at once the horse stopped, and the traveler saw the animal had met an obstacle. At the same moment a man raised himself from before the horse and uttered a cry.

"Why don't you take care?" said the traveler.

"Ah," cried the man, "you would do better, instead of hallooing, to lend me your lantern."

"What for?"

"I had three hundred francs of gold on my person; my pocket has broken, and all is falling in the street. It is a commission with which my master has intrusted me. If I do not find the money I am a ruined man."

"It is not easy to find the pieces on such a night. Have you none left?"

"Yes, I have one."

"Give it to me."

The man hesitated.

"Give it to me; it will be the means of recovering the others."

The poor fellow gave him his last coin. The traveler whistled; a magnificent Danish dog began to leap around him.

"Here!" said the traveler, putting the coin to the nose of the dog. "Look!"

The intelligent creature sniffed a moment at the money, and then began to run about the road. Every minute he returned leaping, and deposited in the hand of his master a Napoleon. In about twenty minutes the whole sum was received. The poor fellow, who had got his money back, turned, full of thanks toward the traveler, who had now got into his carriage.

"Ah, you are my preserver," said he; "tell me at least your name."

"I have done nothing," said the traveler. "Your preserver is my dog; his name is Rabat-Joie." And then, whipping his horses, he disappeared in the darkness.

The Bible.

When we rise to the higher realm of thought, and ask whence we came and whither we are going; what life means; what are its relations, if any, to an after-state; what God is, and what is his character; what he requires of us as the subjects of his moral government; how he proposes to deal with us as sinners; how we are to be forgiven and stand justified in God's sight—in a word, when we seek for religious truth as the foundation on which to rest our faith, erect our hopes, and die in peace, then the Bible comes to us as the book of books, with answers to the deepest and most universal questions of the soul, and with directions and promises to pilot that soul across the sea of life, and assure its safety and good in the spirit-land. Here it is the imperial volume. Here it has no equal. The peasant and the sage here alike gather light. We do well to give prominence in our thoughts to the fact that religion—considered as a body of truths revealed and apprehended; as a body of resulting experiences felt, and, in both aspects, as a preparatory preliminary to a larger and grander scene beyond the boundaries of time, as the garb and covering of the soul for its habitation in the skies—is the sun and the center of the Bible system. It thinks not of what does are here, except in connection with what they are to be hereafter; and it thinks of the what here chiefly on account of another what there. All other ideas, in the comparison, are inferior, subordinate, but not secondary. Everything to the Bible—its history, its miracles, its prophecy, its Christ, its atonement, its pardon, its salvation, its promise, its heaven and its hell—converges at this one point. Every ray of light, in the practical effect sought, terminates here.—Dr. Samuel T. Spear, in Princeton Review.

I think, when God makes his presence felt through us, we are like the burning bush. Moses never took any heed what sort of a bush it was—he only saw the brightness of the Lord.—George Eliot.

When the Breton mariner puts to sea his prayer is: "Keep me, my God; my boat is so small, and thy ocean is so wide."

Religious Intelligence.

—A native Presbyterian church was dedicated recently in the city of Pekin, China.

—Evangelists are working among the wounded Russian soldiers at St. Petersburg, and a remarkable degree of religious interest is said to prevail.

—The London Missionary Society has over 1 000 Christian congregations in Madagascar, and 45,000 children are taught in their mission schools.

—The discussion of "Christianity and Christian Socialism," at four or five great public meetings in Berlin, became so tempestuous that recently the police have interfered and the meetings have been closed.

—Cardinal Franchi has been confirmed pontifical secretary of State; Cardinal Simeoni, prefect of propaganda; Cardinal Marachini, camerlengo, and Cardinal Bartolini, president of the Congregation of Rites.

—Minnesota has more Lutherans among its population than of any other name or confession. The number of Lutherans there is about 75 000, nearly all Germans and Scandinavians. There is but one English Lutheran church in the State.

—A great want of Southern Baptist churches appears to be preachers. It is stated that of the white Baptist churches in Kentucky only 40 have preaching every Sunday, 75 have preaching semi-monthly, and 1,142 have preaching monthly. Perhaps churches might be united in many cases to advantage; and then, by becoming circuit-riders, the preachers might serve congregations oftener than once a month.

—Kurtz's Almanac, the standard authority, reports that the Lutherans in this country gained during the past year about 5 000 members. The present statistics are given as follows: Synodical Conference, 1,071 ministers, 1 781 churches, 264,955 communicants; General Council, 274 ministers, 1 091 churches, 154,517 communicants; General Synod, 812 ministers, 1,204 churches, 116 299 communicants; General Synod (South,) 98 ministers, 167 churches, 13 277 communicants; Independent Synods, 350 ministers, 761 churches, 56 292 communicants. The grand total is 2,905 ministers, 5 001 churches, 605 340 communicants.

A NEW CHRISTIAN CHURCH.—The Rev. M. V. Rork has organized in Athens and Sherwood, Mich., a church whose only test of membership is the following: "We believe Christianity is not a belief merely, but rather a life; that the sayings of Christ are the plainest possible statement of religious truth, and constitute the only true theology; and that any person who believes and earnestly tries to live in accordance with those sayings is entitled to church privileges." Several more churches of the kind are soon to be started, and six persons have already been ordained by Mr. Rork to the work of the ministry.

MARRIAGE WITH UNBELIEVERS. Bishop Borgess, of the Roman Catholic Church in Michigan, has issued a pastoral calling attention to the alarming increase of marriages between Catholics and Protestants and infidels. He warns his people against the practice as contrary to the law of the church, and assures them that "if in violation of this command a Catholic has recourse to the magistrate or minister of the gospel for the solemnization of such marriage, in the sight of God and his church that marriage is null and void." Mr. Moody is also out upon the same subject, though from a different standpoint. In one of his closing services at Springfield, Mass., he advised young converts to eschew Free Masonry, Odd Fellowship, theaters, card-playing, horse-racing, novel-reading, and business partnerships and marriage with unbelievers, particularly the latter. He hopes that the time will come when ministers will preach against such marriages, and refuse to perform the ceremonies, as Mr. Spurgeon already does.

—It is pleasant and instructive to read the stories which the missionaries give of the way Christianity is being introduced and established in villages remote from the mission stations. The Rev. George Owen, of the London Missionary Society, writes to the Chronicle from Cuba of several instances of the spreading of the gospel to villages in the neighborhood of Pekin, by native agency. A man by the name of Wang came to the hospital to be treated for eye disease. While there he attended religious services, with the other patients; and when he left, without knowing to his eyes, he requested that an evangelist be sent to his country home. When the evangelist visited him he found that he had been talking to his neighbors about the Christian religion, and had made a deep impression upon them. Subsequently Wang was baptized, and his reception into the church has been followed by the baptism of six of the members of his household. The whole village, which had not been visited before by missionaries, has become interested in the new religion. The gospel was introduced into Kalkidang by a woman. She was the daughter of Christian parents of another village. Through her influence her husband became a Christian. Other converts have been gained also through her labors, and a Christian community is being formed. The first convert at Hsiao-chih-Fu made profession of religion, against the entreaties of his friends and the threats of his countrymen, and walked to Wu-ching, thirteen miles distant, to be baptized. Returning to his native town, he preached his religion at all times and to everybody. He lived but a few months; but as the fruit of his work a church is established there, and Mr. Owen, on a recent visit to the town, baptized eight persons. Another hopeful sign noticed by Mr. Owen is that "people are coming into the church in families." Those who are baptized bring in their relatives and friends, thus showing the sincerity of their profession.—Independent.

Our Young People.

MERRY RAIN.

BY ELETA FOUNTAIN.

Sprinkle, sprinkle, comes the rain,
Tapping on the window-pane;
Trickling, coursing,
Crowding, forcing
Tiny rills
To the dripping window-sills;

Laughing rain-drops, light and swift,
Through the air they fall and sift;
Dancing, tripping,
Bounding, skipping
Thro the street,
With their thousand merry feet.

Every blade of grass around
Is a ladder to the ground;
Clinging, scrolling,
Climbing, climbing,
On they come
With their busy zip and hum!

In the woods, by twig and spray,
To the roots they find their way;
Pushing, creeping,
Doubling, leaping,
Down they go
To the waiting life below;

Oh, the brisk and merry rain,
Bringing gladness in its train!
Falling, glancing,
Tinkling, dancing
All around—
Listen to its cheery sound!

From Our Little Friends.

GAINESVILLE, ALA., Jan. 29, 1878.

MR. EDITOR: Aaron died on Mount Hor.—Numbers xx, 27, 28. Felix trembled when Paul preached holiness to him. What family was swallowed up by the earth after a man of God had spoken to them? I will close by saying that our Sunday school is on rising ground, and we love our pastor and Sunday school superintendent very much.

Very respectfully,

JULIAN J. GILL.

PINEVILLE, LA., March 2, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: My mother takes your good paper, and I like to read it, especially the little folks' corner. There were ten plagues. The first was turning the water into blood, and the last was that all the first born of the Egyptians died. I will ask a question: How many apostles were there, and what were their names?

MISSOURI GRIFFIN.

MARCH 1, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: It was Haman and his ten sons who were hung on the gallows. Now I will ask a question: Who was the meekest man and bore his misfortunes with patience? I like to read your paper, particularly the children's column. I will close.

I remain your friend,

MARY A. NELSON.

POWELTON, FLA., Feb. 11, 1878.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: It was Melchisedek who met Abraham when he was returning from the slaughter of the kings. Bro. Dickinson is our pastor. We all like him very much. Who was David's mother?

Your little friend,

JAMES O. JENNINGS.

The Crusades.

When the professor was talking about the Seven Wonders he said that the Knights of Rhodes built a castle for themselves out of material taken from the Mausoleum at Halicarnassus, and he promised to tell you something about the crusades to which these knights, and almost all other knights, belonged.

Long, long ago Christians used to make pilgrimages to the Holy Land from many parts of Europe; but in the year 1065 the Egyptian caliphs, a caliph was so called from an Arab word meaning a successor—i. e., a successor of the great Mohammed, who was born in the year 571, were overthrown by the Turks, who treated the Christians in a most cruel manner. In those days even Christians used to think that it was all right to kill just as many as they could of the people who tried to keep them from coming to Jerusalem and other parts of Palestine, and so a great many people in Italy and France, called together by a man named Peter the Hermit, started for the Holy Land. But although he was assisted by another army, under Walter the Penniless, they didn't get anywhere near Jerusalem, because the Turks destroyed nearly all of them. Shortly after that an army of Germans shared the same fate, and then an immense company of 200 000 from England and the Continent were all destroyed, still leaving Jerusalem in the hands of the Turks.

But all these efforts, you see, were made without any organization in particular, and were not at all skillfully carried out; but they opened the way to the first real crusade, which did not start for some years after the other failures. The first crusade consisted of six splendid armies, made up of the very best knights of Europe, commanded by some of the noblest princes in the land. They fought their way successfully to Antioch, which fell into their hands after a long siege—six or seven months. What did these Christians do but massacre all the inhabitants!

That doesn't sound very well nowadays. Does it? But they thought they were doing right, and that makes all the difference in the world. They reached Jerusalem at last; but out of the 600 000 that started only 40 000 had survived.

They captured the city after a few weeks' siege (1099;) and Godfrey, a virtuous and brave man, and one of the leaders from Germany, became king.

The Christians held the city against the attacks of the Mohammedans till the year 1144, when affairs looked so bad that a second crusade was announced. Two armies, containing 1,200 000 men, under Louis the Seventh, King of France, and Conrade the Third, Emperor of Germany, set out, but on account of the treachery of a Greek emperor, Comnenus, the crusade failed.

In 1187 the Sultan of Egypt captured Jerusalem, and a third crusade was organized, and after that a fourth and a fifth and a sixth and a seventh, and in 1270 the eighth and last. Sometimes the Christians were successful, but oftentimes they were completely beaten by the Turks and their allies.

But the professor wants to tell you of the strangest thing of all. Have you ever heard of the children's crusade?

In the year 1212 an army of 30,000 French children set out for the Holy Land by the way of Marseilles. They were unarmed, and chose for their commander a boy named Stephen, who lived in Vendome. At the same time 20,000 German children crossed the Alps at Mont Cenis, and 20,000 more at another point.

Think of it! Seventy thousand children on their way to deliver Jerusalem! They seemed to think that by some miracle they were to be the means of converting all their oppressors to Christianity. This crusade was certainly one of the strangest things in history. Did the children succeed? It makes the professor feel very sad to say that they did not. Poor children! Some of them wandered back to their homes again, their little hearts discouraged and their little feet weary with marching, but nearly all of them perished—some on the way, some by drowning in the Mediterranean Sea—while all who missed a comparatively happy death were sold into slavery.

Crusade is from a word meaning "cross," and all the knights who took crosses and so pledged themselves to fight for the Holy Land. The Templars, of whom you've all heard, were so called because they had a house near the supposed site of Solomon's temple.

The order was founded for the protection of pilgrims, but they grew very rich, and very wicked, some people say, and the head Templar and many others were put to death by being burned alive.

Take it altogether, the middle ages did not offer many inducements for quiet, stay-at-home people, who wanted their dressing gowns, slippers and Christian unions after supper.—Christian Union.

Make Your Own Sunshine.

"Oh, dear, it does always rain when I want to go anywhere!" cried little Jenny Moore. "It's too bad; now I've got to stay in-doors all day, and I shall have a wretched day!"

"Perhaps so," said Uncle Jack; "but you need not have a bad day unless you choose."

"How can I help it? I wanted to go to the park and hear the band, and take Lido and play on the grass, and have a good time, and pull wild flowers, and eat sandwiches under the trees; and I'll just have to stand here and see it rain, and see the water run off the duck's back all day."

"Well, let's make a little sunshine," said Uncle Jack.

"Make sunshine!" said Jenny. "Why, how you do talk!" said she, smiling through her tears. "You haven't got a sunshine factory, have you?"

"Well, I'm going to start one right off, if you'll be my partner," replied Uncle Jack. "Now let me give you the rules for making sunshine: First, don't think of what might have been if the day had been better. Second, see how many pleasant things there are left to enjoy. And lastly, do all you can to make other people happy."

"Well, I'll try the last thing first;" and she went to work to amuse her little brother Willie, who was crying. By the time she had him riding a chair and laughing she was laughing too.

"Well," said Uncle Jack, "I see you are a good sunshine-maker, for you have got about all you or Willie can hold just now. But let's try what we can do with the second rule."

"But I haven't anything to enjoy, 'cause all my dolls are old, and my picture-books all torn, and—"

"Hold!" cried Uncle Jack. "Here's an old newspaper; now let's get some fun out of it."

"Fun out of a newspaper! Why, how you talk!"

But Uncle Jack showed her how to make a mask by cutting holes in the paper, and how to cut a whole family of paper dolls, and how to make pretty things for Willie out of the paper. Then he got out the tea-tray, and showed her how to roll a marble round it.

And so he found many a pleasant amusement; and when bed-time came she kissed Uncle Jack, and said: "Good-night dear Uncle Jack!"

"Good-night, little sunshine-maker," said Uncle Jack.

And she dreamed that night that Uncle Jack had built a great house, and put a sign over the door which read:

SUNSHINE FACTORY.

Uncle Jack and Little Jenny.

She made Uncle Jack laugh when she told him her dream; but she never forgot what you must remember: A cheerful heart makes its own sunshine.—The Little Folks.

The only man who ever suffered before Christ was that servant who had his ear cut off. But most likely in a moment afterward he had it on, and very likely it was a better ear than ever, because whatever the Lord does he does well. No man ever lost his life with him.—Moody.

Deceit and falsehood, whatever conveniences they may for a time promise or produce, are, in the sum of life, obstacles to happiness. Those who profit by the cheat distrust the deceiver; and the act by which kindness was sought puts an end to confidence.

Out of a Dark Room.

"Truly, the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun." But then the eyes must be sound and healthful, otherwise the light comes to be regarded as an enemy, and is the occasion of the most exquisite torture. Under such circumstances the deepest night is most agreeable, and darkness lies upon the sensitive organ as a soothing poultice. We observe with what pertinacity the sunbeams struggle to penetrate our seclusion; in spite of shutters and curtains, here and there a fugitive ray comes in as a painful obtruder. We pursue it as if it were a serpent rather than an angel, and seek to stifle it by deeper shade. We are conscious of an outer world of surpassing glory, whose effulgence presses and knocks for admittance; and yet our chief care and study are to suppress the faintest glintings that strive for admission. We know full well that without is the world of beauty—scenery of gorgeous coloring, and a landscape that imbibes and reflects the unceasing streams that flow from the golden sun. From this prison of gloom we can only think about it. There is neither desire nor capacity to look upon it. The one and only fear is lest any particle of this brilliancy should invade our retirement.

Perhaps this whole experience gives us some clue to the phenomena of a soul diseased—to that aversion to light, and to that shrinking from revealed truth which, under certain conditions, are exhibited by the conscience. Light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light. The most beautiful and beneficent is hated. The condition fitly represents that state of soul which belongs to the natural man. It is not utterly dark. There is some diffusion and reflection of light, in spite of the barriers to admission. We seem to see very well, and it is only when a shutter is torped that we become aware of how little we do see, and of the darkness in which we abide.

Our dark room, in comparison with the brightness of the outer world, is what our present state of being is to that which is to come. Friends coming in are to us as angel visitors, and, yet they stumble and grope as if in pitch darkness; the transition from a brighter atmosphere unfits them to move in this. We can imagine that the descent of an angel from heaven to our earth would be indeed as a leap in the dark, were it not for their self-contained illumination and for the possession of senses of supernatural power. The bar to knowledge and intercourse between the saints in glory and the good on earth may be only a wall of supernal light on the one part, and of a cloud of darkness on the other. We cannot look up through the brightness; they cannot pierce the veil that overshadows us. They are shut in to "the inheritance of the saints in light;" we, in the shadows of our mortal home, await the epiphany that shall restore us to their companionship. These goggled eyes remind us how we "see through a glass darkly!"—how subdued, ill-defined and limited is all our vision here in comparison with that day when with open face "we shall see the King in his beauty, and behold the land that is very far off."

And yet our imprisonment may be but temporary, and to a gracious end. It is for a healing purpose—that we may be prepared for the light; the eye must be restored, that it may bear the sight of the sun. God has placed us in comparatively a dark room; there is balm in Gilead and a physician there. Restored faculties is the preparation which enables us to appreciate the light we have, and prepares us for glory that is to come. It is well for a world of sinners that God has so attempered his revealments to their purblind condition, and that in mercy to human weakness only the skirts of the awful form are seen in its majestic march. He places us in the cleft of the rock—throws over us the shadow of a living as well as omnipotent hand—while his goodness passes before us. What seems to be an imprisonment and restraint, which limit our movement and vision, are in reality those contrivances and conditions that are necessary to our present healing and to our final liberation.

We observe, as the vision clarifies and the engorged eye-balls cease to throb, that the light becomes more tolerable, and we begin to feel that "Truly, the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun." We can look out somewhat now—there is no longer any attempt to crush the straggling rays. They are rather welcome, and come to us as the tokens and earnest of a blessed deliverance. Instead of striving to exclude the sunbeams, we rather pray for their ingress. Surely "the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." We are being called out of darkness into "his marvelous light." Somewhat after this manner is the progress of a soul from sin to righteousness, and from righteousness to heaven. There is a gradual hollowing of light as the spiritual cure goes on. The love is for light rather than darkness; the senses are adjusted to the ever-increasing splendors of truth, and the whole nature is brought into accord with that which is luminous with spiritual beauty. "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

There comes, as the completeness of convalescence approaches, a strong yearning after more light, and a sense of sufficiency to emerge into the glowing day—such desire as the heart sometimes feels to break through the vaulted blue, and gaze upon those splendors that suns and stars but dimly reflect. The cry of the pure heart is: "I beseech thee, show me thy glory." It longs, through a clearer medium, to look upon "the light of the world," and to gaze upon the Sun of righteousness.

In our dark room there are ministering spirits—eyes that see for us, hands that deftly anticipate the needs of the helpless. Some, if not all, in this earthly prison-house have their guardian angels—angels neither winged nor invisible, but, what is far better, incarnate in woman's form. Who can tell the unseen ministries that attend us all; and that, beyond our recognition, aid and supplement those we see; and through all and in all the remedies and cares of earthly skill and love, is it not the hand of him who gave sight to the blind that gives the efficacious and healing touch?

To General Conference.

MR. EDITOR: It seems to be a prevailing fashion now-a-days for persons who travel to let their friends and all the world besides know where they go, what they see, and how they see things. Influenced by the old adage that "one may as well be out of the world as out of the fashion," I desire to tell your readers of things seen and heard on the trip to the General Conference at Atlanta, Ga. Leaving New Orleans on Monday, April 29, at five P. M., by the New Orleans and Mobile railroad, we were soon whirling along at a rapid rate through the seemingly interminable swamps of lower Louisiana. The indomitable energy of man is seen and somewhat appreciated by the building of a railroad through such a country. We supped at Bay St. Louis, passed through Mobile at eleven P. M., and arrived at Montgomery to breakfast. We regretted having to pass through this section of country during the night, as there were points of interest along the route which we desired much to see. From Montgomery to Atlanta we had the advantage of a daylight run, and made the best possible use of it. We passed many pleasant-looking towns, and ran, most of the way, through the poorest country we have seen in many a day. The constantly recurring question was: How can such a country support such towns? It is yet unanswered. The crops along the route are not so forward as they are in Louisiana. In many places the cotton had just been planted, and the corn was just beginning to show itself above ground.

By the favor of a kind Providence, preserving our party from accident, we arrived safely in Atlanta at three P. M. on Tuesday, making the time from New Orleans in twenty-two hours. The committee of arrangements were ready to receive us and assign us to our homes for the session of the Conference. I fell to the lot of this writer to be the guest of a Presbyterian family, and so cordial was the reception and so warm-hearted the attention received that he here tenders his thanks to the committee. Tired and dusty and worn, we could not go a-sight-seeing that evening. After a night of comfortable and refreshing sleep we were ready to attend to the business which brought us so far away from home. At ten A. M. the Conference assembled in the basement room of the First church, and was called to order and organized by Bishop Pierce. Dr. Summers was elected secretary, and Dr. Haygood assistant secretary. After the organization Judge Jackson, of the Supreme bench of Georgia, made an address of welcome to the Conference, which was responded to by Bishop McTyeire in one of his most felicitous strains. The morning session was consumed in arranging the preliminaries, such as making up committees, adopting rules of order, etc. At the calling of the roll two hundred and forty-four members answered to their names, and more have since arrived.

Mr. Editor, as this is the first General Conference I have ever seen, you will pardon me if I take some liberties. There is no restraining a man when he has a new thing to study and to talk about. In the first place, I have never seen our Bishops all together before. What sharp contrasts there are in the appearances of these venerable men. If you were to pick the church over, you could scarcely find seven men so unlike each other physically, and, as I take it, so unlike each other mentally. The Bishops, to my surprise, are all whiskerless, except one, and you can easily guess who the exception is. The Conference, as a body, makes a good appearance, the laymen contributing largely to that result. I will not enter into details on this question of appearance, for if I did candor would compel me to say some things which might bring trouble. I hope to be able to give you some jottings, now and then, that may interest your readers. For the present let me close by saying that your delegation is suffering for want of a chairman. So hurry up those sore eyes and come on.

Correspondents and contributors must wait now, as our columns are likely to be filled for a month to come with the proceedings of the General Conference. We have several communications left on General Conference business, the presiding elder question, and other matters. It is now too late to insert them, even if we had room. We have also several excellent articles on hand, but they are too long. Our contributors must remember that the ADVOCATE is not a quarterly review. From three to five pages of foolscap, not written between the lines, is long enough. Articles beyond this length are liable to be excluded, because too long. Then we exclude serials, unless there are very strong reasons for their admission. Those who meditate sending a numbered series should communicate with the editor about them before sending them. We cannot give any one writer an indefinite lease of the columns of the ADVOCATE. We must know beforehand how many, and how long.

THE BISHOPS' ADDRESS.—The address of the Bishops to the General Conference is to hand, but as it fills nearly nine columns in the Daily Christian Advocate we cannot insert it in the present number. It will appear next week. It is an elaborate and exhaustive presentation of all the questions of connectional interest, and will well repay perusal.

The communication of a much-respected brother, concerning the duty of the trustees of the Seashore camp ground to make provision for the gratuitous entertainment of the wives and widows of traveling preachers, has been received and turned over to the president of the board.

For the last two weeks a fine meeting has been in progress at the Felicity Street church, of this city, under the conduct of the pastor, Rev. Dr. Walker. Up to Sunday night, May 5, there had been twenty-five conversions. The meeting still continues with unabated interest.

The editor of this paper, after a week's detention by personal affliction, left for Atlanta on Monday evening last. If sight permits, he expects to furnish editorial correspondence from week to week until adjournment.
